PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1940

The House met at 11 a. m. and was called to order by the Speaker.

Rev. O. A. Geiseman, S. T. D., pastor, Grace Lutheran Church, River Forest, Ill., offered the following prayer:

Dear Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the blessing which Thou has bestowed upon us as individuals and as a people.

We pray Thee, forgive us all our sins and every abuse of Thy generous gifts.

We beg Thee preserve unto us the blessings of peace; guard us against everything which would destroy our liberty or our appreciation of the dignity of the humblest individual.

Give to each of us the moral and spiritual strength to live godly lives so that our Nation's weal may rest upon the firm foundation of sound morality.

Bless the leaders in the various branches of our Government with such faith, wisdom, courage, integrity, and love that our Nation may increasingly become a blessing with the peoples of the earth. Let our national symbol be a sign of peace, justice, and love to men everywhere. Let, O Lord, Thy benedictions rest upon this legislative body, and its individual Members, so that all which is here said and done may contribute to the upbuilding of our land to the increase of human happiness. Hear us for Jesus' sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 4272. An act to amend the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled "An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes," as amended.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, on February 14, 1940, I introduced H. R. 8549. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that bill, which is now in the Committee on Indian Affairs, but on which no action has been taken.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter that I have written Attorney General Jackson giving Harry Bridges' record on perjury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

HARRY R. BRIDGES

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I have here today's paper, in which appears a quotation from Mr. Wallace as follows:

"G. O. P. obstructs defense plan," Wallace says.

I have just had inserted in the RECORD Harry Bridges' record of perjury. I might ask Mr. Wallace who it is that protects Mr. Bridges. I might ask Mr. Wallace if he knows that Mr. Bridges is today trying to organize all the aircraft industry in the United States in order that he may stop all this industry when he sees fit. I might ask Mr. Wallace what the Attorney General is going to do with Mr. Bridges under these conditions.

Mr. Wallace is constantly making these statements about the G. O. P. stopping defense plans. I ask him, How about these subversive influences, such as Harry Renton Bridges? [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short pertinent statement on the third term by one of our noted American authors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous-consent requests, one to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short excerpt from an article by Lt. Col. A. H. Lane, and the second request is to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short excerpt from the Alien Menace.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Members of the House are interested or not, but I think they should be informed that last night during the closing moments of the session of the House, an amendment was adopted which takes out of the hands of the Department of Justice the task of making uniform determination as to the good faith of conscientious objectors and puts it back into the hands of each local board where, it would seem to me, there is likely to be a great deal of difference in this determination. One board may be lenient, another board may not be of any inclination to consider conscientious objectors at all, and so on. It seems to me that the terms of the bill as originally drawn were very good on this point and should have remained. The Department of Justice could have made fair and uniform decisions all around. I do not believe that more than 10 Members of the House know what happened last night, but I think they ought to know. In my opinion, a mistake was made. The Senate bill, as a matter of fact, is in the same language as the original House bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, in the Committee of the Whole House today I desire to quote from certain documents, and I ask unanimous consent to include them in my remarks, which permission I cannot get in the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate therein an article by Mr. Willis A. Overholser, of Libertyville, Ill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Washington Post of today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I am glad the House is taking some time to consider this bill, because I feel that the Members will realize the mistake they made in the Committee of the Whole in adopting the Fish amendment.

Let me read in part this editorial from the Washington Post of today:

A POLITICAL TRICK

Representative FISH'S amendment would write one word in large letters across the military-training bill. That word is "politics."

Enactment of this amendment would be inevitably regarded as a cheap political trick. Does the House want the country to understand that it is afraid to take a stand for effective national defense until the campaigns are over? If not, it will hasten to reverse this thoughtless vote and send the military-training bill to the President.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have not said much on the bill now pending, but when any Member of the House gets up here and quotes an editorial and says that because we want to give the people of this country 60 days to decide whether they want to join this Army of ours, it is a political trick, I say it is pure bunk—I cannot find words, and I dare not say the words here that will explain my feeling against such a ridiculous statement as that. I voted for that amendment, and I tell you that anybody who says I did it because I am afraid of the vote that is coming in November just does not have any sense. I try to do the right and honest thing, and I do not do it in fear of votes. One must vote his conscience and conviction; and if the constituents do not like it, you will hear from them.

No newspaper writer or Member of Congress can judge the motives of all the Members. It is not fair, it is not just, and it probably is not honest. Anyone who comes in the House of Representatives and says that it is politics just does not have any sense; that is all there is to it, because the Republicans on this side of the House, did not vote for that amendment because they are afraid to assert what they think is right. They vote their convictions; they are not being driven to support a draft bill in peacetime, and they are not "rubber stamps" for a President nor for a third-term candidate for President. I am sure if you give the people of this country fair pay and the opportunity to get military training for 1 year, you will get good men, and plenty of them—men who will do honor to themselves and to their country. We will also probably save this country from being a militaristic Nation. We may turn down the three-term candidate for President, get him out of office before he takes the country over as a dictator. This is the most important thing for Americans to keep before them at this time. Americans, before it is too late, I warn you—stop the third term—stop the dictator. It is he only salvation for our Constitution, for our people, and for the country we Americans love and want to keep as it has been the past 150 years. [Applause.]

IMPORTATION OF MEAT FROM THE ARGENTINE

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I notice in the Washington Post this morning that the storm over the importation of Argentine meat into this country is revived. It is reported that a representative of the Argentine used these words:

"I am going to be indiscreet," said Melo. "Mr. Roosevelt told me that the present hour of political struggle is not propitious to raise this issue because some western Senators are possibly more inclined to listen to the aspirations of their voters than to the facts of the case as explained by the voters."

May I say to the Members of the House that I do not believe the President of the United States ever uttered those words or any part of them, either directly or indirectly, and never will I believe that he uttered those words unless he admits that he said them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am cognizant of the article the gentleman is quoting, and also the story appearing in the New York Times this morning as coming from South America. I was called from Hyde Park this morning by Mr. Steve Early, who said he was speaking for the President of the United States, and that if I desired, I could quote his statement as the words of the President about the sanitary treaty now pending in the Senate. Mr. Melo had lunch with the President some time ago and discussed this treaty. He now quotes the President as saying that the treaty would in all probability pass the Senate. I am authorized by the President to say that he did not say any such thing to this representative from South America but that he did tell him there was no chance on earth for such a treaty to pass the United States Senate. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not have the advantage that our distinguished and beloved majority leader has in that I have not had an opportunity to talk with the President, and do not know whether these words he is purported to have said are true. Like Will Rogers, "All I know is what I read in the papers." However, we do know that secret understandings and agreements have been made, and things have been done within the last week that the Congress of the United States by law has said should not be done. I am referring to the transfer of the 50 destroyers. I do not happen to be a lawyer, and I do not know the law as do you, but I remember very distinctly that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs stood right there on that very spot less than a month ago and said no further transfers would be made. In view of that statement, and because of the fear that other transfers may be made, this Congress passed a law saying that no vessels should be sold or transferred. [Applause.] The President ignored the law and flouted the will of Congress.

In a conversation at Hyde Park a few weeks ago with Dr. Leopoldo Melo, chairman of the Argentine delegation to the Pan American conference in Habana, President Roosevelt, according to Dr. Melo, is reported as saying that after the election—meaning, of course, after he had become even more firmly established—a sanitary convention now pigeonholed in the Senate would be approved which would permit the importation of fresh meats from the Argentine.

The President assured Dr. Melo that he would do all he could personally to persuade the Senate to approve the convention.

At the present time there is an embargo against every country—not just the Argentine—that prevents the importation of live or fresh meat where foot-and-mouth disease exists.

The sanitary convention referred to above would modify this embargo so far as the Argentine is concerned. And by so doing expose every cloven-footed animal, both domestic and wild, in this country to this disease, the most deadly and revolting known to animals.

Every section of the Argentine is infected with foot-and-mouth disease, so just as sure as this embargo is raised, foot-and-mouth disease will again ravage the herds of this country.

Our President has promised to do what the representatives of the people have consistently refused to do.

Our President has made another secret agreement with a foreign country which, if carried out, will certainly cost the livestock producers of this country millions of dollars.

The gentleman from Texas states that the President denies ever having said what Dr. Melo reports him as saying. No one doubts the word of the gentleman from Texas. The fact remains, however, that these rumors of secret agreements made and denied are occurring with increasing frequency. Where there is so much smoke there is bound to be some fire.

One recalls that in 1938 Dictator Batista visited President Roosevelt, was received royally, entertained lavishly, and left all smiles and friendly. That is as it should be.

Once home, he told his people with great joy how President Roosevelt had promised to reduce the tariff on Cuban sugar from 90 cents to 75 cents.

The President immediately denied ever having made any such promise.

We wonder, and subsequent events increase our wonder to amazement.

SHENANIGANS IN OHIO

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, politics has always made strange bedfellows, but strange is not the word for what is happening these days. Out in Ohio a few years ago the Democratic Governor of the State was threatening to throw New Dealer Harry Hopkins into jail if he showed up to make a speech. A few months later that same Governor was all but thrown out of the Democratic Party by the New Deal. When he was licked for renomination by his own party in 1938 new dealers in Washington were tickled silly.

Well, today, that same ex-Governor is running against Republican Gov. John W. Bricker in Ohio. And just to help his cause along somebody in Washington is furnishing this discredited candidate with a complete list of old-age pensioners for political purposes. Every Ohio man and woman who receives public assistance from old-age-pension funds is getting a flood of mail from the Democratic Party; but here is the irony of it: All this stuff is being done to elect a Democratic Governor whose handling of old-age-pension funds smelled so high that it even reached Washington. This same fellow misused his office so badly in the handling of these funds that $1,300,000 in United States pension money was withheld from Ohio because of what he had done.

But apparently all is being forgiven today. You bet it is, because the New Deal Party here in Washington knows that it is going to take the biggest licking it has ever taken out in the Buckeye State. You can be sure that the folks on old-age pensions in Ohio have not forgotten the mess they had before Governor Bricker came along. Their pensions were late, they had a peculiar habit of jumping just before elections, and the folks who worked in the old age pension offices never knew a day of peace. Their jobs were on the block.

It is all part of one pattern. The holy New Deal is getting itself awful muddy playing around with Kelly, Nash, and Hague. It is going to be still dirtier when it pals up with the same Democrats they threw out a few years ago. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 209]

Arnold	Darrow	McGranery	Sweeney
Bradley, Pa.	Dempsey	McLeod	Wallgren
Brewster	Dies	Murdock, Utah	White, Idaho
Buck	Fernandez	O'Day
Caldwell	Fish	Schaefer, Ill.
Chapman	Garrett	Smith, Va.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 407 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion by Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a table showing the relative rate of enlistment and income per capita.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING AND SERVICE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10132) to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10132) with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. All persons called, ordered, or inducted into the land and naval forces of the United States pursuant to this act shall be subject to the laws and regulations concerning that branch of the land and naval forces to which they are assigned from the date they are required by the terms of such call, order, or induction to obey the same.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken this time to point out a fact that seemed to me important with regard to the adoption of the Fish amendment. The Washington and other papers have criticized Congress unfairly for the passing of the Fish amendment on the ground that it would cause delay in the securing of adequate men for the Army. I think that is the argument which has been and is being advanced against the Fish amendment in an attempt to have the House reverse itself on a roll-call vote.

I want to call attention to the fact that the entire argument against the Fish amendment by the introducer of the Burke-Wadsworth bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was directed not to the argument that it would or might delay action but was directed to the argument that it would bring men into the Army faster than the Army could take care of them.

I call attention to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] on page 11588 of the RECORD of September 5:

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to the situation we would be up against if this amendment should be adopted.

Sixty days from the passage of this bill will bring us to about the middle of November. It is proposed to enlist 400,000 men by that time. If you do it and induct these volunteers into service, there will not be sufficient clothing or housing. There will not be cantonments. There will not be tentage.

It is impossible for the Department to handle any such number.

Now, on the one hand the opponents of the Fish amendment argue that it will delay the securing of the men, while on the other hand the entire argument of the introducer of the bill was directed to the fact that it would bring men into the Army faster than they could handle them.

If the Fish amendment will give us more men than the Army can handle, then the volunteer system must be a success and conscription will be unnecessary. The fact is that the Army can accept volunteers as fast as they sign up and then call them to the colors as they need them and as fast as they can house, train, and clothe them.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. No bounty shall be paid to induce any person to enlist in or be inducted into the land and naval forces of the United States: Provided, That the clothing or enlistment allowances authorized by law shall not be regarded as bounties within the meaning of this section. No person liable to service in such forces shall be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service; nor shall any substitute as such be received, enlisted, enrolled, or inducted into the land and naval forces of the United States; and no person liable to service in such forces shall be permitted to escape such service or be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his term of service by the payment of money or any other valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from service in the land and naval forces or liability thereto.

SEC. 9. (a) The benefits of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, approved March 8, 1918, are hereby extended to all persons inducted into the land and naval forces pursuant to this act, and except as hereinafter provided, the provisions of such act of March 18, 1918, shall be effective for such purposes.

(b) For the purposes of this section—

(1) the following provisions of such act of March 8, 1918, shall be inoperative: Section 100; and paragraphs (1), (2), and (5) of section 101; article 4; article 5; paragraph (2) of section 601; and section 603;

(2) the term "persons in military service," when used in such act, shall be deemed to include persons inducted into the land or naval forces pursuant to this act;

(3) the term "period of military service," when used in such act, when applicable with respect to any person inducted into the land or naval forces pursuant to this act, shall be deemed to mean the period beginning with the date on which such person is so inducted and ending with date of his discharge.

(c) Any member of any Reserve component of the land or naval forces who is on active duty, and any person inducted into the land or naval forces under this act who, in the judgment of those in authority over him, satisfactorily completes the service required under this act, shall be entitled to a certificate to that effect upon the completion of such service, which shall include a record of any special proficiency or merit attained.

(d) In the case of any such person who has left or leaves a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer and who (1) receives such certificate, (2) is still qualified to perform the duties of such position, and (3) makes application for reemployment within 40 days after he is relieved from such service—

(A) if such position was in the employ of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, such person shall be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay;

(B) if such position was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so;

(C) if such position was in the employ of any State or political subdivision thereof it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person should be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay.

(e) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (A) or (B) of subsection (d) shall be so restored without loss of seniority, insurance participation or benefits, or other benefits, and such person shall not be discharged from such position without cause within 1 year after such restoration.

(f) In case any private employer fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of subsection (d) or subsection (e), the district court of the United States for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business shall have power, upon the filing of a motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading by the person entitled to the benefits of such provisions, to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions. The court shall order a speedy hearing in any such case and shall advance it on the calendar. Upon application to the United States district attorney for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business, by any person claiming to be entitled to the benefits of such provisions, such United States district attorney, if reasonably satisfied that the person so applying is entitled to such benefits, shall appear and act as attorney for such person in the amicable adjustment of the claim or in the filing of any motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading and the prosecution thereof to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions: Provided, That no fees or court costs shall be taxed against the person so applying for such benefits.

(g) The Director of Selective Service herein provided for shall establish a Personnel Division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of persons who have satisfactorily completed their service under this act, and to aid such persons in finding employment elsewhere if such replacement in their former positions is impossible or unreasonable.

(h) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this act shall, during the period of such training and service, be permitted to vote in any general, special, or primary election occurring in the State of which he is a resident, if under the laws of such State he is entitled to vote in such election even though he is outside of such State at the time of such election.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARNESS: On page 27, following line 14, add a new paragraph to be known as section (4) of subsection (b) of section 9:

"(4) Article III of the act of March 8, 1918, chapter 20, United States Statutes at Large, entitled 'Rent, Installment Contracts, Mortgages,' is amended by the addition of a new section to be known as section 303, as follows:

"'SEC. 303. Nothing contained in section 301 shall prevent the termination or cancelation of contracts by mutual agreement of the parties thereto, or their assignees, executed in writing, nor the repossession of property pursuant to such agreement.'"

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the committee has any objection to that amendment, but I would like to have a brief explanation of the gentleman's understanding of it. As far as I am concerned, I understand the purpose of it is this, that due to the very large amount of installment buying throughout the country of automobiles, refrigerators, household goods, and one thing and another, the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] would simply provide that the seller and the purchaser, which might in some instances be one of these inductees, might make any arrangement they wanted to make about the unpaid installment or the equity of the man in the article purchased?

Mr. HARNESS. That is exactly what this amendment proposes to do, as section 301 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Act as it exists today does not specifically give the buyer and the seller the right to agree as to repossession of the property. This merely clarifies that section and gives the purchaser and the buyer the right to make any agreement that they see fit concerning the disposition of the property.

Mr. MAY. We have no objection to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. That in no way provides for any moratorium on these installment payments?

Mr. HARNESS. The act itself provides for a moratorium. This merely clarifies one section of the Moratorium Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 28, line 13, after the word "impossible," strike out "or unreasonable."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to go as far as Congress can go in guaranteeing the jobs of the persons who are drafted into service. When a man comes back to get the job that he had at the time he was inducted into service, as a rule, somebody else has got the place. In subdivision (a) of this paragraph you will find that it is made obligatory on the part of the Government to reemploy the draftee upon his return, but in subdivision (b) the language is used that he will be reemployed unless it is unreasonable to do so.

Now, let us get down to cases. Suppose I am employing a man who has been inducted into service and he returns and I say to him, "Now, as a matter of fact, I have another man who is taking your place. He has a family. It will upset the economy of my plan if I reemploy you and let him go. He has got to have a job the same as you have." Therefore I am let out under the provision of subdivision (b) because it would be unreasonable, as I would contend, for me to let that man go and employ the man who had been drafted. As a matter of fact, what I want to do is to shut out, if I possibly can, the right that an employer has, unless it is impossible for him to employ a man—to shut it out and guarantee this man his job if it is possible to do so. It would be impossible to do that in the event I had gone into bankruptcy or in the event the employer had died or gone out of business. Then it would be impossible. We cannot cover a case of that kind, but we can cover a case where an employer is doing business, where he is engaged in business and has to employ somebody else in place of the man who is drafted.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Simply to clarify the meaning of your amendment, suppose a businessman has a reduction in business, in distribution or sale, and he cannot afford to reemploy the man, what would be the effect of your amendment then?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The effect of my amendment would compel him to reemploy that man, and that is is what he should do. We are taking these men out of their work. We are putting them into the Army at $30 a month. We ought to go the limit in trying to guarantee their jobs when they come back.

Mr. CELLER. I agree with you. I am simply trying to get your point of view.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We have a judicial interpretation as to what the courts say is "unreasonable." They say what is unreasonable is what reasonable men will do or not do under some circumstances.

Under the phrase "or unreasonable," if the employer has hired a person instead of a draftee, and, say, he in turn had other employees under him and had a family, bought a home, and incurred other obligations, then it could be in such a case said to be unreasonable to reemploy the soldier—and turn the other man out. Hence these words should go out. There is an "out" in this bill as written to save the employer from reemploying the man when he comes back to work.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Suppose a man came back maimed or insane, how could an employer reemploy him in his former position?

Mr. O'CONNOR. In the first place he would not be asking for it if he were maimed. If he were insane he would have a guardian appointed.

Mr. DONDERO. Is not that the purpose of placing the word "unreasonable" in the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No. The term "unreasonable" applies to the conduct of the employer, not the man drafted. Now, get this, under subsection (a) the Government is required to hire him, but if he is employed by a private employer he does not have to employ him if it is unreasonable to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 29, line 3, after the word "business", insert "and the courts of the several States of unlimited jurisdiction."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am going to appeal to the lawyers in this House. This is a vital amendment. When the soldier goes back to secure reemployment, to secure his job, under the provisions of this bill he must go into the Federal court if his employer refuses to employ him. In my part of the country there are not Federal courts in every county; in some instances it is a long way to the Federal court. Let me call attention to another thing which is an absolute fact: The average person has a fear of a Federal judge that he has not of a district judge; in other words, he would sooner go to his district judge than to a Federal judge for relief. This amendment is offered simply for the purpose of giving to the courts of the several States concurrent jurisdiction over the rights the draftee, when and if he has to go to court to enforce his rights.

The gentleman from Kentucky, I know, is a very able lawyer, and I think he should agree to this amendment. I call attention in this connection to the fact that under the Federal Employers' Liability Act passed by Congress in 1910 the Federal court was given concurrent jurisdiction with the State courts. That was an act of Congress to enforce the rights of an injured employee as a result of negligence of railway corporations engaged in interstate commerce. Every court in the United States has upheld the constitutionality of that law. Why was it passed? It was to give a cause of action to the injured employee so that he could go into the court that was closest to enforce his rights. You will find that in the Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large at page 291. My amendment is the identical language taken from the act of Congress passed in 1910.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am very much interested in what the gentleman has to say, and I believe there is a great deal of merit in it. There is a further provision in this section providing that the United States district attorney shall act as attorney for the employee. Would the gentleman have the United States district attorney go into the local court?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I would do that for this reason——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. If the gentleman will permit, would he not further provide that the local State attorney might be selected to represent the employee in the event the employeee should elect to proceed in the State rather than the Federal court?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No. The Congress of the United States has no authority to require a State county attorney to do anything.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I realize that. It would be purely directory, just as the provision with respect to the State court would be directory.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We should give the State court concurrent jurisdiction, which is jurisdiction for all purposes in causes of action arising under this act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I agree. I think the gentleman has a very strong point, for if the law is enacted as it now stands these young men in various parts of the various States will have to go to the United States district court for relief, and this might put them to considerable inconvenience and expense.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And they may find that point is far removed from the place where they live.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is right.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. At the time the National Guard legislation was being considered on the floor of this House, I offered a similar amendment to that bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Which the committee adopted and it was carried through. If the gentleman's amendment is agreed to there will be a difference in the way we treat the National Guard boys and the ones drafted under this act.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is true, however, these young men are being inducted by draft, and, in addition, there was nothing to prevent the same provision being written in the other bill. It should have been.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman that there is something in this amendment for the following reason: Take his own State, there are only two Federal judges. Maybe one judge is sick or on vacation. A man might have to travel five or six hundred miles to get redress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. In the State of Kansas there is only one Federal judge. It would be rather impossible or most difficult for a man seeking relief to go that distance to a Federal judge. Many States only have one Federal judge. So there is something to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This language I have taken word for word from the Federal Employers' Liability Act, an act of Congress approved April 5, 1910, and it states as follows:

> The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this act shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several States, and no case rising under this act, brought in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be removed to any court of the United States.

This act has been approved by every Federal court and by the Supreme Court of the United States. It was attacked by various railroads throughout the United States, and has held water. Give the draftee, give the man you are going to take out of his job, the same right that the Congress of the United States gave to injured employees of interstate-commerce railroads as the result of the negligent acts of railroads. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. Chairman, may I begin my statement by saying that there is no one more anxious to preserve every legal right of these people who are to be inducted under this act than I am. The committee gave careful and painstaking study to this provision and we wrote into the National Guard bill a provision which required the United States district attorney in each district to appear and represent any one of these men who have difficulty with their employer. May I say that if the State courts have concurrent jurisdiction on that question, we will have district attorneys, probably busy men, nearly always busy men, being brought from one court to another. The State court will be in session somewhere at the same time the Federal court is in session. If you scatter this jurisdiction, or if you give it to a number of courts, you will have confusion and lack of ability on the part of the men whom we have said should represent these individuals to be present to represent them.

I realize that in some of the far Western States, where the population is rather sparse, as, for instance, the gentleman's State, which does not rank with Pennsylvania or New York, there will be some inconvenience perhaps to individuals; but we have to remember that under this bill the quotas are based on the number of men in the Army from each State and due to the small population of the State of Montana there would only be a few men from that State, perhaps, as compared with some of the other States that have large quotas. We feel this ought to be centralized in the Federal courts where the district attorney is always present.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. Under this amendment, would it not be just the same for the district attorney to go into local court as if he had to go to the Federal courts? This might take him four or five hundred miles from his home. But we are inducting these men into the service, and should we not consider him first, and the fact that the district attorney is busy as a secondary proposition?

Mr. MAY. No. I am trying to guard against his being called to some court without his lawyer being present. If you give jurisdiction to the State courts and induct a dozen, two dozen, or thirty-six or forty men into the service, the district attorney might be in a State court in the west end of my State and another one in the east end and another one somewhere else, whereas, if this jurisdiction is lodged in the Federal courts only, their sessions are regular and the district attorney can be there at all times. I am doing this in the interest of the enrollee.

Mr. SACKS. Except I would like to point out, I would not care how busy he was or how many he had to attend. I think the important thing here is taking care of those that we are taking away from their regular employment.

Mr. MAY. That is what we are trying to do. We are not looking after the employer. We are looking after the enrollee—the man that we impose the burden on.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment. I am a country lawyer and I know what it means to go into the Federal courts. I have been in all of them, from the justice of the peace up to the Supreme Court mausoleum over here. I have had cases also in the Federal courts of my State. I remember one distinctly where we had to go a great distance and spend 2 or 3 days in a Federal court in order to protect a little girl from a high school who had played a few strains of music at a public meeting. The copyright laws were invoked by a combination of high big-wigs. They dragged her from the high school to the Federal court, and this alone was a hardship.

We had to go 75 miles away to defend the little girl for having committed the atrocious crime of playing a few strains of music at a public meeting.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I know there is no difference between the gentleman and myself on the question of whom we are trying to protect. We are trying to protect the man who is to be conscripted under this legislation. We have provided in the National Guard bill that the jurisdiction shall be in the Federal court. Suppose we provide in this bill that it shall be in both the Federal and the State courts, then we have done something for these enrollees that we have failed and refused to do for the National Guard. The National Guard Act has been passed and approved by the President.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I will say, upon that question, that there is no reason to deny a just thing to the enrollees under this bill because somebody else has not yet received that just thing. I know what it means to go away to a Federal court and stay 2 or 3 days, with a poor client, and pay hotel bills and wait for the Federal court to assign your case and then wait for the judge to listen to your case. That alone makes it important that you should not go into the Federal court in a hundred places in this country, including the northern district of Iowa. I do not say that the judges there are not fair and honest, but I do say you cannot get the business done. You will have to go to the Federal court two or three times during two or three terms of that court in order to get a hearing.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The bill we passed for the National Guard provides that no cost or fees of any kind shall be paid by the guardsman. We cannot say to the State courts that the guardsman shall not pay these costs, because we cannot control that matter. If it is left in the courts of the United States, we can control it.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I believe the gentleman is in error. Here is the Federal law. We simply give jurisdiction to a State court to do what? To put into force that law, and the State court has the right to put into force this law and to take it just exactly as it finds it and enforce it, with all of its provisions, just exactly as is now done in a score of other Federal statutes.

Remember, if you want to give these boys, when they come back, any rights at all, do not put them to such an unjust expense and such an unjust waste of time in order to be heard in a Federal court. I had a case in the Federal court at one time that continued for 2½ years. They did not have the right to have that case take that long. There should have been some way of getting it up sooner. But please do not put this hardship upon the boys when they come back. Do not give them a stone when promising them bread. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, unlike my friend from Iowa who has just preceded me, I have never tried any cases over here at this mausoleum to which he refers, meaning the Supreme Court, but I have messed around a little bit in the State and Federal courts. It just strikes me as a matter of practical judgment that this amendment ought not to be adopted. Let me recall to your mind that the Senate bill came to us with the provision that the National Labor Relations Board was to take care of all these boys and see to it that they got their jobs back. Frankly, the principle involved in that was sound. There was so much opposition on both sides of the House to the personnel of the National Labor Relations Board that the Members were not willing to trust them with it.

This Committee has given very patient consideration to this question, and heaven knows if we cannot have confidence in the Federal courts of this country as to their being both honest and impartial, I do not know just whom you could trust.

Bear this in mind, too. I do not profess to be a constitutional lawyer, but I cannot figure out from my limited experience just how we could confer jurisdiction on State courts to try this kind of matter and direct that there shall be no costs or anything like that when the State officials are going to administer it. And I do not believe you can place a United States district attorney in charge of the prosecution of cases in State courts.

Let me call your attention to another feature. You direct in this bill—and the gentleman from Montana seems perfectly agreeable to leaving it in there—that the United States district attorneys shall go into these countless State courts in an effort to enforce this law. You have another situation, too, where you ought to be practical. We have already passed the National Guard bill, and you put this same provision in that law. It is like the matter I referred to yesterday; you will have the National Guard boys going into the Federal courts for redress. At least they will be fair and they will not be subject to the charge of local political influences. I do not reflect upon the State courts because I have had lots of dealings with them and I respect them, but at the same time I believe there are some State judges who are more subject to local and political influence than Federal judges. You have to lodge this authority somewhere, and there ought to be uniformity in a matter of this importance.

I live in the desert West. I have followed the Federal courts around a little bit, and it is 250 or 300 miles from my city to the next nearest Federal court. But do not forget when you talk about these desert sections out in my part of the country, or the sections in Wyoming, Nebraska, Iowa, and whatnot, that there are several divisions of the Federal court in every district. Frankly, this section is, in my judgment, not much more than a gesture. It ought to have a fine effect, because public sentiment and the attitude of the neighbors will make it hard on any unfair employer.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman will recall that at the time the National Guard bill was on the floor this amendment was offered. I offered it myself.

Mr. THOMASON. I remember it.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The very question we are discussing here was raised then, and it was overwhelmingly defeated; in fact, it was not seriously considered by the House. I agree with the gentleman that it is a very dangerous step to take to impose in this bill a situation different than we have provided for the National Guard, and provide that these men may also go into the State courts to enforce their rights.

Mr. THOMASON. Not only is it a different situation, but can you not visualize the situation that would arise by compelling a United States district attorney to go into every State and county court throughout this land, courts that are elected by the people of the respective communities, some Democrats, some Republicans, but all subject to some sort of local influence?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman will recall that we discussed the matter of not humiliating these men by having to sue in pauperis.

Mr. THOMASON. That is true.

Mr. MAY. And we could not prevent that if it had to be done in the State courts.

Mr. THOMASON. They do not even have to pay a cent of court costs where they go into Uncle Sam's court. This is Uncle Sam's law, this is Uncle Sam who is drafting these men, and he ought to be fair enough to see that the law is fairly enforced. After all, a lot of this section is just a gesture, but this amendment ought to be defeated. I do not know how you can reach it with certainty unless you declare the failure to reemploy a trainee an unfair labor practice.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time mainly to inquire of the committee with reference to this section. I think one of the important features is to determine what we are arriving at in this section rather than what court we put it in. I would like to know what kind of action this is. It sounds like an action for specific performance, but, of course, specific performance is a real action. Is there any such action as this known to the law where the court can specifically require somebody to do something without a basic cause of action? What is the basis of the legal action, damages, tort, or equity?

Mr. MAY. The Congress is undertaking to say that a man, when he is drafted into the Federal service and had a certain status as an employee of some corporation——

Mr. DISNEY. I understand that.

Mr. MAY. And he has expressed a desire to have himself reinstated in his job, I imagine when he gets back and goes to his employer and states, "I am back home and I want my job back," the employer will say, "Conditions have changed and we cannot reemploy you."

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman is not talking to the point.

Mr. MAY. Then the only thing he will have to do is to go into the court or file a petition and ask the court to determine his rights and determine whether the employer shall restore him to his job.

Mr. DISNEY. Let me ask you the question now, what kind of action is this?

Mr. MAY. It would be an action in equity and it would go to the court and not to the jury and the court would consider all the facts. It is not for specific performance of a contract.

Mr. DISNEY. Of course not. Now, are you going to enforce this by proceedings in contempt of court?

Mr. MAY. That will be left to the court and the district attorney to figure out under the procedure in the different States and, particularly, in the Federal court where it is always the same.

Mr. DISNEY. Does not an injunction action, as this would appear to be, have to have some basis in tort or contract or damages or equity—a basic cause of action?

Mr. MAY. The right to the injunction is based upon the allegation by the plaintiff that he has no adequate remedy at law, and would therefore suffer great and irreparable injury, and I think, possibly, it would be an injunction proceeding.

Mr. DISNEY. Very possibly.

Mr. MAY. It would be a mandatory injunction to compel the employer to restore him in his job. In some States called a mandamus proceeding.

Mr. DISNEY. I did not want this provision to go by without at least some question being raised about this very unusual type of action that would be called for here. I do not know what we can do about it.

Mr. MAY. It is not the type of injunction, if the gentleman will pardon me, that is important; it is the right or the rights of the individual that is important.

Mr. DISNEY. I know that the rights of the individual are paramount, but it ought to be done in a legal way if it is capable of being done at all. If it is not capable of being done, then we ought to be courageous enough to say that we cannot do it. If there is no basic cause of action in tort, contract, or equity, upon what will injunction, and consequent contempt proceedings, be based?

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield.

Mr. COX. The gentleman's question very clearly demonstrates how absurd and foolish the whole provision is.

Mr. MAY. May I clarify that statement by saying——

Mr. DISNEY. Wait a moment, I have the time.

Mr. MAY. Every good lawyer knows that it is an injunction procedure——

Mr. COX. The gentleman knows he cannot enforce any such provision by law.

Mr. DISNEY. It seems to me the gentlemen who are lawyers in this body ought to consider this section seriously and not be absurd about it, even though the objective is of the very highest. The boys ought to have their jobs back when they return from service. However, if it cannot be properly or legally done, then let us say so and abandon it.

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman is exactly right, because, after all, this probably does not amount to any more than a statement of policy or a gesture.

Mr. DISNEY. A statement of policy only; yes. But to pretend to put it into enforcible law, knowing it cannot be done, or is not being done by this provision, does not reflect credit on this body.

Mr. THOMASON. But to put it in the hands of the local court would not make very much difference, and, as I view it, unless you put it under the National Labor Relations Board, you cannot enforce this statute except by some means or manner of contempt proceedings.

Mr. DISNEY. I would not want it put under the National Labor Relations Board under any circumstances.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN and Mr. LEAVY reserved the right to object.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss the specific amendment before the Committee at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely extends the provision of the act so as to grant the employee, for whose benefit the act is being enacted, the right to go into a State court as well as into the Federal court.

There has been some discussion in the colloquy which just preceded my remarks as to the advisability of this whole section. We are discussing the amendment and not the section. Let us see what the amendment does. The section provides as follows:

(f) In case any private employer fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of subsection (d) or subsection (e), the district court of the United States for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business shall have power, upon the filing of a motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading by the person entitled to the benefits of such provisions, to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions. The court shall order a speedy hearing in any such case and shall advance it on the calendar. Upon application to the United States district attorney for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business, by any person claiming to be entitled to the benefits of such provisions, such United States district attorney, if reasonably satisfied that the person so applying is entitled to such benefits, shall appear and act as attorney for such person in the amicable adjustment of the claim or in the filing of any motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading, and the prosecution thereof to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions: Provided, That no fees or court costs shall be taxed against the person so applying for such benefits.

Now, that is the section. The amendment simply adds to the section the provision that an employee may go into the local State court as well as into the Federal court. That is the amendment we have before us for discussion.

Now, let us see what the situation is with respect to that amendment. If the law is passed requiring the employee to go into the Federal court, it means, out in the sparsely settled sections of the country, that it may be a young man who desires to take advantage of this section and is compelled to take advantage of it in order to protect himself may find that he will have to travel half way across his State to go to a Federal court in order to protect the rights which this Congress has set up for him. We simply suggest in this amendment that the law be so changed as to permit the young man to go into the court in his own county. Why should a young man who comes back from this training period and who cannot get his job back and who asks the protection of this law which Congress has set up for his benefit, be required to travel long distances and suffer a hardship in order to get the benefit which the Congress wants him to have by this pronouncement and by the enactment of this law? Certainly we should provide every safeguard for that young man.

I think this is a most meritorious amendment and should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment because I believe that the proposal of the committee itself is futile. My colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY], I think, went at the very heart of this matter in his suggestions as to what kind of remedy of law or equity you are trying to create here. I do not believe any lawyer ever heard anything of the kind before. There is no tort in it. The cause of action is against the employer. He has committed no tort against the boy that is taken into the Army. Therefore he could not recover and the United States could not enforce anything against him. But suppose it did. Suppose a Federal judge would order this boy reinstated in this job. All right. That ends the affair. What is to prohibit this employer, as a matter of fact, on the day following the decree of reinstatement, firing that man for some reason or for no reason, if he wanted to keep the man who took his place? We might just as well look at it realistically.

There is no equity involved in it because, again, the employer has done no wrong. The Government of the United States simply with its power to induct a man into service came down there and drafted him.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. No; I am sorry. I do not have time.

Now, there is no contract in it—no cause of action founded upon a breach of contract, because when this boy was taken into the service the employer did not violate any contract of employment with him.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. No, sir; I do not have time.

He did not violate any contract. Now, what have you got? You have simply got a proposition on the part of the committee first to do something that cannot be done.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Yes, just briefly.

Mr. COX. Suppose the employer has gone out of business or his operations have been reduced and he has no place for the man; he has no need for the service, or suppose he has engaged someone else, what is he to do with him?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I understand the proposition that the gentleman from Georgia has put up and he is eminently correct about it. Here is what it amounts to: If there is anybody that has injured or given a cause of action to this boy it is the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States is the guilty party and it is not the employer. If we are going to do justice by this boy we ought to provide in the law——

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Just for a question, I will.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman think that we can confer power upon State courts to do this without the specific consent of the State court?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I doubt very much whether it is constitutional or not. It does not make any difference about that, I am not concerned in that. My opposition to this bill rests upon this statement, that if anybody has done any inequity or any wrong of any kind it is not the employer, it is the Government of the United States; and if we want to make amends for any wrong we may do, let us provide in this bill or some other that in case any draftee cannot get his job back we will issue him a policy of insurance or indemnity of some kind to protect him.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the time that has already been allotted I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 more minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, we are now considering legislation that is most far reaching and perhaps the most vital of any legislative proposal that we have had in many, many years.

This is a conscription bill in peace times. It is an unheard-of proposal to the American people. In ordinary times to merely mention it would be followed by an announcement that we were opposed to it. I certainly am opposed to conscription in peacetimes. However, we must be realistic and practical, and we must examine to see if there is a national emergency of such magnitude as to warrant a departure from the ordinary processes in a normal world.

We know that the world at large is everything but normal. We know that the brutal philosophy of "might makes right" is rapidly being carried forward by the dictators of the old world. We do not know just how soon, if ever, it might reach us. We are greatly alarmed that it might. We must not permit the greatest and richest nation on earth, with the finest and most altruistic government of the world to be allowed to fall an easy prey to international outlaws and bandits, and for that reason we must prepare and likewise for that reason I have supported all preparedness legislation.

I have opposed the original Burke-Wadsworth bill because it did not give due consideration and regard to the young men who were going to be brought into the military arm of the Government. This original proposal has undergone tremendous changes up to this point. I am hopeful that there will be at least one additional great change made, and that is a proper provision for drafting of industry and wealth where the national necessity requires. If this is done, with a full recognition of the serious emergency prevailing, and in order to make our national safety secure, I would feel warranted in supporting this legislation, but in so doing, I want to see every protection and safeguard and likewise every consideration given the human element in this legislation, that is, the men that are going to be called to the colors. We must realize that the human side of this picture must always be paramount and the property side is a secondary element.

I shall support this amendment for the reasons just stated. This amendment just gives a further protection to the men who will be involved.

Mr. Chairman, if the language in this bill is anything short of a snare and a delusion to the draftees, then the amendment proposed should be adopted. I am not going to adopt the position taken by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] who has just preceded me, wherein he stated that this language means nothing at all. It means something. I believe it is an important part of this act, and proceeding upon that assumption I think the Committee should gladly accept this amendment, because its provisions simply confer a right upon the draftee that he would not have without it. The amendment proposes further to broaden that right given the draftee and make it more workable. It provides that the State courts of general jurisdiction shall have concurrent jurisdiction with Federal district courts. The United States attorney or his assistant is made attorney for the draftee.

This amendment applies with equal force to the employer. It safeguards his rights, too. The employer might be required to travel miles and miles in some States under this provision as it now stands. An employer in my State with a little sawmill up in the distant corner of the State might be required to go 200 miles to answer a charge made under this bill in order to be heard in a Federal court while in the State court the matter could be disposed of almost at home. It would be a matter of good judgment on the part of the United States attorney and his assistants as to where justice could be more expeditiously and economically secured for the draftee and likewise for the employer, because under this act there undoubtedly will be instances now and then where an employer is unjustly charged, and he should not be required to go a long way for the hearing any more than the draftee. I am looking at it primarily, however, from the interest of the draftee.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I cannot yield.

Should a case arise under this act today where our Federal courts are so behind in their work it might result in the interested having to wait 6 months or a year. The poor and unfortunate young man would be forced to abandon his remedy and go elsewhere for work.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. No; I have not time to yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman has made a grave charge against the committee.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. LEAVY. Let us take, for instance, the State of Kansas with but one Federal judge and a large population. A draftee returns home. His former employer says, "No; I do not want your services; my business is running good; it is prosperous; and I am satisfied with the man I have here, who displaced you. I am not going to take you back." The poor unfortunate draftee might be denied an opportunity for reemployment for months or so long that he would abandon the right given him, just because there would be no tribunal available. Then, another thing: I know that the average litigant feels far more at home in a State court than in a Federal court. A Federal court has something awesome about it to the ordinary citizen. Why deny to those men from whom we demand so much a choice of courts?

There is another point I wish to touch on, and then I will yield if I have time, and that is as to the nature of the remedy. The act here is extremely broad. It says that almost any kind of pleading is sufficient to get into court. The proceeding doubtless would be in the nature of a show cause order or a mandamus proceeding and would be on the equity side of the court. Any employer who refused to abide the court's decision could be forced to do so by contempt proceedings, just as is done now in the divorce courts and in all proceeding involving extraordinary remedies. I can see no reason, I say, why we should not broaden this act so as to give State courts concurrent jurisdiction unless we proceed on the theory that it means nothing, and if that be the fact then it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Because we may have made a mistake in failing to incorporate this language in the National Guard bill, is that any reason why we should make the mistake now and not incorporate it in this bill?

Mr. LEAVY. Of course, it is not. That law should be amended to include this provision.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman knows that in every Federal court before a litigant can start a suit he must make a deposit of $50. The pending bill giving jurisdiction to the Federal court eliminates the question of costs and requires that they be allowed to sue without costs. I wish the gentleman would tell us what power this Congress has to regulate the fees and costs of State courts.

Mr. LEAVY. I do not know of any Federal district court in the United States that has such a charge. The fees generally range from $10 to $25. This Congress has power to appropriate as much money as is required to make this act workable and give full protection to the men involved. We want to do everything we can for the men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'CONNOR) there were—ayes 39, noes 85.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MAY: On page 28, strike out all of lines 19 to 24, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(e) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered during the period of service in such forces as on furlough or leave of absence; and shall be so restored without loss of seniority; and shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time of being inducted into such forces; and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within 1 year after such restoration.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. HARNESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARNESS. It certainly is not the intention of the committee that, if this amendment should become law, an employer must continue to pay the social security and other taxes on that employee's wages while he is no longer working?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, when a man is disconnected from the service of an employer the employer is no longer charged with his social-security taxes. There would be none to pay. His social-security tax rests upon earnings.

I may say that the chief purpose of the amendment is to preserve the seniority rights of the thousands and hundreds of thousands of railroad employees and other employees of that character who have certain seriority privileges on the railroads. In other words, we put them on furlough during the time they are in the service and they will even be permitted to count this time on the question of their retirement.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. This provision in the last line says:

And such person shall not be discharged from such position without cause within 1 year after such restoration.

What does that "without cause" mean? Suppose they have not the work; would that be cause, or would it not? Would there have to be a malfeasance on the part of the employee?

Mr. MAY. I did not catch that.

Mr. TABER. Suppose they have not got the work; would that be a cause or would it have to be malfeasance?

Mr. MAY. Indeed it would be cause. I might illustrate that in this way: Suppose a canner has a man employed and he is drafted while working for him. The man comes back at the time the canning season has passed. The canner, of course, could not reemploy him in the same job because he has nothing for him to do. Another case would be a concern that has gone into bankruptcy or receivership and had lost control.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. In reference to insurance, will that apply to group insurance? Many industrial plants, of course, carry group insurance. Under those contracts they continue their participation while a man is on vacation or on furlough. Would they continue those policies in force?

Mr. MAY. This would continue them in force and that is the very purpose of the legislation.

Mr. MILLER. Some of these group-insurance contracts now carry a restriction on occupation and some few carry a restriction on military service. Assuming a man has a group policy with an employee for $5,000, which is not unusual, and that policy carries a restriction or waiver during a period of war service?

Mr. MAY. Military service?

Mr. MILLER. They are writing that into policies and have been for 3 months.

Mr. MAY. I do not think it would protect any employee against that provision, because it is a provision within a contract, but the employer might waive it if he wished to and pay it anyway.

Mr. MILLER. I wanted to get that matter in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, may we have an agreement as to time on this section? I want to be perfectly liberal. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes, with this condition: That the chairman of the committee or a member of the Committee on Military Affairs may have the last 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, in connection with subsection (e), I have an informal opinion that I want read.

Mr. MAY. Let us get through with this question first.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I want to be sure I have sufficient time for the Clerk to read the informal opinion to the House.

Mr. MAY. That amendment has already been adopted.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I want to comment on the section.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman can get time later.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how many amendments are on the desk?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there are some 8 or 10 amendments.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if we will have plenty of time.

Mr. MAY. We have spent 5 days on this bill already.

Mr. GEYER of California. We have 5 days more coming. I wish the gentleman would give us some more time.

Mr. MAY. I think 30 minutes is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: On page 27, after line 14, add a new subsection:

"(4) The induction of any person into the land or naval services of the United States shall not be deemed to be complete until his physical and mental fitness for military and naval service shall have been satisfactorily determined and the required oath shall be administered only after such determination. At the time of discharge, each person inducted into service under the provisions of this act shall be given a certificate showing any illness, injury, or disease suffered by him while in such service."

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Was not this amendment accepted on the National Guard bill?

Mr. MILLER. The second sentence of the amendment was accepted, but the first sentence is new language. I wanted to present it to the committee, but before I did that I wanted to get the opinion of some men who I thought were authorities on psychiatry. I may say to the committee that the only thing I am aiming at is to prevent such a situation as existed during the World War draft when men not physically fit were passed by a local draft board. In one case, for example, a man went in and said, "I am an epileptic." The draft board smiled and said, "Tell it to the Army." They took him in and he was sworn in immediately. Four days later he had an epileptic seizure. Under the law at that time, and I presume it still is the law, he had the benefit of the presumption that he was in good health. He turned around and filed a claim, and the Government has today spent $20,000 compensating that man for 4 days' service.

This amendment would simply give the War Department ample time before the person was required to take the oath, and if necessary, permit them to defer his taking the oath until they could complete the physical and mental examination. It would give them time to go back to that person's district and make sure that he had not been in a State hospital for the insane perhaps the year before.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. If I understand correctly the system that will be set up to administer this act, that method will be followed. There will be no induction until after examination.

Mr. MILLER. There will be no induction until after physical examination, I may say, but they need some authority so that they will not have to swear the enrollees in immediately if they feel that they need time to complete the mental examination. As the gentleman well knows, you cannot examine a person's mental status and background in 2 hours. The examination may indicate to the mind of the doctor that this man perhaps has a neuropsychiatric background, and he will want to contact the Red Cross home service in that community, possibly, to verify his suspicions before he permits the man to take the oath or rejects him.

I may say that I have talked to officials of the Veterans' Administration of St. Elizabeths Hospital and at the War Department, and the first two felt it would be very meritorious, that it would be a protection to the men who are old constitutionally psychopathic inferiority cases such as we got in the World War, and we keep those men out of the service if necessary.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment. As far as we are concerned, it may be adopted.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEALEY: On page 29, line 18, after "provisions", insert "and as an incident thereto to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefit suffered by reason of such unlawful action."

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely gives the courts, after a decision has been reached in favor of the applicant for relief from failure to reinstate, power to assess as damages the loss of wages suffered by such applicant from the time he applies for reinstatement up to the time that the court finds that such reinstatement is justified on the facts and circumstances of the case. You have held out to these men you are going to induct into service that you will restore them insofar as you have the power to restore them to their status quo before they were inducted into the service. It seems to me it is a matter of simple justice that if on all the facts the court finds that it is not unreasonable or impossible to reinstate that man, and the private employer has refused and thereby violated the provisions of this section by such refusal, the court ought to have the power to reinstate the man and assess as damages the loss of wages he has suffered from the time he applied for reinstatement until the court renders a decision in his favor.

Did you ever hear of a reinstatement ever being ordered by a tribunal of justice that did not also restore the wages that were lost or the damages that were suffered by the applicant who such body had determined ought to be reinstated and restored to his status quo?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. In view of the service the gentleman has rendered in connection with labor disputes, I should like to say that this is a very salutary amendment.

Mr. HEALEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I believe the gentleman's amendment is well founded and logical, because, as the act is now worded, on page 29, line 15, the court has no standard by which it may judge the issue; in other words, all the court can do is come to an adjustment of the claim in its exclusive discretion with no standard. There is no standard in the bill. The gentleman's amendment is definite and clear and seems fair and equitable. It should be adopted.

Mr. HEALEY. I thank the gentleman very much for his contribution.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it would be effective only in cases where the courts found the employer had committed an unlawful act in not restoring the employee to his former position.

Mr. HEALEY. That is exactly the effect of this amendment.

I would like to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee and the members to the fact that this identical language now appears in the Senate bill. It was offered and adopted by the Senate and is now part of the language of the bill as finally passed by that body.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MUNDT: Page 30, line 9, after subsection (h), insert a new subsection to be known as subsection (i): "It is the expressed policy of this Congress that whenever a vacancy is caused in the employment rolls of any business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of this act that such vacancy shall not be filled by any person who is not a citizen of the United States or who is a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MUNDT. It seems to me this amendment very obviously is germane to the bill because it deals with a situation caused by the operation of the bill should it become the law. If the bill becomes law, it takes out of industry and business certain employees and creates vacancies, and my amendment has to do with the vacancies created by the operation of this piece of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MAY. No, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WHITTINGTON). The amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota deals with a general question respecting benefits, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me here is an amendment which I hope the Committee will adopt, and if it does not adopt it, it seems to me inconceivable that this House would oppose it. Due to the fact that we have exempted aliens from conscription under this act, we find ourselves in a peculiar position. I am sure there is no Member of the House who wants this legislation intentionally or unintentionally to discriminate against American citizens in favor of aliens, but we find that approximately 1,000,000 men a year, all of whom are American citizens, will be conscripted into this training program should this bill pass, creating a million vacancies, and this piece of legislation simply says that it shall be the declared policy of this body that insofar as possible these vacancies shall be filled by American citizens and by American citizens who are members neither of the Communistic Party or the German-American Bund.

We all know that constitutionally we cannot make this mandatory, but we can certainly set it up as the established policy and as the desire of this Congress that industry and business shall place these vacancies with good, loyal American citizens.

I hope this amendment will be accepted by this body so that we will not be, inadvertently, in a position where we are conscripting American citizens to serve at $30 a month and giving their jobs to aliens or Communists or bundsters at $80 or $100 or $150 a month. I think it is simply good Americanism and good common sense that we set our faces in the right direction and tell America that insofar as possible we want these jobs filled with good American citizens. [Applause.]

While I am on my feet I want to say that both those who will oppose and those who will favor this bill on final passage should join in perfecting it as much as possible as we go along. If it should become the law of the land, we want it to operate as equitably and justly as possible; if it does not become the law of the land we want it written as fairly and wisely as possible, anyhow, so that we shall have a better framework to build on should a definite emergency or war itself some day unhappily force us all to favor conscription.

I know that as for myself, should this country become involved in war—and it will never be involved in anything other than a strictly defensive war with my vote—I would vote for conscription of both men and income immediately as I am convinced that such is the best method to fight a war.

The sacrifices of war should be distributed as equitably as possible over 100 percent of our population. If war should plague our fair land again, I am sure this House would vote for conscription almost unanimously as the best, the quickest, and the fairest way to raise an army. I am sure it would vote, too, for some such legislation as that proposed by the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars to place men, money, and materials at the disposal of the Government with equal candor. America must never have another generation of war millionaires. Those who think another war could be fought with the blood of the neighbor's children and with the finances of future generations are mistaken in their reading of the signs of the times. They are about as completely mistaken, I might add, as the original New York City sponsors of this present peacetime conscription bill who had the unbridled temerity and the callous gall to write this legislation in its original draft in such a manner as to pay the conscriptees only $5 per month for their time. "Men," they said, "should be patriotic enough to serve without pay." There is much to be said for such idealism, to be sure, but it ignores the realities of life and the necessity of paying the butcher, the baker, the landlord, and the mortgagor, and it blandly ignores, according to the doctrine of the Harvard Club, habitues who admit original sponsorship of this bill, the presumption that perhaps "income derived from war preparation, and idle capital, too, should be patriotic enough to serve without pay."

What is sauce for the goose must soon or late become sauce for the gander, too, in a self-governing republic. One man's income is his factory or his machine works; another man's income is his two strong arms and his private job. If one man's income is conscripted in peacetime and reduced thereby to $30 per month, simple reasoning indicates that some democratic and equitable process must be developed by the same rule to make the other man's income serve his Government with equal patriotism and without unequal profit.

Thus the New York City and Washington newspapers which bombard us with headlines and seek to seduce us with editorials saying, "Conscript men in peacetime," "Remove excess-profits taxes," "Draft manpower now," "Give business its fair profit," sound a little sordid and mercenary as they switch from support of a bill which first provided only $5 per month for conscriptees to support of a program opposing excess-profits taxes on income from war preparation and then back again to the abuse of Congressmen who are old-fashioned enough to believe that sauce for geese and ganders should not come from entirely different pans.

Mr. Chairman, no man in this House is more determined to make America safe and secure than am I. I believe in preparedness. I have voted consistently for national defense, as you well know. But I hesitate to fasten upon America a permanent program of militarism based on continuous peacetime conscription. I doubt that it is either necessary or effective. Expert testimony is in severe disagreement, as you all know, regarding the necessity, or even the desirability, of the particular type of preparedness provided in this legislation. I am inclined to agree with those experts who hold that America can better afford to equip and maintain a well-trained, well-paid army of whatever size our General Staff recommends—be it 1,000,000 men or 2,000,000 men, less or more as the times may indicate, than it can to set up this untried conscript system. It is argued by able experts that such trained defense units will cost us less and defend us better than the proposed program which at best resolves itself largely into marching a million raw recruits through the turnstiles of a brief training program every year and which could never develop the substantial units of well-trained technicians who understand the tactics of modern war and who are fully trained to handle modern defense machinery.

The most effective fighting in Europe in this war, we should remember, is not resulting from sprawling armies of 1,000,000 men with a year or two of training, but from highly trained professional fighters who have mastered modern weapons after years of training. Our own Army heads have repeatedly stated that it takes at least 3 years to train a good soldier under modern conditions. I do not believe that conscriptees can be given sufficient training in 1 year to make this country safe and secure. To assume that is to deny the established policy of our own Army chiefs who, up until the past few weeks, have even refused to accept men for 1-year enlistments, even though such enlistments were provided for by act of Congress. It is more than passing strange that it is now argued that 1 year's training of conscripted men will turn out expert defense units when the same men formerly argued that 1 year's training of volunteer men could not possibly train a good army.

Mr. Chairman, I am interested in a good army. I want it to have substance and science as well as size. I want it to be more than a match for the best armies of all the world. I want security for this country. I am interested in the desired result of safety and not any determined ruse to set up a system of peacetime conscription. I gravely fear that in our impatient zeal to do something sudden we may fail to do something wise. I worry lest we pass some such bill as this and then figure ourselves falsely secure because we are relying upon an army of revolving recruits who spend a year in the Army and then make way for new rookies none of whom can hope to master the complicated techniques and machinery of modern warfare. Mr. Chairman, today's defense and today's fighting is a job for experts. You cannot make an expert in 12 months and this whole legislation ignores the simple fact that to be safe and sure and secure this country must develop an army before the amateur class and depend upon professional soldiers, aviators, seamen, and gunners who make the protection of this country, this continent, and this hemisphere a life work rather than the haphazard pastime of a 12-month interlude under coercion by Uncle Sam.

This bill would make a greater appeal to me, frankly, if it included some sections which would provide for building a highly trained standing army from among those receiving this training and if it relied less upon what I believe to be the fallacious hope that a million raw recruits at any given time, plus several million reserves with only 1 year's training, constitute national safety in defense.

Several important amendments are yet to be offered to this bill. Some of these may correct some of the factors which now cause me to hesitate to vote for it. In that event I may yet support this legislation, although I am plagued by the uneasy feeling that we are substituting speed for soundness in this approach to our national-defense problem and that we are relying overmuch on size and too little on science in thus trying to answer the problem of making America safe and strong.

Among the factors I dislike are the provisions exempting Congressmen and other Government officials from the provisions of this act. I was among those voting to remove these exemptions because in America it is my belief that we can have and we should have no group whose privilege it is to rule and one group whose responsibility it is to serve the rulers. I regret, too, that this bill has taken on the complexion of class legislation by providing exemptions and deferments for the sons of all whose parents can afford to send them to college any time during the year 1940. I can see justice in exempting college seniors long enough for them to finish their last year in school but it is hard for me to understand the logic of the sponsors of this bill in providing a draft shelter for men who can afford to enroll as freshmen in college after this bill passes—regardless of their age, incidentally—and assuming that a mechanic learning a trade, a farm boy practicing his pursuit, or a young professional man just getting a foothold in life should be treated any differently from the freshmen at Yale and Harvard whose fathers have been so eloquent and so vigorous in drafting and supporting this bill.

Since these exemptions thus include practically all sons of Congressmen and Senators, it seems to me that providing for them is an especially demoralizing practice in a Republic which has never condoned before anything smacking of class legislation. I supported Mr. Short's amendment to remove this glaring injustice and regret that the House insisted on retaining this discriminatory section. I am afraid that it is of such short-sighted policies that radicalism is made. When and if America has to have conscription—in peace or war—let us not provide cyclone cellars for the rich and the fortunate but let us treat all Americans alike. We cannot expect to increase respect for Government, my friends, when the people's representatives in Congress insist in writing into law exemptions from a conscription law which will defer the draft as it affects their own sons, but direct its application with correspondingly increased severity to the sons of their less well situated constituents. The farm boy and the banker's son, the worker's son, and the Congressman's boy should all be affected equally if and when conscription becomes the law of the land. This bill most glaringly and flagrantly violates this rule of thumb in a republic.

Also, I should like to see this bill provide for training and not actual service, in peacetime, as it affects these conscriptees. I regret my amendment of yesterday was defeated which would prevent these raw recruits from being sent into possible actual warfare in South America without authorization of Congress. I hesitate, seriously, to delegate to any Executive this power which is tantamount to the power to declare war because any action which invokes war is equivalent to declaring it. I also want to emphasize the point that even this bill's sponsors admit that the presence of what they deem an urgent emergency justified the passage of a peacetime conscription bill. If an emergency is upon us and if this is a bill to meet that emergency, let us draw the issue clear and straight. Let us limit the operations of this act to 2 years instead of 5. If at the end of 2 years no emergency exists, the legislation will expire; if at the end of 2 years an emergency does exist, Congress can extend the act. But let us not now under the guise of an emergency impose upon this country for 5 years a system which by that time may be so firmly ingrained in our political and economic life that we cannot abandon it. Such an amendment will be offered and I shall support it.

Should this amendment be accepted, it will demonstrate the sincerity of this bill's sponsors in desiring to raise an army quickly, now, and remove fears that they are interested in setting up a system to conscript men, money, and materials by which this Republic will be transformed into a totalitarian state. Limited to 2 years, I can vote for this legislation, especially if certain other undesirable factors which I have mentioned are eliminated. Limiting the bill to 2 years can under no possibility cripple its performance. It will put us in the same position in 2 years that we would be, insofar as the Army is concerned, if we enact the law for 5 years, and it will have the added advantage of indicating that this Congress has no desire to set up a permanent conscription practice in America which can so easily transform this Republic into a military state instead of a great, free republic dedicated to peaceful pursuits. There is much to gain and nothing to lose by limiting this bill to 2 years instead of 5. This amendment provides a real test of the motives of the men behind this bill.

Earlier this week in discussing the Fish amendment which I supported, I said I was interested in raising an army and in perfecting our defenses but I am not desirous of imposing a system of permanent peacetime conscription upon America. The Fish amendment passed the House by a small majority but it is now freely rumored on both sides of the House that an effort will be made to strike it out by roll-call vote and that if this majority can be overcome or decreased the amendment will be taken out in conference. This again places a different complexion on this bill; it again arouses fears that some men are thinking more of the system than the army needed for the present. We now have nearly 1,000,000 men under arms; at present rates of enlistments we shall have the desired 1,200,000 by the volunteer method before the Government is ready and able to equip them fully. An acceptance of the amendment to limit this law to 2 years will restore the confidence of those of us who hesitate to vote for a system which may so easily become permanent; it will permit us to vote for this legislation with the knowledge that we are doing so to meet an immediate situation only. But if the Fish amendment is to be deleted or traded off in conference and the time rigidly fixed at 5 years, I believe we would do better to defeat it now rather than risk its ultimate results.

Let me close by urging you once again to support the amendment I have introduced to protect for American citizens the jobs vacated by American citizens called by this draft bill should it become a law. Let us be sure that we do not utilize this legislation to place a premium upon aliens or upon Communists or bund members by permitting them to enter highly paid positions in replacement of Americans who go off to training at the call of their Government for $30 per month. Here at least is one improvement in this legislation upon which there should be no disagreement. We are all interested in protecting America and in promoting American interests; let us adopt my amendment, which will serve to protect and promote the interests of the real Americans in America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. MUNDT)—ayes 50, noes 55.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MAY and Mr. MUNDT.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 93, noes 85.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SACKS: On page 27, after line 14, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"(4) That, during any period of service or training in or as a part of the military or naval forces of the United States during any national emergency for which a home mortgagor volunteers or is drafted through selective methods, any installment due and payable by such home mortgagor with respect to any home mortgage shall be paid out of the national mortgage emergency fund.

"(1) if the mortgagor consents, in writing, to such payments being made by the administrator of the emergency fund and enters into a contract with the administrator containing provision for reimbursement of any installments so paid and such provisions as the administrator shall deem necessary in order to protect the interest of the United States; and

"(2) if the mortgagee agrees that after the payment of all installments due under any such mortgage and after all claims of the mortgagee against the mortgagor arising out of the mortgage transaction have been satisfied, the mortgagee will promptly transfer such mortgage to the administrator and convey to him all right, title, and interest of the mortgagee in or with respect to the property covered by such mortgage.

"There are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually such sums as may be necessary in order to reimburse the national emergency fund on account of any payments made in accordance with the provisions of this subsection."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground it attempts to appropriate money on a legislative bill.

Mr. SACKS. It simply authorizes an appropriation and does not appropriate.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had been recognized and was starting to debate his amendment.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment had just been read and I could not make the point of order until it had been read.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman had been recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman from Kentucky was on his feet raising the point of order and the Chair holds the point of order is in order.

Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard on the point?

Mr. MAY. Simply to say, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not germane to the bill and that it attempts to provide an appropriation on a legislative bill. It does not authorize an appropriation, but provides an appropriation.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that the amendment does not appropriate money, but simply authorizes an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The section under consideration deals with benefits of those inducted into the service and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania undertakes to authorize an appropriation for certain benefits described in the amendment. The point of order is overruled and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am in accord with the gentleman with respect to the proposed amendment, but I notice in the amendment, if I heard it read correctly, something or other about somebody must declare an emergency before it becomes operative. Would not the gentleman give consideration to an amendment to his amendment that these benefits will accrue to all of those who are enlisted or inducted into the service under the provision of this act.

Mr. SACKS. Yes, I will be glad to accept that amendment.

This amendment deals with a very vital subject. Many American families throughout this land have bought homes in the last 2 years through the F. H. A. Government plan of guaranteeing mortgages. Many of those people have been given loans as the result of their combined earnings. When you take the young man whose earnings are a part of the family budget away from the family and induct him into military service, it seriously affects the status of that mortgage and the ability of that family to carry that home. It will affect the real-estate market, because if many of those families must drop the mortgages the United States Government having guaranteed them would be in the position of taking those homes over and carrying them at great loss.

Furthermore, those families are affected as the result of a law passed by the Congress saying that one or two of their number should be taken and their earnings cut from the family budget. I say it is only fair to protect those home owners, people who have been buying their homes and just making enough to carry on. We should take care of them if we draft any income from their budget, because we will seriously affect the budget of any family if we draft into service any young man contributing to the family budget.

I see no harm in the amendment. As a matter of fact, under the present bill, if the family head is taken away or a single man who has dependents is taken, or even if his earnings are necessary for the family budget or income, then I say we should protect that family.

I strongly urge you to adopt this amendment.

This bill before the House is a very important and vital measure. Serious consideration and thought should be given its contents. Peacetime selective draft is a new theory engrossed on American life. I have discussed and studied its entire scope. My sound judgment has been applied to its effect on American democracy and tradition. My constituents have presented their views. I have weighed everything.

To me in this great world crisis comes a vision of America in peril. Nazi and communistic ideologies are dominating the Old World. Europe is seething with intrigue, violence, intolerance, and bigotry. Should we in the United States play the role of Rip Van Winkle and sleep away all our chances for preparedness? I am opposed to war. I said when I was elected I would never vote to send a single American boy out of the United States to European shores. This pledge I again reiterate. However, I cannot subscribe that this bill will do this. I rather believe that preparedness will prevent war. A strong national defense will deter the crazy hallucination of the mad dictator of Germany from fulfilling his desire to dominate the world. I believe that our protection insures democracy and the continuation of American tradition. No attack will be made by him if he knows we are prepared. This is my conclusion of the result of the bill.

The gymnastic gyrations of those who would play politics with the defense of America, their changing positions from day to day make me believe that this issue means our safety.

Therefore I shall vote for selective draft, provided, however, the bill carries with it the conscription-of-wealth amendment. I do not want defense millionaires created at the expense of drafting our men. I will vote for conscription of wealth so that the industrialists shall be made to sacrifice financially for their country as well as the men who will be trained to defend her. This is my position on the bill. Protection, preparedness, and safety for the United States is my goal. The preservation of the United States as a democracy, with the liberties of our people preserved, shall be my basic philosophy. I believe this bill, with the conscription-of-wealth amendment in it, will preserve and protect the traditions of our land.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Since the time has been fixed on this section and all amendments thereto, and there are several other amendments to be offered, the Chair has reserved 5 minutes for the committee. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Two minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, this amendment brings up the whole subject of mortgages and installment payments which is covered to some extent in the Soldiers and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. The committee now has under consideration a complete revision of that act, which covers some 25 pages, on which hearings have been started. The subject is an extremely important one, which affects a great many people and a great amount of investment. I think the situation should be taken care of and will be taken care of by the revision of that act, but I do not think within the short time we have here that we can thoroughly cover the subject which is attempted to be covered by this amendment.

Therefore I ask that it be rejected.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Is it not true that under the present act, if the act passes without this amendment there is great danger that many of them will be affected? If the committee does not pass the bill to which you referred, or it is never brought to the House and passed, they certainly will be greatly affected.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. They should be covered, but we cannot do it without proper consideration and without evidence on the subject, merely by bringing in on short notice an amendment which is so far reaching.

Mr. SACKS. It is not covered in the bill now?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. It is not sufficiently covered.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. The objectives of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be accomplished by separate legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. They will.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I will appreciate it if the membership of the House will refer to page 28 of the bill before us, subsection (e) of section 9, which I quote as follows:

(e) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (A) or (B) of subsection (d) shall be so restored without loss of seniority, insurance participation or benefits, or other benefits, and such person shall not be discharged from such position without cause within 1 year after such restoration.

The language of this subsection is identical with subsection (c) of section 3, Public Resolution No. 96, or better known to the Members of the House as the National Guard bill empowering the President to call into active service the National Guard men of the Nation.

During the discussion on the National Guard bill it was pointed out that one of the intents of the subsection referred to above was to protect insurance participation or benefits, or other benefits of every guardsman as far as it concerned United States Government retirement, social security, Railroad Retirement Act, railroad unemployment insurance, and the Wage and Hour Act.

When the Burke-Wadsworth bill was reported out of committee, I found that the wording of the subsection protecting the interests of the draftees was identical with the language employed in the National Guard Act in regard to protecting the interests of the guardsmen.

Immediately after passage of the National Guard bill I desired to ascertain if the language employed in the bill really provided the guardsmen with the protection Congress intended. With this thought in mind I approached officials of certain Government departments asking for a legal interpretation in an effort to protect the interests of the thousands of miners, railroaders, and other citizens likely to be affected by the draft should the Burke-Wadsworth measure become a law.

This morning I received an informal opinion concerning the language used in both the National Guard and Burke-Wadsworth bills.

I was startled to find in analyzing the opinion that the language used offers absolutely no protection.

Therefore, it will be necessary for this House to amend the Social Security Act, Railroad Retirement Act, Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, Civil Service Retirement Act, and the Wage and Hour Act. This must be done before the Seventy-sixth Congress adjourns if the National Guard men and Burke-Wadsworth draftees are to receive the benefits to which they are justly entitled.

For the information of the Members of the House, the informal opinion is herewith quoted, with the name of the source deleted for the reason that the advice was rendered in a spirit of confidence:

SEPTEMBER 3, 1940.

You requested my informal opinion about the effect of the following provision of Public Resolution No. 96, Seventy-sixth Congress (S. J. Res. 286), on the old-age and survivors' insurance provisions of the Social Security Act:

"(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be so restored without loss of seniority, insurance participation or benefits, or other benefits, and such person shall not be discharged from such position without cause within 1 year after such restoration."

In this connection consideration should be given first to the scope of the provision. The provision applies only to persons restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (A) or (B) under subsection (b). That is to say, that the only persons who are protected at all are those who serve as members of a reserve component of the land and naval forces meeting all the following:

(1) Who in the judgment of those in authority over him satisfactorily completes such active duty;

(2) Who leaves a position other than a temporary position in order to perform such active duty; and

(3) Who on return from service is still qualified to perform the duties of such position; and

(4) Who makes application for reemployment within 40 days after he is relieved from such active duty or service; and

(5) Who is restored to the position.

Where a person meets all of the above requirements, the act provides that he "shall be so restored without loss of seniority, insurance participation or benefits, or other benefits * * *."

As I read the foregoing it would appear that whatever conclusion might be reached as to the effect of the provision on old-age benefits, the provision would hardly appear to cover monthly or lump-sum benefits payable on the death of the individual while in service. Under the Social Security Act, an individual who meets the above may or may not on death during active service be entitled to survivor benefits. If he had sufficient quarters of coverage at the time of his death, he would be entitled to such benefits under existing law. If he did not have sufficient quarters at the time of his death, he would not be entitled under existing law, and the National Guard Act provisions do not apply until the individual returns to his job.

I have heard it stated that the Congress in general had in mind that an individual who is restored to a position should be regarded in the same status as an individual who had been on leave without pay from his employer for the period in question. If this is the theory, it might be mentioned that the individual who served in active National Guard service would, under existing law, have the same "insurance participation or benefits" under the Social Security Act as he would have had if he had been on vacation without pay or had merely been unemployed. The law gives no special protection to those on leave status. The effect of being on leave without pay, whether or not in the National Guard, would result in giving the individual a somewhat lower benefit rate, and he would not be increasing the quarters of coverage necessary to meet the general requirement of half his quarters being quarters of coverage. The effect on an individual who is in the old-age and survivors' insurance system for many years would be somewhat negligible; but in the case of an individual who had not been continuously in the system it might conceivably mean the difference between eligibility and noneligibility for benefits.

The act contains two or three indications that probably the phrase "insurance participation or benefits" was intended to mean such benefits provided through or by his employer rather than old-age and survivor's insurance benefits. Subsection (d) of the act provides that where a private employer fails or refuses to comply "with * * * subsection (c)" that a certain court procedure shall be followed. So far as old-age and survivor's insurance protection is concerned, the employer would be powerless to put the employee in the same position that he would have been in had he continued in the employer's employment. That is to say that when the individual returns and the employer puts him back at his old job that is as far as the employer can go. The quarters which have elapsed while the individual was in the military service cannot be made quarters of coverage by any action the employer can take upon such return to service.

An interpretation that the provisions of subsection (c) apply to old-age and survivor's insurance would also require an interpretation as to how they applied to the old-age and survivor's benefit system. The general theory of the system is that an individual who has been covered by the system a sufficient length of time, i. e., has sufficient number of quarters of coverage, is entitled to certain benefits. The benefit rate depends upon the average wage of the individual which is usually computed by dividing the total wage of the individual by the number of months elapsing after 1936 and prior to the quarter in which the individual dies or applies for an old-age benefit. The law gives a 1-percent increment for each year of covered employment. It would be difficult to determine just how a person could be restored to a position "without * * * loss of insurance participation or benefits." This might mean that the period he was in active military service would not be counted against him in determining the necessary quarters nor in determining his average wage, or it might mean that an individual would be assumed to have continued with the same wages as he was receiving from the job he left when he entered into active service. The effects would not be the same.

Regardless of what is meant by (c) it is manifest that if there is to be an equitable protection for individuals entering into military service, it will be necesssary to amend the old-age and survivor's insurance provisions. Many individuals who fall without the scope of subsection (c) have old-age and survivor's insurance protection today. This protection does not depend on whether or not an individual leaves a permanent rather than a temporary position, nor does it depend upon the employer's ability to restore the employee where circumstances have changed. In other words, while the provisions of subsection (c) may be equitable when applied to insurance participation or benefits provided by the employer in the employer's plan, these provisions would appear to be much too limited in scope to take care of the situation under old-age and survivor's insurance. Furthermore, it would appear that any changes in the old-age and survivor's insurance provisions should not only be broader in scope but specify how the insurance participation while the individual is in active service is to be financed and what effect such active service is to have upon eligibility for and rate of benefits. There are two or three possible approaches to this particular problem which in general might be described as only a part of the larger problem of extending coverage under the old-age and survivor's insurance system.

As you know, consideration of coverage problems, including the problem of individuals entering into military service, is at the present time receiving intensive study with a view of making recommendations when requested by the proper congressional committees.

Gentlemen, this situation that confronts us is the result of hastily drafted legislation in a frenzied effort to jam it down the throats of Congressmen under the guise of being an emergency national-defense measure. I submit these observations to you for your careful consideration at a time when the best interests of the people of America are at stake and when war hysteria is being employed to play upon the emotions of every man, woman, and child in this great Nation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 30, line 3, strike out all of lines 3 to 9, inclusive, and insert the following: "The right of any person inducted into the land and naval forces for training and service under this act to vote in general, special, or primary elections occurring in the State of which he is a resident shall not be abridged or denied during such period of training and service because of his absence from the State at the time of such election, if under the laws of such State he would otherwise be entitled to vote."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 1½ minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, if and when the boys march to camp, the bill says in effect: "Boys, we are going to give you permission to vote when you get to camp."

This amendment says: "Boys, they are not going to take away your right to vote if you are otherwise entitled, when you get to camp."

I think it is better language.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. THOMASON. One minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, but it was the opinion of the committee that as far as we could go was the authority of the State, that the law of the State regarding voting must and will apply and there is nothing we can do about it. But we have certainly provided in this section for taking care of and preserving the rights of every voter based upon the law of his State. I do not see how the amendment improves that situation, because it is up to the States of Illinois, Texas, Kentucky, and the rest to control the matter by their own State law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Then why have the language at all?

Mr. THOMASON. We give them the right, and that is all we can give them in a Federal statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 74, noes 89.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona: On page 27, line 4, after the semicolon, insert "section 500 of."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I trust the Committee will accept this amendment. It merely provides for granting to our draftees under this measure the same protection that was granted the draftees under the act of March 8, 1918, during the first World War with reference to mining claims.

As you know our present Federal law requires those who have unpatented mining claims to do annually $100 worth of work in order to maintain their hold upon those claims. If the provision of the act of March 8, 1918, should be included in the measure as I propose in this amendment, it would simply mean that the Government would forgive the $100 of assessment work on the part of those drafted into the service for the time they are in the service.

The small-mine operators of Arizona have suggested this amendment. They feel that this logical benefit and safeguard for draftees is not adequately covered elsewhere in the bill. I believe it should be covered for the protection of the draftees with regard to their unpatented mining claims throughout the country.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Knowing the mining conditions of this country as I do, I am glad to endorse the position the gentleman takes, and hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I thank the gentleman, and trust that the Committee will accept it as a Committee amendment.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. EDMISTON. Does not the gentleman believe that his objective is accomplished by the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Rights Act, wherein that was worked out in the World War?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That act has expired and is not now in effect. I want section 501 of article 5 reenacted, as I am afraid they are not adequately protected. My amendment would reincorporate section 501 of article 5 of the act of March 8, 1918, and make it a part of this bill.

Mr. EDMISTON. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment, but I think it is already done in the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Not as I read the bill. I hope the gentleman is correct.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. Referring to the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Rights Act, the gentleman will note from reading the pending bill that while the provisions of the act are incorporated in the bill it says that certain sections shall be inoperative. The section to which the gentleman refers is not enumerated there and, therefore, the section is not inoperative; it is in effect.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. In lines 4 and 5, on page 27, it says article 5 of the act referred to shall be inoperative. What I want is to have section 501 of article 5 of the act referred to become operative in this case by reenacting it in the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEYER of California: On page 30, line 9, after the period insert:

"The payment of a poll tax shall not be required for such person inducted into the land or naval forces as a prerequisite for voting or registering to vote at any election for President or Vice President or Presidential elector or Senator or Member of the House of Representatives."

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to argue his point of order?

Mr. THOMASON. I do not believe it ought to be necessary, but I am making the point of order because I do not think the amendment is germane to the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to outline reasons why I believe the point of order should be sustained if the Chair desires to hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, would be very glad to hear the gentleman from Georgia and also the gentleman from California. The Chair has looked into the matter somewhat, and is prepared to rule, but would be glad to hear either gentleman.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to offer this observation. The particular paragraph to which this amendment is offered deals with the exercise of governmental authority over the drafted men and provides that that authority shall not be exercised to prevent these men exercising their privileges as electors in the several States of their residence. It does not undertake in any way to change or modify the laws of the several States relating to the qualification of electors, even assuming that that could be done constitutionally, every lawyer, of course, knowing that it cannot be done by the Congress of the United States. It is, therefore, manifestly not germane to this section, and it is not relevant to this paragraph of the section, being an amendment which undertakes to change the laws enacted within the constitutional authority of the States regulating the qualification of electors.

I do not, of course, insist that it is not germane because of its unconstitutionality. The Congress can pass an unconstitutional law if it so desires.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, the Chair, of course, is cognizant of the fact that he does not rule on the constitutionality of the thing, so far as its germaneness is concerned. That takes care of that.

This amendment is germane because it has to do with the voting rights of the men who have been drafted, the same as this section does.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEYER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that the gentleman's amendment is an amendment to the section which protects the rights of these men who are drafted and forced into military service to serve under the Stars and Stripes at $21 per month and help maintain the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. GEYER of California. That is right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In many cases the money for the payment of poll taxes which are in arrears would require more than a month's wage of $21.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to insist that the argument be confined to the point of order.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I will further state that my amendment does not affect State or local officials. It affects only those who are elected officials of the United States Government. I believe the amendment is germane.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is not germane and is not in order for the further reason that it seeks to fix the qualification as voters only of those inducted into service under this bill, which would give them different qualifications from voters not inducted under this bill. It would, therefore, not be a uniform provision fixing the qualification of all voters in a State and certainly it is not in order in this bill to fix the qualification of one voter in one manner and the qualification of other voters in a State by an entirely different manner.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, the subsection to which the amendment is offered purports to guarantee the right of draftees to vote. This amendment seeks to remove any prohibitions that may exist against that right of the draftee to vote. It simply clarifies the language of the section, and thereby deals with the same subject; therefore, it is germane and any question of constitutionality or any question of States' rights are not questions that come up under the standard of germaneness. I submit that the point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). The Chair is ready to rule.

This section deals with the rights of draftees and trainees to vote. Of course, that is the only class that can be considered in a bill of this nature, because that is the subject we are dealing with. If the Chair was called upon to pass on the constitutionality of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, which is not within the province of the Chair, the Chair would certainly think that it was about the most unconstitutional provision that could possibly be offered to the pending bill. However, that is a matter for the courts to decide.

The Chair thinks the amendment is germane to this section and therefore overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, it is very unfortunate, particularly in view of the opinion expressed by the Chair just now as to the constitutionality of the amendment, that it is impossible for us to have the hearings printed in order that we may determine whether or not it is constitutional. We have had some very splendid arguments made before the Judiciary Committee tending to prove its constitutionality. I am not saying that there are certain forces that have been brought to bear to keep those hearings from being printed, but I am very suspicious. However, I want to talk about my amendment.

The long arm of the Nation extends down into these 8 Southern States and takes boys out to defend democracy. They might well ask, What democracy? What democracy are they defending when it is possible to charge a vast amount of money, perhaps $15 or $20 if you will take the cumulative amount that some States require, before these men may be allowed to vote, and they are supposed to get this out of their little paltry $21 a month? That just is not common sense.

This body has the right of life, liberty, and limb so far as these boys are concerned. We say whether they come into the service and how long they shall stay in the service, yet we are putting a price upon their right to vote whether or not their masters come back again to determine just exactly what shall happen to them.

If they are going to defend democracy, let us give them a democracy to defend. So far as constitutionality is concerned, I wonder if we should not remember that people who live in glass houses should not cast stones. I am wondering if this whole bill upon which we are working really would stand the constitutionality test if it were subjected to that test. Talk about interfering with State rights? If we take a man, we certainly have the right to set up the conditions under which that man shall serve his country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEYER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I seek information. In my State, Missouri, the State law provides that on election day if an elector is not within the boundaries of the State he or she cannot vote. We have no absentee law such as other States have which provides for electors voting even if they are outside the jurisdiction of the State. Does the gentleman say it is possible to enact legislation here that will permit a resident of Missouri to vote even though he has been drafted or, if he is in the National Guard, has been ordered to duty if he is outside of the boundaries of Missouri on election day? I do not think we have such power.

Mr. GEYER of California. I believe that as far as Federal officials are concerned we have that right. We must guarantee a representative form of government under the Constitution.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, of course, if you have no regard for your oath to support the Constitution of the United States and to defend it, you may vote for this amendment. Of course, if you have no regard whatever for the vested and indisputable rights of the sovereign States of this Union which formed the Union and delegated to the Federal Government the only rights which the Federal Government possesses, then you might consider voting for this amendment. It makes little difference whether you do or whether you do not. No one who has ever studied the matter for 10 minutes and who has any ground whatever for claiming to be a lawyer would think for 1 minute that this propaganda of the distinguished gentleman from California, called an amendment by virtue of supercourtesy, is anything but anticonstitutional. It is worse than unconstitutional—it is anticonstitutional. So if it should be adopted, it would avail nought except to cause the trouble of having it stricken down by the first court that could hear the demurrer. I beg of you again, as I did upon a former occasion, not to forget that we are Members of what is supposed to be a responsible, deliberative body. If we are not, then God save America! I bespeak your intelligent consideration of this amendment, if only for a moment, for that would inevitably insure its defeat. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GEYER) there were—ayes 41, noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying into effect any of the provisions of this act, or the regulations made or directions given thereunder, who shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform such duty, and any person charged with such duty, or having and exercising any authority under said act, regulations, or directions who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making, of any false, improper, or incorrect registration, classification, physical examination, deferment, induction, enrollment, or muster, and any person who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making of, any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or unfitness or liability or nonliability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this act, or regulations or directions made pursuant thereto, or who otherwise evades registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this act, or who knowingly counsels, aids, or abets another to evade registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this act, or of said regulations or directions, or who in any manner shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform any duty required of him under or in the execution of this act or regulations made in pursuance of this act, or any person or persons who shall hinder or interfere in any way by force or violence with the administration of this act or the regulations made pursuant thereto, or conspire to do so, shall, upon conviction in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, or if subject to military or naval law may be tried by court martial, and, on conviction, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial may direct. In cases of persons subject to this act who fail to report for duty in the land or naval forces as ordered, military and naval courts martial shall have concurrent jurisdiction of offenses arising out of such failure. Precedence shall be given by courts to the trial of cases arising under this act.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VORYS of Ohio: On page 31, line 16, strike out "In"; in line 18, after "ordered," strike out the remainder of line 18, all of line 19, and line 20 down through the word "failure" and insert "shall be tried exclusively in the district courts of the United States having jurisdiction thereof and this class of cases shall not be tried by the military and naval courts martial unless such person has been actually inducted for the training and service prescribed herein or unless he is subject to trial by court martial under laws in force prior to the enactment of this act."

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, under this amendment we shall at least continue to have jury trial for citizens until it is determined that they are subject to military courts martial. We should not let a military court determine whether a military court martial has jurisdiction of the draftee.

I urge the adoption of this amendment, which was adopted in the Senate.

After long and careful and prayerful deliberation, I am against this bill as it stands. I have tried to keep an open mind and consider all of the evidence and arguments for this bill because, wholly aside from the propaganda and political pressure for it, good men whose wisdom and sincerity I respect and whose friendship I cherish, have urged the theoretical fairness and the practical necessity of enforced military service for Americans at this time. I find I cannot agree with them on either point.

Peacetime conscription is not necessary now for our national defense and is a dangerous departure from the American way of life, a more certain threat to our Republic from within than any present threat from without.

Conscription is not necessary now for national defense. Our Navy, which is our first line of defense, is the finest in the world and includes our splendid air force, which was my old service, and has a waiting list of 8,000 volunteers. Our Army has over 600,000 men available now and 3-year recruits at $21 a month are volunteering in unprecedented numbers—45,000 men in August. General Marshall, our Chief of Staff, said in June that 375,000 men were all we needed "for any eventualities" in the Western Hemisphere. We have never tried volunteering on a 1-year basis with $30-a-month pay as provided in this bill. Secretary of War Woodring said:

> How any fair-minded Member of Congress could say that we have given the voluntary system of enlistment for the United States Army service a fair trial, and that it has broken down, and therefore we need the compulsory service, is beyond my understanding. * * * I am for a trial of voluntary system before changing to the compulsory system.

The Army is now talking about a theoretical initial protective force of 1,200,000 men, resurrecting a figure that was determined by our General Staff before Germany revolutionized warfare and conquered Holland, Belgium, and France with 500,000 men, including a spearhead of only 50,000 mechanized troops, parachutists, and air force.

I cannot see how we can arm and equip the masses we propose to conscript. Mr. William S. Knudsen testified before the Senate Committee:

> It will be 1942 before there will be complete equipment for 750,000 men.

General Marshall has testified that these men will be without Army overcoats or blankets this winter; that barracks have not yet been built; that there will not be enough tanks, antitank guns, mortars, combat planes.

What is our danger? General Marshall said in June:

> We do not visualize any invasion of this country.

I cannot find any military or naval man who will say that there is any possibility of an attempted invasion of our country for years. Nevertheless, we hear dire forebodings of our peril. Ambassador Bullitt says we are worse off than France a year ago. Secretary Stimson says we are worse off than in June 1917. They are never specific in public. Stimson says the necessary information is known to us all. Bullitt implies he has secret information. I have searched the public statements and testimony of responsible officials of the State Department, Army, and Navy, and have talked with them off the record, and I have yet to learn of a single specific statement of how or where or when our country is in danger. They are never specific. They merely say "danger, peril, fear." The same men who preach danger and peril are the men who know the details of our secret working alliance with Great Britain. Therefore it is increasingly clear that conscription is unnecessary for our own defense but is imperative for our part in British-American allied imperialism. The Regular Army and the Navy must be ready to go anywhere; therefore we must have conscripts for our own defense. I oppose the foreign policy that requires this military policy.

This bill is urged as an emergency defense measure for a year, but it lasts 5 years, calls for 10-year service in the Reserves, and states a permanent policy—section 1 (b):

> The Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selective compulsory military training and service.

The House was gagged on the Dirksen amendment, which would have stricken out this statement of policy. Members on their feet were ignored by the Chair when debate was limited.

I oppose this permanent policy for our Republic. We have abhorred it for 150 years. In order to discredit peacetime volunteering, we have been told that volunteering failed in the Civil War and in the World War. The truth is that in the Civil War we had over 2,000,000 volunteers on the Union side and only 46,347 conscripts ever served. In the World War, in spite of the fact that volunteering was practically made impossible after the draft started, 1,163,048 volunteers saw service. While I would be willing to vote for conscription in a modern war, our war history certainly does not prove the need for peacetime conscription as a national policy.

We are urged to profit by the example of the democracies overseas. France, Holland, and Belgium had peacetime conscription—and collapsed in war. Britain alone, that abhorred peacetime conscription, is still fighting. Little Switzerland has universal military training, with the longest period 112 days. We have no such proposal here.

What is the historical record of peacetime conscription? Democratic Athens had it, and gained a tyrant. The Roman Republic had it, and became an empire. Republican France enforced it in 1793, and got Napoleon. Germany practiced it after 1806, and Bismarck followed—then Hitler. History teaches that peacetime conscription cannot guarantee the defense of a country, but that successful, efficient, peacetime compulsory service means military imperialism for the state and loss of liberty for the citizen. We cannot change this inexorable rule of human nature by passing a law saying conscription is compatible with freedom any more than we could legislate temperance or neutrality. When we inflict involuntary servitude as a penalty not for crime but for being a young, healthy, independent American in peacetime, we have made a fundamental and far-reaching change in the way of life of our Republic, and we cannot hope to avoid the inevitable consequences of that change.

Our people are ready for any necessary sacrifice for our defense. That spirit should not be exploited or prostituted. They are asking "What should I do?" Instead of saying, "Volunteer, wherever your services are needed," we are saying, "Sit tight until your number is called." The same patriotic spirit is necessary to make either volunteering or conscription work, for it would be physically impossible to shanghai millions of unwilling draftees. Conscription, to be successful, must be largely voluntary. Volunteering, to be successful, must have an element of popular compulsion behind it.

Then what is the difference? This is the difference: Volunteering emphasizes initiative and consecration, conscription emphasizes resignation and servility. One says, you ought; the other says, you must. One requires an act of the will, the other requires surrender of the will. One is active, the other passive. One is the act of a citizen; the other, the submission of a subject.

The conscription spirit will grow. Neither the soldier conscript nor his master—the Government—will long have patience with volunteer industry or volunteer labor. Here is a form of wealth conscription in this bill that has received little attention. Protection of the conscript against his debts means two things: First, part of the assets, represented by conscripts' loans, of banks, building and loans, finance companies, insurance companies, and other lending institutions will be conscripted, by lot, for the duration of the emergency. This constitutes an inevitable conscription of wealth based purely on chance. Second, the personal credit of every man in the draft-age group will, therefore, be greatly restricted or destroyed. I do not see how the Director of Selective Service can exempt conscripts on the grounds that working for their creditors is "necessary to the maintenance of the national wealth, safety, or interest," and I do not see how those who lend other people's money can safely make loans to men whose ability and duty to repay may be destroyed at any time.

The present plan, as shown by the exemptions and deferments in the bill and as stated privately by Army officers, is to draft the unemployed. Many people approve of this. I doubt whether they have fully considered the consequences of such a policy. Our Government now offers four kinds of jobs to the unemployed young men—the C. C. C., at $30 a month plus "keep"; the N. Y. A., at $3 to $31 a month, part time;

W. P. A., at $31.20 to $94.90 a month; and service in the Army or Navy, beginning at $21 to $30 a month and "keep." There is work to be done in the Army and Navy; we have to make work for the C. C. C., N. Y. A., and W. P. A. Why not encourage volunteering for the military work that needs to be done by making it more attractive and by lowering the attractions for relief jobs? Instead of this, the present plan is to force part of the unemployed into military service, while W. P. A. and the C. C. C. camps are expanding. I am fearful of the consequences of this policy. We will not long remain a house divided, part conscript and part free.

Hitler is more than a military leader. He is head of a world-wide revolution against democracy. Has Hitler won his revolution in America, without firing a shot? Our great leaders endorse involuntary service of men to the state, and seizure of property by the state, conscription of the press and radio for propaganda is proposed in Congress. We are adopting Hitler's methods in the name of stopping Hitler.

I think we have a chance to stay out of war, to continue free, but we take another step toward war and away from freedom when we adopt enforced minority military service now. [Applause.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, some of us are honestly and sincerely interested in two things: First, the national defense, and second, trying to provide for it in such a manner as not to run the risk of militarizing America.

In this section to which this amendment is offered there is, at the top of page 31, language providing punishment for people who "knowingly counsel, aid, or abet others to evade registration or services in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this act." I realize the reason for and importance of this provision. Otherwise you are going to have people, "fifth column" people, Nazis, Communists, and so on, attempting, to the best of their ability, to get people to evade the law. You cannot avoid that, I know, but I do think there is this danger—that that language may be interpreted in such manner that any criticism of the law or even any attempt at an analysis of the law or a speech advocating changes or improvements in it might, by some stretch of the imagination, be considered to be in the category of urging evasion, and I think it ought to be said by somebody here who speaks with authority on the bill that that is not the intention of that language, that it is intended as a specific provision to prevent direct attempts at evasion. Am I correct about that? I would like some member of the committee to tell me if I am.

Mr. THOMASON. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I asked whether that language at the top of page 31 could possibly be interpreted as meaning that anybody who made a speech analyzing this bill or advocating changes in the system here set up or talking about that system would be accused of attempting to aid and abet people to evade the law.

Mr. THOMASON. I suppose it would be possible to have such a construction, but I am also certain that is not the intent of the committee.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am sure it was not.

Mr. THOMASON. I do not believe, speaking for myself, that the language is subject to that construction.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is all I wanted to know, and I thank the gentleman.

Now, about this amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS]. This amendment was adopted by the Senate in the precise language as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS]. What it aims to do, as I understand it, is to prevent people from being tried in courts martial until after they have actually become a part of the military forces of the United States. It seems to me to be a very logical amendment. It says that if a man for some reason, perhaps some reason beyond his control, was not able to report or failed to report at the time he was supposed to report, his case shall be tried in the ordinary courts and not in a court martial. It does not have any effect, as far as I can see, in any way upon discipline in the military forces.

If I am mistaken about that I would like to be corrected, but I cannot see how it will have any effect on that. If I thought it would I would be against the amendment. It seems to me it will simply prevent all the citizens that have to register under this act from being subject to possible trial in courts martial, and I do not think we want to do that. It seems to me the amendment is very reasonable, and that it should be adopted. It was adopted in the Senate of the United States.

I would like to say this much further. It is not so much the things that Congress does in connection with our efforts to provide national defense and do it speedily, as it is the way we do it and the care we exercise in the way we do it. For my part I think the House of Representatives is amply justified in spending 4 or 5 days on this bill in spite of the remarks that have been made in the press. We should have done that on the tax bill. Had we done so we would have sent a better bill to the Senate. Furthermore this may well prove the most important bill ever passed by the American Congress. We ought to guard it just as carefully as we can.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I am just as much opposed to militarism as the gentleman from California or the gentleman from Ohio. I have also had a little bit of experience before courts martial and I am not any too keen about some of them and the way they are conducted, but this goes to the question of morale and discipline. You must lodge authority and power of enforcement somewhere, because I can visualize a situation where some young fellows, perhaps, who do not feel very kindly to this legislation, called before their local board, and then the local board passes upon their cases and orders them into service, and then if this amendment should prevail, if I understand it, those men who refuse could go into the civil courts and tie up final decision for quite a long time. If that happens morale and discipline will be destroyed. If you are going to have a law like this you have to clothe somebody with the power and authority to enforce it and to let these young fellows know they must respond to the call of their country. So I think you are getting on dangerous ground when you take away from this bill, at least, the big stick, if that is what you want to call it, of these men having to face a court martial if the situation is grave and they are willfully trying to evade service.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I am for this bill, but I think we ought to clearly state so there will be no misunderstanding, and state it here in the debate, that there is no intent on the part of this section to abridge the right of citizens to criticize this legislation or to agitate against it.

Mr. THOMASON. I do not think there is a word like that in it or that it is subject to that construction. I know that is not the intention of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not the recollection of the gentleman from Texas that the provision carried in this bill was the provision which prevailed during the selective draft during the World War?

Mr. THOMASON. I think it is almost identical.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman recollect that as an example of that, Bergdoll was tried by court martial?

Mr. THOMASON. Bergdoll is one of the striking illustrations of what might happen if you take away from the War Department and the military authorities the right to say that a man must get into uniform and do his duty. Otherwise you will just have constant confusion if you give that man the right to go to a civil court. Furthermore, it would be the sons of the rich who take advantage of such a situation and poor boys would have little chance.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I think the distinction should be made with regard to the observation made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], that this is peacetime conscription and that you are depriving these draftees of the right of trial by jury even before they become members of the Army.

Mr. THOMASON. I know, but you have to have some kind of discipline. These young men are going to be living under the same rules and regulations as the Regulars and the National Guard men with whom they are in camp. All should be treated alike.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on page 17556 of the RECORD which contains the proceedings of Thursday afternoon, we read the following on the Fish amendment:

> It is proposed to enlist 400,000 men by that time. If you do it and induct these volunteers into service, you simply cannot take care of them. It cannot be done. There will not be sufficient clothing or housing. There will not be cantonments. There will will not be tentage.
> It is impossible for the Department to handle any such number. It is far beyond the plans and hopes of the Department to take in 400,000 men in the next 60 days, plus the 75,000 which they have to take into the Regular Army. That they must go ahead with. That they have planned for. Under the plans of the Department, under this bill, as I tried to explain yesterday, it is planned somewhere near the middle of November, the 8th, 10th, 12th, or 14th, no one can state exactly, to bring not 400,000 men under the draft, but only 75,000. That is what they certainly can take care of at that time. Then a month later, we will say, 100,000. They are going to bring them in in driblets, spread the effort over 3 months' time, so that by approximately the first week or the second week in January they will be able to take care of between 350,000 and 400,000 men.
> This amendment throws a monkey wrench into that whole machinery.

Members of the Committee, those words were spoken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. Mr. WADSWORTH is an able legislator. He has served in both Houses, and he is the sponsor of this bill as well as the spokesman of the proponents of this bill. That statement was a revelation to me—his statement that they could not take care of more than 75,000 men at this time and not until some time in November, 2 months hence. He says, "Do not vote for this amendment. Do not give us 400,000 men in 60 days. We would not know what to do with them."

Now, it has been said that the proponents of the Fish amendment are obstructionists to preparedness and training, and yet here we have a confession that the administration, or the proponents of this bill, to be exact, do not want 400,000 men inside of 60 days because they cannot take care of more than 75,000 men. [Applause.]

They cannot house, clothe, or equip them. It will throw a monkey wrench in their machinery. The Fish amendment offers them 400,000 men in 60 days. They do not want that. They do not want 400,000 men in 60 days. Then I ask you who are the obstructionists on this preparedness and this training program? Is this complicated bill, this bill that takes so much time to understand and to apply, seeking 400,000 men in 60 days or not? If they do not want 400,000 men in 60 days, then this bill is seeking not to have 400,000 men in 60 days. It has some other purpose. What and why? I am going to ask this as a question: If we get 400,000 men in 60 days will it show up the nakedness of the administration? Will it show up still further the deplorable, inefficient unpreparedness of the administration to the Nation? Is this bill a measure to avoid such exposure? Is this an obstructionist plan and is this complicated, un-American, anti-American, peacetime military conscription bill a method to obstruct the raising of an army until after election? This is the question I ask, and I would like to have it answered.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield? I will answer it.

Mr. JONKMAN. No. I decline to yield to the gentleman. I only have 5 minutes.

I repeat, there is no necessity for this complicated legislation with which we find difficulties of application at every stage of the game. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 8 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for 8 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like very much to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. I would also like to have the attention of the distinguished Member the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] and the distinguished author of this bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

I want to discuss again briefly the provision which was discussed at some length yesterday afternoon, which provides definite and specific exemption for Members of Congress and other officers named, from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT], and I introduced similar amendments for the purpose of striking out subsection (b) on page 23 from lines 3 to 9, inclusive. The amendment was overwhelmingly defeated. I believe that by defeating the amendment and retaining the provision providing exemption or deferment we are placing ourselves in a rather ridiculous position. I am sure that we all appreciate the fact that our Government is composed of three separate and distinct divisions, the legislative, judicial, and executive.

Neither branch of the Government has the right to trespass upon or interfere with the other. Each Member of Congress is here, not by virtue of the judgment of any court and not by virtue of Executive order. We are here because we were duly elected by the people of our districts who, in the free exercise of the privilege guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States, have a right at all times to say who shall represent them in this body. If the people of a particular congressional district want a young man to represent them in Congress they have a perfect right to elect a young man. If the people of any particular congressional district want either a young man, an old man, or a woman to represent them in Congress, they have a perfect right in the exercise of the privileges of free men, to select a person of their own choice to represent them here in Congress. When a Member of Congress is once elected and enters upon his duties there are only four ways that he can cease to be a Member: First, by being defeated at the polls; second, by voluntary resignation; third, by impeachment; fourth, by death. And no branch of the Government—the executive, judicial, or the legislative—itself can deprive the people of any congressional district of their right to have the person of their choice to represent them in this body so long as the person duly elected by them conducts himself properly in the performance of his duties and remains loyal to the oath which is administered to him upon becoming a Member of Congress. Congress, even by a unanimous vote, does not have the right to confer upon or to vest in any selection board or in any commission or in any person or group of persons the right to take any Member of this House away from his post of duty and to put him into a training camp or even to compel him to serve in the armed forces of the Nation.

If we have a right to fix the age limit and to draft or exempt, according to our own best judgment in the matter, why could we not lift the age limit to 65 or even 75 years of age and turn over to the executive branch of the Government and to selection boards the right to call into the armed forces of the Nation every Member of Congress and even every member of the Supreme Court of the United States and of all of the inferior courts, thereby placing in the hands of the Executive the right to destroy the judicial and legislative branches of our Government? No one would suggest a thing as foolish or as absurd as this. Therefore, I want to make the point that even if we sought by affirmative action to subject Members of Congress to the call and to the control of the executive branch of the Government, we could not, under our Constitution, do so.

We have at least one Member of this body who perhaps has no dependents; he is within the age limit provided by this bill and so far as I know he has no other exemption other than that immunity from service which is guaranteed by the organic law of the land, and you and I know and he knows that even without a specific exemption he would not, against his own will, be subjected to induction into the military forces of the Nation. Would any Member of this House have the audacity to suggest that the military authority vested by this or other legislation would be superior to the constitutional rights of free people to have and to keep their duly chosen Representative upon the post of duty here upon the floor of this House? Yet, with all of the immunity and protection afforded Members of Congress by our Constitution and system of Government this House is about to provide additional protection which is neither wanted nor needed. Are you not willing to rest upon the constitutional immunity inherent in your rights as Members of Congress? Is not constitutional immunity and security sufficient to protect you from the judicial or executive branches of the Government or even from the military forces of the Nation? Why do you seek to provide an additional storm shelter to which you could flee? Why do you seek to impress upon the people the importance of your own positions when they themselves well know and understand just how important your position here in this House is at this critical time? If this specific exemption is stricken from the bill are you afraid that the military forces of the Nation will march upon the Capitol and take from the legislative branch of the Government those duly chosen to represent the people of the different congressional districts of the country? In wrapping this additional cloak of immunity around your shoulders you are merely subjecting Members of Congress to the harsh criticism of cowardice.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield briefly.

Mr. MOTT. If I identify correctly the Member the gentleman indicates, he would be within the provisions of this bill, because he has no dependents. I think I know who the gentleman means, and I am going to take this occasion to inform the gentleman, if he does not already know it, that the Member is an officer in the Naval Reserve and would immediately go into active service upon the declaration of war.

Mr. COOLEY. That may be true; but the point I want to get across to this Committee, as you sit here and vote upon this absurd provision, is that no Member of Congress can be taken out of this body except in one of four ways: By defeat at the hands of his constituents, by voluntary resignation, by death, or by impeachment.

The gentleman to whom I referred a moment ago as coming within the provisions of this bill is perhaps the youngest Member of this body, the gentleman from Texas, LINDLEY BECKWORTH, a young man who is loved and admired by the entire membership of the House. He has well and faithfully represented the people of his district. He is a patriotic and loyal American citizen and a man of whom his constituents may be justly proud. He has represented his district with ability and great distinction. He is conscientious and diligent in the performance of his congressional duties. He has recently been renominated, if I remember correctly, by a vote of approximately 4 to 1. The people of his district have a right to insist upon his remaining in the high position to which they have elected him, and no branch of this Government or officer thereof has a right to deprive them of his valuable services here.

We saw him, along with the rest of us, vote for the Whittington amendment, the purpose of which was to eliminate Members of Congress from the section providing deferment from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States. He voted just as I did for the Boren amendment which was similar to the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] and likewise similar to the amendment which I introduced, the purpose of which was to strike from the bill subsection (b) on page 23, the section which seeks to provide additional protection for Members of Congress and other officers therein named.

We are not engaged in war. We are not drafting men for the purpose of sending them immediately to the fields of carnage. I do not even believe that our Nation is in imminent danger. We are now only preparing for any emergency or eventuality which may arise. Should Congress declare war then will be the time for my young friend from Texas and other Members of Congress to decide upon the course of their own conduct. Certainly no one would be justified in suggesting that a Member of Congress should now resign and abandon the post to which his constituents have elected him, but all agree that each Member of Congress should continue in the performance of the duties which are here imposed upon him. We neither have a right to subject Members of Congress to military training nor to subject them to embarrassment by causing them to embrace a provision such as the one I have been discussing; yet if the provision is retained in the bill I expect to vote for it, and I am sure that my friend from Texas will likewise vote for it, and other Members of the House will vote for it, hoping that it will be stricken out of the bill in conference.

Can it be seriously suggested here that but for this additional immunity, exemption or deferment provided in this bill Justice Douglas could be taken by a selection board from the Supreme Court of the United States, put into a uniform and into an Army camp? Would anyone suggest that without this provision military officers could take all of the qualified judges now serving in the various courts of the country and subject them to military training and thereby disrupt the orderly processes of the civil law? And last but not least, would anyone be foolish enough to believe that but for this provision even Governors of sovereign States could be taken into custody by military officers of the Federal Government and confined to an Army post under strict military discipline? I merely mention all of this for the purpose of pointing out the absurdity of attempting to provide additional protection for those now performing vital governmental functions. Why are not Members of Congress willing to accept the immunity provided by the fundamental and organic law of the land?

This provision is unnecessary and the protection it seeks to provide is wholly unnecessary. Why should you say by legislative enactment to the Members of both Houses of Congress and to those engaged in the performance of duties vital to the life and welfare of the Government that they have a right to waive their exemption, that they have a right to resign their positions? Do you not know that every individual affected by this provision well knows that he has a right to resign his position and go into training and to join the armed forces of the Nation? By telling them that they can resign you are only telling them what they already know.

I want this Committee and this Congress to look this provision squarely in the face and I hope very much that it may be stricken from this bill.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. I want to join the gentleman in condemning that section of this bill which specifically exempts from military training and service various Federal and State officials in the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of the Government, including Members of Congress. I cannot speak for other officials or for other Members of Congress, but I want the RECORD to show my opposition to any special exemption for Members of Congress from the provisions of this act and my support of the gentleman's amendment and the amendments offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT].

Mr. COOLEY. I thank the gentleman for his observations.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. Is there any provision that would keep the proponents of this section who are seeking this storm shelter from going out and volunteering their services any time they desired, or would there be any objection to their doing so?

Mr. COOLEY. Of course, they could volunteer.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman surely has not been cajoled into that frame of mind——

Mr. COOLEY. I hope the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman has not been cajoled into that frame of mind where he thinks that if every Member of Congress, regardless of age, were subject to military service there would be such an exodus from this Chamber into the Army that we could not get a quorum, has he?

Mr. COOLEY. I do not care to discuss that point with the gentlemen. I am just taking the position that you, as intelligent Members of Congress, know that neither the legislative branch of this Government, nor the judicial, nor the executive, has the right to deprive your constituents of your services here in this House; yet you are not willing to rest in the ease and security of that constitutional immunity, but seek to provide an additional shelter.

As well as I can and in all earnestness I am trying to speak to the intelligence of the Members of this House.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I have just been informed by one of my colleagues that what I said a few minutes ago was not entirely correct. The Member I had in mind and the Member the gentleman has in mind are not the same person; so my remarks do not apply.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I earnestly and in all seriousness ask the Committee to again consider the desirability of striking out subsection (b) on page 23.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURDICK. I have had an amendment pending at the desk for 2 days. Would the request now submitted by the gentleman from Texas preclude the consideration of my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair informs the gentleman from North Dakota that we have not yet reached the section of the bill to which the gentleman's amendment is to be offered.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman amend his request to provide that at the expiration of the 10 minutes' time the amendment may be read in its context so the Committee may know what they are considering?

Mr. THOMASON. I think that would be good.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request?

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes and that at the close of the 10-minute debate the amendment may be reread by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the committee desire any time?

Mr. THOMASON. The committee does not desire any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma for 5 minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio will, in my judgment, absolutely destroy and undo the very purpose of section 10, which provides that in cases of persons subject to this act who fail to report for duty in the land or naval forces as ordered, the military and naval courts martial shall have concurrent jurisdiction of offenses arising out of such failure. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio knocks out that provision and substitutes in its stead a provision that these military and naval courts martial shall have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Chairman, here is the absurdity of it. Suppose that a man A has been drawn and called into the service for training. We have no war on now and I hope we will not have any. Do you know what this amendment will do to the bill? I will not say that probably this will happen, but I will tell you what will be the result if the opposition wanted that result to occur, and I do not mean Republicans. I mean the opposition that exists in this country to the Government of the United States. The bundists could take advantage of this amendment, if it were adopted, and absolutely stop the induction of every boy or man in the United States that might be called under the provisions of this act. If you want that done then we are safe in voting for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, which takes away the right of military and naval courts martial to try these men who have been selected and called in for training purposes. Why, a bundist could come in here and make bonds for them and appeal every single case and thus defeat and prevent every boy and every man in America from going into the service until at the end of such time as might be required to end the law suit, the injunction or whatever may be the action taken to save him from doing his duty to the Government of the United States, and I remind you that there would be an individual case for each individual man.

Mr. Chairman, it is a dangerous proposition. I do not like to get up here every few minutes to make a speech, and I do not often do that, but this is a very serious thing. It is serious for us and it is serious for our Government. We ought to be more careful and not go ahead and adopt an amendment that will be so destructive to the purposes of this bill that, if agreed to, we might just as well have no bill.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. If I thought the gentleman was right I would be against this amendment, but I read the Senate debates on it. The Senate adopted this amendment and I cannot believe it is going to lead to any such result as the gentleman fears.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment. First, may I say that some of the fiercest militarists in this House are those who never served in the Army and who know nothing about it and of course they have never been up against a military court. I have acted as the judge advocate of an Army general court martial and I have been called upon to prosecute cases similar to the ones that would come under this bill. I want to tell you about one somewhat similar case which, because of the fact that the Army Court Martial Manual and the regulations of the Army are so strict, could not be dealt with otherwise than the way we handled it.

This involved a young man from War Eagle, W. Va., the district represented by one of the Members of this Congress. This young man was inducted into the service in the last war under the last draft. He received a message from home one day in the spring of 1919 that he should come home because of illness in the family. He had to have that message read to him because he himself could neither read nor write.

He received a 3-day leave of absence and went home. He did not show up at the end of 3 days, after which time he was marked "Absent without leave." At the end of 30 days he was marked as a deserter. Notice was sent to the sheriff of the town in which he lived. He was brought into the court in which I was acting as judge advocate, charged with desertion. When the case was finally brought to trial, and I want to say it was very difficult to get the facts from this young man as he was one of those very reticent mountaineers, it was found that instead of his being an unmarried man he had been married several years, although he was only 21 years of age. He had a 2-year-old child and was about to have another one in the family. At the end of his leave he said that he did not see that there was much of anything doing in the Army about any war or any shooting of guns, at which he was an expert, so he decided he would mend the fences because his wife was not able to. He stayed a little longer, he said, and he reckoned he might as well do a little needed work at home, and when they needed him to come back to the Army they would come and tell him.

Mr. Chairman, it was necessary for that Army court, under the laws of the Army, to convict that splendid but ignorant man of desertion and to give him a dishonorable discharge from the Army. The best thing we could do under Army law was to give him only 1 day in jail and one dollar's pay as his punishment, aside from the dishonorable discharge.

There may be thousands of cases like that which occurred over the United States through absolute ignorance on the part of the person who was inducted into the service, and I do not propose that any more of these men be subjected to the rigid laws of the Army in cases of that sort than is necessary. I therefore believe the amendment should be adopted to give the man his last chance in the civil courts of the United States before he becomes subject to the military courts of the United States, particularly in time of peace.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does the gentleman understand what apparently some members of the committee do not understand, that the jurisdiction of courts martial is not limited by this amendment? Under my amendment the courts martial are given their powers if a man is subject to their jurisdiction, but the question of whether a man is still a civilian or not is left to the civil courts, with the right of jury trial.

Mr. HINSHAW. I believe that every man should be given his last chance in a civil court before he has to be called before a military court, for the laws and the evidence and the procedure in the military courts are very much different from what they are in the civil courts. Certainly in time of peace when men are to be inducted into the Army for training purposes they should be given every last chance under the civil laws.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. As I understand, this amendment would not cover a situation such as the gentleman has described, where the man had already been inducted.

Mr. HINSHAW. He had been inducted, but whether he had or not, the man could not either read or write.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. He could not be tried in the civil court.

Mr. HINSHAW. That may be; but until a man has had a chance to learn something of military law and customs—many of our people are still uneducated—he should be given a chance under the more lenient civil laws, certainly until he is in uniform. There are lots of cases like that that should be taken care of in the civil courts and not in the military courts. In times of peace it is absolutely essential that the civil rights of the people be protected to the very last bulwark.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Under the existing provisions of the bill, any person who is subject to registration under this bill comes under the military court martial.

Mr. HINSHAW. He comes under the military court martial, even before he has been inducted. He comes under the military court as soon as his orders to report are issued.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

The Clerk again reported the Vorys amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VORYS of Ohio) there were—ayes 70, noes 104.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. VORYS of Ohio and Mr. THOMASON.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 120, noes 131.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. (a) The President is authorized—

(1) to prescribe the necessary regulations to carry this act into effect;

(2) to create and establish a selective-service system, and shall provide for the classification of registrants on the basis of availability for training and service and shall establish civilian local boards and such other civilian agencies, including appeal boards and agencies of appeal, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. There shall be created one or more local boards in each county or political subdivisions corresponding thereto of each State, Territory, the District of Columbia, and the possessions of the United States. Each local board shall consist of three or more members to be appointed by the President, from recommendations made by the respective Governors or comparable executive officials, none of which local board members shall be members of the armed forces, and each member must be a civilian and a citizen of the United States residing in the subdivision or area in which the respective local board will have jurisdiction under the rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Such local boards shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to the right of appeal to the appeal boards herein authorized, all questions of exemption or deferment from training and service under this act and all questions of or claims for inclusion for training or exemption or deferment from training and service of all individuals within the jurisdiction of such local boards under the rules and regulations prescribed by the President. The decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. The appeal boards and agencies of appeal shall be created within the selective-service system and persons comprising such appeal boards and such agencies shall be civilians and citizens of the United States. No person who is an officer, member, agent, or employee of the selective-service system or of the local or appeal boards or other agencies provided for in this act or any regulations pursuant thereto, shall be exempt from registration, or deferred if qualified and eligible, from training and service as provided for in this act;

(3) to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and fix the compensation of a Director of Selective Service, who shall be directly responsible to him, and to appoint and fix the compensation of such other officers, agents, and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act;

(4) to utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and subdivisions thereof, in the execution of this act, and to require of each the performance of such duties as he directs; and

(5) to have done such printing, including advertising, binding, and blank-book work in such public or private printing establishments or binderies as he may designate, and to obtain such office equipment for the selective-service system as may be necessary in his discretion to carry out the provisions of this act, with or without advertisements or formal contract.

The Chief of Finance, United States Army, is hereby designated, empowered, and directed to act as the fiscal, disbursing, and accounting agent of the Director of Selective Service in carrying out the provisions of this act.

(b) All officers and agents and persons designated or appointed by the President, or under regulations prescribed by him, shall have full authority for all acts performed by them in the execution of this act by the direction of the President. In the administration of this act voluntary services may be accepted. Correspondence necessary in the execution of this act may be carried in official penalty envelopes.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, the committee offers a perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. THOMASON: On page 34, line 6, after "obtain", insert "by purchase, loan, or gift"; in the same line, after the word "such", strike out the word "office"; and in the same line, after the word "equipment", insert the words "and supplies."

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, the Procurement Division has said that the bill does not provide for the use of old typewriters and other equipment, and this is merely a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMISTON: On page 32, line 11, after the comma, insert "a majority of whom shall be veterans of an American war."

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment in the Committee on Military Affairs and it was defeated by the committee. I still believe it is a good amendment and should be in this bill. It merely provides that a majority of the members of the local board shall be veterans of an American war. I believe that a great many Governors will probably put World War veterans on these boards.

May I say in the beginning that I do not believe we veterans are all of the patriotic citizens of this country, and I do not want to imply that, but I do believe that experience is a good teacher and that the mistakes that were made by the local boards in the last war, that had to be put up with by those of us who were in the Army, will not be made again by men who had the experience of having to deal with what I believe were the errors that were made. In my opinion, it will save the Government a great deal of money. Many men who were passed by the local draft boards were absolutely unfit for service in the last war. The local communities would want to get rid of a man and they would pass him through the board and he would get in the Army. Many of them were put in the Army in this manner.

When these men are drafted, they should be classified intelligently and placed in occupations about which they know something, such as those they occupied in civil life. They should be placed in occupations along that same line when they are in the service. In the last war, if you called for a barber he would probably have been a blacksmith in civil life, and if you wanted a sapper they would send you a bookkeeper. There was no intelligence displayed in the way they classified the men after drafting them. I believe that if a majority of the members of these boards were ex-service men, who have had that experience, they would do a better job and save the Government a great deal of money.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. I was in the Army in the last war, and am, of course, interested in this phase of it; but how could the Government know the different set-ups that would be found in each district, and how can we legislate so as to determine, regardless of that, who would be the best men in any district? It seems to me impossible for us to go that far down and intelligently legislate as to who shall compose the several boards in each district.

Mr. EDMISTON. I am not saying who they should be; I am just saying a majority of them should be veterans.

Mr. PATRICK. But the personnel from whom these draft boards will be chosen would necessarily be the best men and the most available men.

Mr. EDMISTON. In my experience, the veterans, having had that experience, will get better men through the local board than men without military experience.

Mr. PATRICK. Is not that going a long way for us, legislating for the locality?

Mr. EDMISTON. I do not believe so. We are certainly legislating for the locality in this whole bill.

Mr. PATRICK. But I mean the behavior in taking the men, that is, the man who sits around the home fires and takes them in.

Mr. EDMISTON. No; I believe this amendment will save money and it will get you better men and improve the bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHORT: Page 32, line 10, after the word "board", insert the following: "shall be bipartisan"; and on page 33, line 2, after the word "President", strike out the remainder of line 2, all of lines 3 to 8, inclusive, and the words "the United States" in line 9, and insert the following: "there shall be created in each State, Territory, the District of Columbia, and the possessions of the United States one or more appeal boards to which appeals may be taken from decisions of local boards in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Such appeal boards shall be bipartisan and shall be appointed in the same manner and possess the same qualifications provided for members of local boards."

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, if this is a patriotic and not a political measure, I do not see how any man could have objection to the amendment that I have offered.

I regret that there is a disposition on the part of some people throughout our country and even, perhaps, Members of the House or of the executive branch of the Government, to brand any man who opposes this measure as a "fifth columnist," or as unpatriotic or as un-American. It cannot be repeated too often, sir, that this bill was introduced into the Senate by an antinew dealer who has been purged and that it has been introduced into this House by a Republican Member of this House. Certainly, it is unfair to brand certain Democrats over there, who oppose this bill out of their own intellectual convictions and out of their conscience, as being unpatriotic.

This amendment that I have offered, I think, will allay a lot of criticism that will be given in certain sections of the United States to the measure. I regret that a so-called former Republican, who is your candidate for the Vice Presidency of the United States, Lord Corn-Wallace [laughter], as late as yesterday, out in Illinois, branded the Republicans as obstructionists to national defense.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that while Mr. Wallace was spending billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money to knock poor, little, innocent pigs in the head and to plow cotton under, at the very time the President said that one-third of our people were "ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed," and while this administration, under the guise of relief and philanthropy, was spending billions of dollars of the taxpayers' funds on boondoggling, pump-priming projects, counting rats and trees, measuring chorus girls, building dog pounds and monkey houses, digging useless ditches across Florida, and foolishly attempting to harness the moonbeams and tides up at Passamaquoddy Bay, many of the Members of this House, both Republicans and Democrats, were pleading as long as 5 years ago for this Nation to purchase and store up strategic war materials such as tin, rubber, and manganese. And as the records of the Committee on Military Affairs will show, as long as 5 years ago, I advocated that we purchase not only these strategic materials but some very necessary items such as lead and zinc down in the Ozarks that are mined in my district [laughter and applause], because they do not rot and they do not rust. It ill behooves the Vice-Presidential nominee of your party to brand any man who opposes this particular measure, which he feels to be unnecessary at this time and dictatorial and un-American, breaking all precedents by setting up a wartime economy in time of peace, as unpatriotic or as being against national defense.

I repeat, sir, what I have said here at least three or four times this week. The opponents of this particular measure are just as loyal to their country and patriotic to the flag and are just as much concerned and anxious to see that this country has adequate national defense as any proponents of this measure. Indeed, if this administration had spent only a small portion of the billions it has squandered on foolish projects for national defense we would not have this bill before us today. All that I have done is simply to offer an amendment that will make these local draft boards bipartisan, and the administration can still name two of these members from the majority party and one from the minority party; and, Members of Congress, we have lived under a two-party system of government for 150 years, which is essential to the preservation of democracy. You are passing this bill in order to preserve democracy, yet in order to preserve it you would abandon it; in order to save your liberty you would crucify it upon this altar of military conscription and one-party government. Vote against my amendment and the American people will know who is partisan and which party is playing politics with this bill.

The amendment I offer on page 33, line 2, beginning with the sentence in line 2 and ending with the sentence in line 9, simply makes mandatory, instead of discretionary, that the President establish appeal boards. As this bill is now written, certain local boards are established, and the decisions of those local boards shall be final except when an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Unless my amendment is adopted, the President can preclude the right of appeal. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, if my friend from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] had stopped at the end of his first minute, I would have been pretty well convinced that this amendment might have some merit to it, and I was disposed to support it, but after listening to him and his tirade of abuse against the Democratic candidate for Vice President during the last 4 minutes, I am convinced that his amendment is purely political and provides him with the vehicle he always employs to give expression to his political spleen and hate. That is the only inference that can be drawn from what the gentleman had to say and his uncalled-for abuse of Secretary Wallace. By what stretch of the imagination does Secretary Wallace have anything to do with the personnel of local draft boards? This is a patriotic rather than a political bill. We are facing a crisis and ought to think and vote as Americans rather than politicians. The gentleman provokes the issue, and if he is determined to pitch the debate on that low plane, I am willing to meet it.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. The candidate for the Vice-Presidency is abusing the Members of Congress who oppose this bill as obstructionists to national defense. He started it.

Mr. THOMASON. I have not heard of him abusing the Members of Congress any more than the newly converted Democrat, Mr. Willkie, who is the Republican candidate for President. Certainly he has not changed his position half as often. [Applause.] If I were to go back over the political history of this country, I would have no trouble in reaching the conclusion that the candidate for President on the Republican ticket has changed his position on nearly everything that affects human life more than any man in either private or public affairs. [Applause.] He has changed his name, or at least the spelling of it. When he went to the University of Indiana he spent 2 or 3 years fighting fraternities and turned out to be the biggest fraternity man in the university. From an ardent barb fighting the battles of the poor and downtrodden university boys he became the great fraternity leader. When he went back to his little home town he was the plaintiffs' lawyer fighting for the rights of the underprivileged. He was known as a good damage-suit lawyer. From that he graduated into a corporation lawyer and became counsel and president of one of the greatest utility corporations in America. He changed from Democrat to Republican.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman is not discussing the amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMASON. I think it comes with poor grace from the gentleman from Wisconsin to make a point of order about anybody not discussing an amendment. [Laughter.] The gentleman has never been in the RECORD in his life. Why did you not raise a point of order against the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], who started this fight? You just cannot take it.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. If Wendell Willkie has changed his position faster than Roosevelt, he is going some. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. THOMASON. He has come out for nearly everything Roosevelt stands for, if that is what you mean.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. THOMASON. Willkie has come out for Roosevelt's foreign policy. He has come out for the reciprocal-trade agreements. He has praised Secretary Wallace and his farm program, in spite of the abuse of the gentleman from Missouri. He has come out for this very draft bill which the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Wisconsin are fighting so bitterly. He comes out now for rural electrification. He approves the sale of the destroyers to England. Last week he was against conscription of wealth, and this week he is for it. At the rapid rate he is moving, I predict before election day he will come out for the third term. [Laughter and applause.]

I can understand what a bitter pill and keen disappointment he must be to you old-line, sincere Republicans. If he keeps talking and changing the way he has done the last month you will not even carry Maine and Vermont. Landon will stand out as the fastest horse in your racing stable.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. ELSTON. Aside from all the political considerations, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas, whom I consider a very good lawyer, if the language on page 33—

> The decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe—

Does not repose in the President, and in the President only, the power to create a court of appeal?

Mr. THOMASON. Perhaps so, but after all, if you cannot trust the Governors of your States and the people of the local communities to see to it that high-class, honorable citizens are placed upon these boards, who will do their patriotic duty without regard to politics, then I fear for the result of this legislation. I also fear for the future of America. [Applause.]

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THOMASON. No; I do not yield further. I did not intend to refer to politics, but my friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], just forced me into it. The roll call on this bill will prove an interesting and historic document. I know the people will watch with unusual interest the vote of that fine gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the Republican leader of this House and now the chairman of the Republican National Committee. This vote will disclose the politics in this bill, and who is playing it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMASON. I thank the gentleman, but I do not know just what more I can say. I had not intended to speak. I would like to support some fair amendment along this line but since my friend, the gentleman from Missouri

[Mr. SHORT], makes it purely and wholly political, I accept his challenge. I am ready and willing, however, to close the book regarding any politics in this bill. My interest is in national defense and national preparedness. The world is on fire and each of us, regardless of his political faith, has a patriotic duty to perform. I want action and I want it now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. I just wanted to ask the gentleman whether or not it would be possible to get a bipartisan board in some portions of the country?

Mr. THOMASON. I know places in the country where you could not find a Republican to serve on the boards, and there will be still fewer after November. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am indeed surprised that the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], for whom I have the highest regard and respect and who knows as much as anyone else about the pending legislation, would permit himself to soar off into oratory upon a matter that does not affect or pertain to the amendment that is offered at this time.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. If I have time I will yield later.

Mr. THOMASON. I did not want to ask a question. I was simply trying to answer my friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], who started the show.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Well, regardless of who started it, let us discuss this amendment. I do not think this is the time nor the place to inject your feelings concerning the candidates for the Presidency. Why not do that some other time?

This amendment attempts, to some extent at least, to take politics out of the measure. It simply provides for a bipartisan local board. That is all. It just makes sure that whatever board is appointed will not be partisan. Certainly there cannot be anything wrong or unfair about that. The board is going to have a lot of authority as well as responsibility. Your good common sense will tell you that by all means this board should be nonpolitical. Everyone of you ought to be for it.

Now, the other part of this amendment provides for a board to which appeals may be made from the decisions of the local board; and further provision is made that these appeal boards "shall be bipartisan and shall be appointed in the same manner and possess the same qualifications provided for the members of the local boards." What is there about such an amendment that can possibly be unreasonable? The present bill says:

> The decisions of such local boards shall be final, except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulatons as the President may prescribe.

It further says:

> The appeal boards and agencies of appeal shall be created within the selective-service system, and persons composing such appeal boards and such agencies shall be civilians and citizens of the United States.

Just look at that paragraph for a minute. It says the decisions of the local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Tell me, if you will, why in the world you want to place this power in the hands of the President, or why he should want it? There are a good many of you on the majority side of the House, as well as a lot of them on the left side of the aisle, who realize that we have already placed a great deal of power and authority in the hands of the President which we would like to recall if we could do it.

Now, this afternoon you are going still further and placing in the hands of the President the right to determine the question of how such appeals are to be handled from the local boards. All in the world we are asking is that you make this measure just a little more democratic. That is all. If there is anything unfair about this amendment, I would like to have you point it out to me. You just cannot do it. The distinguished gentleman from Texas who has charge of the bill and who spent his time on other matters certainly did not point out any reason why this amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Of course, all we are asking is that it be made bipartisan.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is right.

Mr. SHORT. But the opponents of this amendment absolutely want it all partisan. The bill as it reads at the top of page 33 does not set up an appeal board. The language reads:

> Decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

Under this language the President can preclude the right of appeal, but under the language that I have offered he cannot, for it reads:

> There shall be created in each State, Territory—

And so forth—

> one or more special boards to which appeals may be taken from decisions of the local boards in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

The language of the bill is discretionary. The language of my amendment is mandatory. I can see no politics about it, but some gentlemen who laugh today, who live in close districts, will weep after November if they vote against this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. REES of Kansas. Let me get in one more word before my time expires. Laying aside all questions about Vice Presidential and Presidential candidates and adjourning politics in accordance with the suggestion made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas a few days ago, who is in charge of the bill under consideration—I don't believe there is anyone who can tell us, according to the terms of this bill, just how an appeal can be taken from the decision of the local board. We will not know until the President provides the rules and regulations.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman's position is very fair, and it occurs to me that it is unfortunate that politics should enter into the question.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, but I yielded for a question. If the gentleman has a question, I wish he would ask it.

Mr. McCORMACK. The thought that enters my mind is that the Governors will appoint bipartisan boards.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Certainly, I think the boards ought to be bipartisan. I want to make it mandatory, and put it in the bill just that way. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to support such a proposition and I hope he will vote for it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the Governor of any State, no matter who he is, will, as far as he possibly can, select the best men for the appeals board.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yielded for a question.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman asked for an observation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. No; I yielded for a question.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think we can place some confidence in the President and the Governors.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Certainly, I also have confidence in Governors and I have a lot of confidence in Presidents—but I do not think Congress, who is responsible for this legislation, should yield a lot of power and authority into the hands of the Presidents and Governors that could be misused and misapplied, when we may as well take care of it in this law. There has been a lot of talk on the floor of the House about keeping politics out of this bill. I am for that idea 100 percent and that is just what this amendment will do. Mr. Chairman, I ask any Member on the floor to tell me wherein there is anything wrong, unreasonable, or unfair about this amendment. This is one amendment which ought to be supported by the majority of this House and there should not be any votes against it. I do not think anyone who may take the floor after I have concluded will be able to point out one good or sufficient reason for the rejection of this amendment. I hope you will see fit to adopt it, and trust there will not be any more oratory about Presidential candidates but that you will stick to a discussion of this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. I would like to see if we cannot reach an agreement on time on this section. Can we agree on 20 minutes?

Mr. HOFFMAN. To this entire section? No; I think not.

Mr. THOMASON. Then I will limit it to this amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this particular amendment now pending and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want to, I know the Chairman does not want to cut off anybody who wants to debate this amendment. I should like 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio is on his feet and has been recognized. There are others also who would like time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that in the partisan discussion which followed the offering of the amendment by the gentleman from Missouri some of the extraordinary features of this section of the bill have been overlooked. If the members of the committee will examine carefully the provisions of this section they will find that as to a local board the appointment shall be made from recommendations submitted by the Governors of the respective States, or comparable executive officials, but there is no such provision in the bill with respect to the appointment of boards of appeal. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is not adopted, several things will be possible. In the first place the President may decide not to appoint any boards of appeal at all. In the second place, if he does decide to appoint boards of appeal he is not compelled to make selections of the members of such boards from recommendations submitted to him by the Governors of the States or comparable executive officials but may make those appointments directly. Consider for a moment the unusual and extraordinary power granted to the President if this amendment is not adopted.

As the bill now reads, the President, and the President only, has the power to create a board of appeals if he sees fit to do so. If he decides to avail himself of this unusual power and creates a board of appeals, he may then exercise another extraordinary power and make such rules and regulations as he chooses for the government of such board. Matters which may be taken before a board of appeals are as serious to those who are affected as most questions which are taken before courts of appeals.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELSTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is absolutely right, only the President could go further. This bill does not dignify these appeal agencies with the name "board," it just calls them an agency. It does not use the word "board" at all.

Mr. ELSTON. Whether it be called a board or an agency, the fact remains that if this bill passes as it reads at the present time, the President will be authorized to create what is the equivalent of courts of appeals, and may then dictate his own rules for their conduct. A dictator would scarcely ask for more power. So I ask the Members of the House to treat this amendment in an entirely nonpartisan light. If you will do so, I believe you will not hesitate to adopt it. Members on both sides of the House have repeatedly said that they want this measure to be treated in a nonpartisan manner. Now is your opportunity to prove the truth of those assertions. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I am becoming a little bit worn out with hearing the President continually charged with some sort of deep, sinister, ulterior motive which nobody seems to know what it is, that on some dark night or for some unstated reason he is going to do something to punish a lot of the American people under the provisions of this act, or that he has some sinister motive in wanting to throw this country into war, or that he has some sinister idea of something that will get him some gain by sending draftees under the provisions of this bill to South or Central America, or that he would want to staff the local boards with some kind of peculiar people. What for? What could he gain? Under the provisions of this act he does not appoint the members of the local boards. He appoints them, yes, but you have thrown every safeguard around them. He can only appoint those men who are recommended by whom? The Governor of the State.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I want to make a brief statement that if the President wanted to appoint a member of a draft board in New England he would have to take the recommendation of a Republican Governor.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is my point exactly. You Republicans have not anything to worry about. You have a pretty generous scattering of Governors throughout the United States, more I think than you will have after November unless your conclusions are right, and in the event you are right, why, then, you will have more Republican Governors and they will name the boards. Following the time-honored principles of the Republican Party, they will never recommend a single Democrat on a single board. On the other hand, when it comes to the appeal boards, what are you scared of? The President has not done so darn bad by you in appointments already. He will take pretty good care of you if he maintains his past record on Republican appointments.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think another answer is that this bill is not administration sponsored but is sponsored by a Democrat in the Senate, who is opposed to the New Deal, and by a Republican in the House.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is not supporting President Roosevelt for reelection.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am not so sure of that.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Now, having said all that, tell us what there is wrong with this amendment making these boards bipartisan.

Mr. NICHOLS. There is nothing wrong in making the board bipartisan except there are a lot of places in this country where you could not find enough Republicans who are willing to admit they are Republicans to appoint on the board. Of course, I am sorry that the gentleman from Kansas has had his feelings hurt by the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Texas would dare to inject any politics into this discussion. Is that not awful? Of course, no Republican today has engaged in any political discussion, not even the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes, but I think this amendment should be discussed on its merits.

Mr. NICHOLS. Somebody ought to inject a little politics. I notice Mr. Willkie's agricultural plank this morning. He is going to propose a tax on farmers which will only tax the farmers when the farmers have made a profit on their crop. Is that not the silliest thing you ever heard of? Why, does he think the people of the United States are that silly? No, they are not going to fall for that, and if you do not shut that baby up, he is not going to have any votes when the November election comes around. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to discuss politics, and this is only the second time that you have heard me mention it on the floor, but if it has got to be done I am just dying to take part in it, because that is right down my alley. I will tell you another thing: The man does not live who can survive two press conferences a day, and that is what Willkie is having at the present time. He has requested two press conferences a day, and if you Republicans want any votes at all in November you had better reduce these to none, or have some smart person censor his statements.

Now back to Mr. Willkie's agricultural tax program, the program proposed by the great self-styled Indiana dirt farmer who plows from his overstuffed swiveled chair in the executive offices of Commonwealth & Southern Utilities Co. Is he not a good enough student of government to know that the Congress cannot pass laws affecting the State and counties' right to levy and collect property taxes? And being a great dirt farmer does he not further know that farmers do not pay income taxes? They do not earn enough money. Only those people who are fortunate enough to have incomes the size of Mr. Willkie's pay this sort of tax. The only tax generally that the farmer pays is a property tax levied by the county or State, or some form of excise tax, such as sales taxes also levied by the State or a subdivision thereof, and that under no stretch of the imagination could the Federal Government, by Federal legislation, regulate either the levying or the collection of these taxes.

If this is a sample of Mr. Willkie's knowledge of the tax system in vogue in the United States, then God forbid that he ever be the Chief Executive of these United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on this amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHORT) there were—ayes 93, noes 152.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD show that the entire Democratic delegation, with three exceptions, voted against the last amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a proper parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: On page 34, line 1, insert a semicolon after the word "Act"; strike out the remainder of line 1 through the semicolon in line 2.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I owe an apology to the members of the Committee on Military Affairs for not calling their attention to this matter before this. It has been in my mind for some time, and I am partially to blame because it was in the original bill as I introduced it.

I call attention to paragraph 4 of this section, which commences on page 33, line 22. It authorizes the President of the United States—

To utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and subdivisions thereof, in the execution of this act and to require of each the performance of such duties as he directs.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, the President may not require the performance of a duty from a State officer. He may accept the cooperation of a State officer.

In the interest of clarity and in another little effort toward the preservation of our form of government, I propose to strike out the language after the word "act", on page 34, line 1, so that it will read, in effect, that the President shall utilize the services of any department of the Government of the United States and of the several States.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman have any objection to the committee's accepting the amendment? The committee agrees to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS: On page 33, line 16, after "appoint", insert "upon the recommendation of the Secretary of War."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is perfectly clear. The administration of the last Draft Act was largely due to the fact that it was conceived and administered by officers or former officers of the War Department. I think the purpose of the amendment is perfectly clear. I am willing to have it voted upon at once.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: On page 33, line 15, strike out the semicolon and insert the following:

"Each local board established by the President pursuant to this section shall mail a report to the Secretary of Agriculture within 1 week after deferring a man from training and service under this act because of any physical deficiency or defect.

"Such report, insofar as information is received by, or is readily available to such local board, shall state the nature of such deficiency or defect, and particularly whether such man was underweight, and whether he or the members of his immediate family with whom he resided at the time of deferment, received Federal, State or local aid or assistance during the 12 months preceding such deferment, and whether the combined income of such man and other members of his immediate family with whom he resided at the time of deferment, from sources other than Federal, State, or local aid or assistance, was less than $1,200 during the 12 months preceding such deferment. The Secretary of Agriculture shall retain such reports and use the information therein contained as the President may direct."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill, but I shall reserve the point of order so the gentleman may explain the amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, this is not a pro forma amendment, and I should like to know whether or not it is germane. I believe it is, and I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may convince the gentleman from Kentucky not to make the point of order, if he wants to try.

Mr. HOBBS. Thank you, sir; I shall be delighted.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment was submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs and by them to the War Department. The War Department adversed it because of a misapprehension of fact. They thought that its original verbiage would require reports every 30 days from the local boards, which was utterly mistaken. The War Department now, as I understand, has taken a hands-off attitude. They have not had a chance since the committee ruled in accord with their first mistaken opinion, to reconsider it, and therefore they neither approve nor disapprove this revised amendment.

The purpose of this amendment is highly important. All of you remember—I do not mean to insinuate that all of you are old enough to remember the actuality, but you at least remember the history of the draft in World War I—that a very comprehensive and immensely helpful report was then made, which has been the basis of much research and most helpful conclusions in the realm of eugenics; in fact, it is one of the finest source books we have on that subject; but in it there was no attempt to give the financial background of the draftee so that we might see from that background whether or not there is any causal connection between underweight, malnutrition, or undernutrition, and the financial background of the family from which the draftee came. Therefore, we propose here to get that information in connection with this draft. It will cost practically nothing to do it. While we are rejecting these men for being underweight we can find out, and I want to know, what the financial background of those men is, so that we may more intelligently provide for our food-stamp plan, our free lunches for indigent school children, and other remedial agencies, to try to build up our manpower for national defense and better citizenship for peaceful pursuits.

There is no reason why we should repeat the mistake we made before and strengthen our enemies, when, if we will build up the health of American youth, it will be the best insurance of national safety, both in peace and in war. We can never hope to improve the physiques of our youth as long as these underprivileged children who are on relief or come from families with such a financial background, where the maximum expenditure is less than 5 cents a meal, continue to be undernourished. Please let me say, as emphatically as I may, that this is a vital matter. The stakes here involved are the lives of youth and the security of our Nation. This is our one opportunity to get these pregnant facts. Certainly we will not have another conscription during this generation.

We have been utilizing every means that we could devise for the last 2 years to recruit volunteers for our armed forces. Seventy-five percent of all volunteers in some corps areas have been rejected for health reasons. Of these rejected volunteers, more than half have been declined because of underweight.

Be not deceived, after world war the second just as after World War the first, we will be importuned by our financial magnates and their satellites, to lend money to a Hitler-dominated Europe so that they may trade with us. Soon after the termination of the present war, just as in the early twenties, there will be a clamor for a revival of business in this country by lending money abroad. Experience should have taught us that in the main such loans are gifts, and that prosperity so induced leads inevitably back to depression. A fraction of the amount of such loans invested in improved physical manhood here will pay richer dividends than can be obtained in any other way. And they will be lasting benefits for this and succeeding generations.

This amendment simply provides that when a local board rejects a man for health reasons, particularly underweight, it shall be ascertained and reported to the Secretary of Agriculture what his family's financial background has been—whether under or over $1,200 for the preceding year. This information may be worth millions, but will cost practically nothing.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am always glad to yield to the distinguished and able gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask my friend this question: Suppose the Board finds that these deficiency conditions exist in a farm family with a family income of two or three hundred dollars a year; is there any machinery at the present time operating through the stamp-plan procedure whereby that farm family can be benefited under the stamp-plan approach?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; there is, and many of such families are already receiving the benefits of that plan. Something like 5,000,000 farmers are now eligible and waiting for such relief from their starvation status, though they live in a land of plenty.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield gladly to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I believe there is a great deal in what the gentleman has said, but would it not be better to try to reach that by regulations than to put such an inflexible provision in the statute? I am sure the gentleman might persuade the director of the selective draft when he promulgates his regulations to put in that provision.

Mr. HOBBS. I have considered that, of course, and my answer is that the War Department and the Selective Service Board do not want to be burdened with the duty of gathering such data. They say they will have enough and more than they can say grace over in performing their duties relating to military affairs, therefore only when I suggested it would be perfectly proper to have these reports made to the Secretary of Agriculture did they withdraw their objection to this amendment.

This is not a mere pro forma amendment, this is a source of information which may or may not be vital, but I say you cannot afford to neglect this opportunity, especially when you can embrace it for nothing. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist on his point of order?

Mr. MAY. The only thing I desire to call attention to, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama would provide a health survey and transfer to the Department of Agriculture certain information which is in no sense connected with the national-defense program set up here or with the Army or the Navy, and I make the point of order that it is not germane to the bill, the purpose of which is to conscript for military purposes. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBBS. I certainly do, Mr. Chairman.

The purpose of this bill is to set up machinery for registration and conscription, if necessary, and, therefore, sir, I maintain that any amendment that would direct the local boards that will be set up as to how to perform their functions or requiring any service of them relating to conscription or deferment is certainly germane. This amendment provides that they shall report to another department of the executive branch of the Government, whom they have declined or deferred for physical reasons, the nature of the deficiency in each case, particularly if underweight, and then give a very simple background of the income of the family of the deferred man for the year preceding deferment. To say that is not of interest to us, to say that that is not of any concern to the Congress, or to the people, is too absurd to warrant discussion.

To my mind, it is manifest that this amendment is perfectly germane, and tremendously helpful and important. It directs the local boards to perform an invaluable service for us while performing their duties, by gathering—at little or no additional expense—information that may guide us in making physically fit those who are found to be physically unfit. Such information may well mean the difference between life and death to many American boys. It may mean victory instead of defeat.

Dealing, as it does, with those who will be registered under this bill, and the duties of the local boards to be created thereunder, it cannot be otherwise than germane. I respectfully urge upon the Chairman that the point of order is not well taken, and must be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which has been reported. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against the amendment on the ground it is not germane. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama deals with the powers and functions of the local boards. The provision of the bill to which the amendment is offered deals with the powers and functions of the local boards. The amendment seeks to add an additional function to the local boards, requiring the local boards to make certain reports to a department of the Government, to wit, the Department of Agriculture. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is germane to the provision of the bill to which it is offered and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, our committee went at length into the subject of this amendment and we found that the same information which this amendment would require has been collected and gathered in the census of 1940, and is available both in the Census Bureau and in the Labor Department. It would be an unnecessary burden on these boards and, undoubtedly, a large additional expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. Have all the amendments to section 11 been considered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised there are eight amendments to this section now pending at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio and Mr. HOFFMAN objected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the statement that at the end of this section the committee proposes to offer an amendment as a new section. The amendment is known as the Smith amendment, dealing with the question of conscripting industry, and to that amendment will be offered one by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is a new section.

Mr. MAY. Yes; and we want to close debate on this section in order that we may consider the new section.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. And this limitation on debate is not intended to apply to the new section.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, closing debate on the pending section will not close debate on any new section that might be offered.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: Page 33, line 24, after the first word "and" insert "to accept the services of all officers and agents".

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, following the reasoning advanced by the distinguished coauthor of this bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], that the President cannot require the services of a State officer, I simply intend to provide that the services of officials and agents of political subdivisions in a State and a State may be offered and accepted by the President as proffered of their own free will and not as being given under duress and force. That is the only purpose of this amendment, following the reason of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and adopted by the committee.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Is it proposed that these State officers will be paid compensation for this service, or is it to be free?

Mr. DONDERO. It will be voluntary in every sense of the word.

Mr. MAY. I do not think we have any objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 34, in line 1, after the words "act as amended", strike out the word "and" and insert "Provided, however, That nothing herein or in any Federal statute or rule or regulation of any Federal department or agency shall authorize the President to in any manner utilize direct control or interfere with the duties of any Federal, State, or municipal election official: And provided further, That nothing herein or in any other Federal statute, regulation, or order shall interfere with the holding of any election or with the result thereof."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane. I do not care to be heard on it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is a limitation upon authority.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will say it takes out of the class over which the President is given authority, certain officials, State and Federal, which are referred to in the first part of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that conclude the gentleman's statement?

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] offers an amendment and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] makes a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane. The Chair invites attention to the fact that the amendment provides that—

Nothing herein or in any Federal statute or rule or regulation of any Federal department or agency shall authorize the President—

And so forth. The Chair is of the opinion that that goes far beyond the purview of the pending bill. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendment with those words stricken from it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to offer another amendment he will submit it.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GUYER of Kansas: On page 34, after line 20, insert a new section, to be properly numbered, to read as follows——

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to invite the gentleman's attention to the fact that his amendment is offered as a new section. Time has been fixed on the pending section and amendments thereto, which would embrace perfecting amendments to this section.

The Chair would suggest that the gentleman withhold that amendment until the perfecting amendments are disposed of.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Very well. I will withdraw it for the present.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JARMAN: On page 34, line 3, after "(5)" strike out all of lines 3, 4, and 5 and the word "designate" in line 6, and in lieu thereof insert the following: "to purchase such printing, binding, and blank-book work from public, commercial, or private printing establishments or binderies upon orders placed by the Public Printer or upon waivers issued in accordance with section 12 of the Printing Act approved January 12, 1895, as amended by the act of July 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 475)."

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, when this legislation was before the other body for consideration there occurred a conference between representatives of the War Department, the Navy Department, the Joint Committee on Printing, and the General Accounting Office. In that conference an agreement was reached as to the verbiage of the printing section of the bill. The section which is now proposed to be substituted was placed in the Senate bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. MAY. Is that the amendment which the gentleman discussed with me a little while ago on the subject of printing?

Mr. JARMAN. It is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does that amendment authorize any expenditure for advertising?

Mr. JARMAN. No, sir.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it should. That is in the committee's amendment.

Mr. JARMAN. Is it authorized in the House bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and that is very important, simply to authorize the selective service to do certain advertising, if it is regarded as necessary, to acquaint the public more exactly what this machinery is.

Mr. MAY. I think we can work that out in conference even if we agree to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. JARMAN. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With the understanding that it will be taken up in conference, I will not press the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURDICK: On page 32, line 11, after the word "be", strike out the words "appointed by the President" and insert the following language in lieu thereof: "elected by a majority vote of the draftees."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad I have been recognized for 4 minutes. I hope there will not be any politics circulating around here while I am talking. I wanted to rise to the personal defense of Mr. Willkie. He has been criticized, but I think he has done as well as any other Democrat could do trying to lead the Republican Party. [Laughter.] You could not take any Democrat and in 30 days make a good Republican out of him without having him show some symptoms of his former associations. [Laughter and applause.]

I think also there is undue criticism of Mr. Wallace. He has done as well I think in the position he now occupies as Vice Presidential candidate as any other Republican has ever done on the Democratic ticket. [Laughter.]

I offer this amendment, however, because I believe that those who are to be drafted ought to have something to say about the selection of the board. It is not my amendment alone. It comes from the women's division of the National Farmers Union organization, and I present it for them. I think it should be passed. If it is possible to amend this bill so it will be partially democratic, this amendment will do it.

One thing that has run through this entire debate from its very beginning until now is the effort to create the belief that a great emergency exists. If there is any such thing as a great emergency existing I should like to have somebody tell us what it is. I think someone high in the councils of the administration must know something that none of us know. I would not take the attitude I have taken on this bill if I thought there were any imminent danger, but from all the information I possess I cannot see it that way.

The President may have information which we do not have; the President may have made an attempt to commit this Government to certain actions of which we are entirely ignorant. But if this be so, Mr. Chairman, the President should take the American people into his confidence and let them know the truth. The least he could do would be to advise the Congress when called upon to act upon this important matter. We are acting, therefore, in the dark. We have been told by the leaders that there is a great emergency existing, but no one has intimated what that emergency is. Will someone on this floor now sponsoring this bill tell me what that emergency is? No; no one responds. I believe the leaders of the administration on this floor do not know any more about this emergency than we do, for the simple reason that there is no emergency warranting the passage of this draft bill in peacetime.

At first we were told this is a training bill, but after reading the bill, it was evident that it was a service bill, authorizing the creation of a huge army to meet this emergency that does not now appear and an emergency about which we can get no information. We are being stampeded into war.

In this situation, let me give you Kipling's If:

If you can keep your head while all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you,
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowance for their doubting too;
If you can wait and not be tired by waiting,
Or being lied about, don't deal in lies,
Or being hated don't give way to hating,
And yet don't look too good, nor talk too wise:

If you can dream—and not make dreams your master;
If you can think—and not make thoughts your aim,
If you can meet with Triumph and Disaster
And treat these two imposters just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
And watch the things you gave your life to, broken,
And stoop and build 'em up with worn-out tools:

If you can make one heap of all your winnings
And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginnings
And never breathe a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve you long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you
Except the Will which says to them: "Hold on!"

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with kings—nor lose the common touch,
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you,
If all men count with you, but none too much;
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With 60 seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the earth and everything that's in it,
And which is more—you'll be a Man, my son!

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 34, line 1, after the words "act as amended", strike out the word "and" and insert "Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall authorize the President to in any manner utilize, direct, control, or interfere with the duties of any Federal, State, or municipal election official: And provided further, That nothing herein shall interfere with the holding of any election or with the result thereof."

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENDER. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-seven Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, if I may have order from that one hundred and twenty-seven, or whatever it is that the Chair counted, I will take only 3 minutes instead of 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I have order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will be in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the fourth subdivision of section 11 authorizes the President "to utilize the services" of any and all officials, State or Federal. Then, in the last sentence, he is given authority "to require of each the performance of such duties as he directs." This last clause was taken out by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], but I call to his attention and to the attention of the gentleman on the majority side that you still have in the paragraph the word "utilize." Utilize means to make use of, to turn to practical account. Hence, with the word "utilize" in the paragraph, the President is still authorized to make use of any and all officers or agents of the United States and of the several States and subdivisions thereof in the execution of this act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; briefly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has not the amendment already adopted which was offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] cured that?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I do not think so.

Since the nomination of the President for a third term a number of letters have come to my office and individuals have asked me whether there would be another election in November in the event of war.

Since the conscription bill came up for discussion, similar inquiries as to the holding of an election have been made. Others have written asking if draftees, or, if there was a war, if soldiers would be permitted to vote.

These inquiries have come, not facetiously but from people who were deeply concerned over the future of our country. The writers distrusted the President. They were fearful that, because of some of the things he has done, he would attempt to go further and either prevent the holding of an election in November or refuse to recognize as officials those elected at that time.

To many of us, the thought that the President can or would either prevent, or refuse to abide by the results of, an election seems fantastic. Nevertheless, sober-minded, patriotic citizens, viewing the President's record and his more recent acts, are seriously worried as to what he may do next. Some recall that, on one occasion, although no one had asked him, he announced that he did not want to be a dictator. Others call to mind the fact that he proposed, in violation of a Federal statute, to transfer some of the so-called mosquito boats to Great Britain.

To reassure any portion or number of our people, to dispel their fears of what might happen, is a laudable objective; hence this amendment. It provides only that the President shall not in any way interfere with the holding of elections or disregard the result of an election. Surely, the Democratic Party does not wish to go on record as opposed to the idea that the President should not interfere with the election machinery or disregard the result of an election. To vote down such an amendment but gives added impetus to the rumor.

In this time of hysteria, to lessen the worry, the apprehension of our people, who have heard this rumor, who, remembering the prophesies of Dr. Wirt, are fearful of the future, let us adopt this amendment.

If, months ago, the President deemed it advisable to assure our people that he had no wish to be a dictator, it would be a kindly act, a generous act, for the party which nominated him, by the adoption of this amendment, to inform the people that there would be no interference with their right to choose their President.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 74.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MAY and Mr. HOFFMAN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 73, noes 91.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CREAL: Page 33, line 21, at the end of line 21, strike out the semicolon and add the words "and to fix the compensation of county or local draft-board members," then add a semicolon.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the discussion of bipartisan draft board, I do not believe there is a State in the Union that will not voluntarily have bipartisan draft boards. I saw a letter from the Governor of my State some 10 days ago asking certain parties to select for him, to be in readiness, a bipartisan board of the highest standing men that could be found. That is the way we operated before and that is the way we will operate this time, and I think that will be the method of operation in practically every State of the Union regardless of the amendment that was defeated a while ago.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. What does the word "bipartisan" mean? Does that not mean Republican and Democrat?

Mr. CREAL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. If it is nonpartisan, it may be three Republicans and three Democrats; therefore this amendment would put it in politics.

Mr. CREAL. No; I say the practice of the Governors would be to name some Democrats and some Republicans, and as the Governor of Kentucky is going to do, so will every Governor do, as they did before, voluntarily. My amendment has nothing to do with political complexion of boards; it only provides for pay.

Mr. Chairman, the most responsible piece of machinery you will have in this business will be the local draft boards. Very few appeals will be taken from their decision and fewer still will be reversed. So there is the real machinery of this entire system. The President cannot draft anybody. He can only do it through somebody else. It is a very thankless job, it is a very unappreciated job, and men who are capable will shrink from doing this in addition to their other work if they are compelled to do it for absolutely nothing. The retired businessman will not want to do it because it means nothing to him but a lifetime of enemies. I know members of the old World War boards are unpopular to this day in their community because they had to draft their neighbors' sons.

This is a very responsible position, and I think they should have some compensation. You are going to supply everybody else with all sorts of clerical help, stenographers, and so forth, but the most responsible men in this entire system are not provided with one cent. The doctor, who will be a practitioner, is paid, but the men who sit there day after day, the men who have the big responsibility of looking into this fellow's finances, his dependents, and all that sort of thing will receive absolutely nothing. Unless you do something along this line you are not going to get the kind of men to serve in that responsible position that you ought to have.

These bipartisan boards will exist in most of the States of the Union. They have already arranged for it down in Kentucky. There is no partisanship in this. This bill provides for paying everybody else except these men, the most responsible in all the machinery. It is a responsible job and the men ought to be paid for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. As there are no further amendments to section 11, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH] for the purpose of offering a committee amendment as a new section.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Connecticut: Page 34, line 20, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 12. The President is empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for such product or material as may be required, and which is of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry.

"Compliance with all such orders for products or material shall be obligatory on any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof, and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed with such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, owning or operating any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, owning or operating any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall be capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or other necessary supplies or equipment, who shall refuse to give to the United States such preference in the matter of the execution of orders, or who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or who shall refuse to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment, at a reasonable price as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, then, and in either such case, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Departments of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of any such plant or plants, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy to manufacture therein such product or material as may be required, and any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 3 years and a fine not exceeding $50,000.

"The compensation to be paid to any individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for its products or material, or as rental for use of any manufacturing plant while used by the United States, shall be fair and just: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in such plant.

"The first and second provisos in section 8 (b) of the act entitled 'An act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 28, 1940 (Public Act No. 671, 76th Cong.), are hereby repealed."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest, inasmuch as we all understand that the major substitute for this committee amendment is to be offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], that that amendment may be offered as a substitute now and read, and then we will start debate on both the amendments. I believe this procedure will save time.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers a substitute for the committee amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia as a substitute for the committee amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Connecticut: Page 34, after line 20, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 12. That during the present emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, whenever the Secretaries of War and Navy, respectively, have tried and failed either—

"(a) To place or negotiate contracts, in accordance with existing law, for authorized objects, or parts thereof, for their departments, with any individual, trustee, firm, association, company, or corporation, hereinafter referred to in this bill as "the contractor or subcontractor,' or

"(b) To place or negotiate such contracts at reasonable rates of delivery and at prices they consider to be fair and reasonable.

they are authorized and empowered in their discretion, after consultation with the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, within the limits of the sums appropriated to their departments therefor, to place orders with such contractors or subcontractors for such authorized objects, or parts thereof, as the interests of their departments may require, which are of the nature, kind, or quantity usually produced, or capable of being produced by such contractors or subcontractors.

"Compliance with all such orders shall be obligatory on any contractor or subcontractor to whom they are given and they shall, in the discretion of the Secretary placing them, take precedence over all orders or contracts placed with such contractor or subcontractor. The Secretaries of War and Navy shall, in all such cases, where it is in the interests of the United States, pool their orders or coordinate their orders, prices, and priorities.

"When an order has been placed as indicated above with any contractor or subcontractor owning, leasing, or operating any plant or factory equipped or suitable for the building or production of such authorized objects, or parts thereof, and such contractor or subcontractor shall refuse to accept such order, or, if he accepts the order and thereafter, in the opinion of the Secretary placing the order, fails to carry it out satisfactorily, the Secretary shall advise the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense of such failure to place the order or unsatisfactory performance, and if the Advisory Commission is unable to induce the contractor or subcontractor to take the order or to give satisfactory performance, such Commission shall so advise the President, who may, in his discretion, on recommendation of the Secretary placing the order (if such Secretary is unable to effect satisfactory leasing arrangements with such contractor or subcontractor, which he is hereby authorized to make), take immediate possession of such plant or factory, or necessary part thereof, and operate it either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms during the period its use is necessary. The President is authorized to fix and require adequate compensation to be paid by the interested Secretary from any funds available to his Department for such use during the period the plant or factory, or necessary part thereof, is in the possession of the United States, and when its use is no longer required, the President shall return it in good condition to such contractor or subcontractor or owner. The President shall in each case, before he takes possession as indicated above, report to Congress failure to accept an order or give satisfactory performance. If Congress is not in session, such report shall be filed with the Clerks of the House and Senate.

"The first and second provisos in section 8 (b) of the act entitled 'An act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 28, 1940 (Public Act No. 671, 76th Cong.) are hereby repealed."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment and the substitute therefor and all amendments thereto be limited so as to close at 5:30, which will allow an hour and a half of debate; and further, that the time be equally divided between the proponents of the Smith amendment and the proponents of the substitute, the time to be controlled by the Chair.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I shall be constrained to object because there are some Members here who are opposed to both these amendments, and we would have to have some recogniton in that respect. Besides, these two amendments are very important, and I do not believe we ought to limit the debate at this time. We ought to run along a while.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does not the gentleman from Ohio believe that an hour and a half of debate on these amendments and all amendments thereto is ample for the Committee to become thoroughly conversant with the issue as between the two proposals?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Personally, I believe that because it is Saturday afternoon, and for various other reasons, we might get through before that time, but I do not believe we ought to limit the time now. Further, may I ask, is it true that under the rule no amendments can be offered to the Smith amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Germane amendments may be offered.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And that will apply, of course, to the substitute amendment also?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I believe we ought to run along a litle while and see how we get along.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may interpose, of course that part of the request stating that the Chair should be governed in his recognition of those opposing and favoring the various amendments does not apply. The Chair reserves to himself the right to recognize whom he pleases.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Smith amendment and the substitute therefor, and all amendments thereto, close not later than 6 o'clock, the time to be controlled by the Chair.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. The motion is not in order, no debate having occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is correct. There has been no actual debate yet on the amendments. The motion would be in order after debate.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, this committee amendment in effect calls into operation during the life of this bill the provisions of section 120 of the existing National Defense Act. It also repeals—and the substitute, I may say, would also do this—the provisions in the Navy bill which we passed this spring which have been strenuously objected to, and which would allow the Secretary of the Navy, whenever he deems any manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense and is unable to arrive at an agreement for its use or its operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility.

This section covers the same ground as the amendment which was adopted on the floor of the Senate late in the debate on that bill. That amendment was known as the Russell-Overton amendment, and it provided, in effect, that whenever either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy decided that any existing manufacturing plant or facility was necessary for the national defense, and he was unable to arrive at an agreement for its use or operation, it could be condemned, immediate possession taken, and title taken by the Federal Government, with provision that the condemnation statute should apply as to the amount of compensation to be paid for the plant or facility.

There was a great deal of objection to that for several reasons. One, the language was vague, as it was vague in the Navy-bill amendment, and it included a plant or facility. A facility might well be construed to mean almost anything, including any newspaper, radio station, educational institution, or any other institution which might be deemed necessary for any purpose for the national defense. The provision in the committee amendment refers only to manufacturing plants.

Further, under the Defense Act, under the provisions which are repeated in this committee amendment, when possession is taken of any plant possession is taken merely to carry on manufacturing activities and the title remains in the private owners of the plant, so that when the emergency is over payment may be made for any materials used and any use of the plant as rental for the plant, and title would not be permanently in the Federal Government but would remain in the private owners.

There are also other provisions in the existing law which state, first, that existing methods of procurement shall be carried on; next, that obligatory orders may be given to the industry and that these orders must be given preference by industry if they are for the War and Navy Departments. Further, it is made compulsory on the managers of industry and the owners to carry out these orders and give them preference. Heavy penalties are provided in the Defense Act, and they are continued in this committee amendment, for refusal to carry out the orders for the War or Navy Departments.

The Defense Act would apply only in time of war or when war was imminent. This committee amendment would apply under the terms of section 16 of the bill until May 15, 1945, unless the Congress should continue the bill in operation after that time.

There are cases in which some delay or difficulty has been met in the defense program to date. Some of them were cited in the debate in the Senate. Some of them have resulted from a lack of cooperation on the part of subcontractors who did not want to carry on defense work because of the restrictions, not only so far as profit is concerned, but probably also the various other restrictions in Government contracts and who, by their refusal, tied up general contractors, particularly the aircraft industry, from carrying out defense projects when the general contractors were willing and eager to do so. This amendment bringing into effect the provisions of the Defense Act now would enable obligatory orders to be placed so that we would not have hold-ups of that sort, and in extreme cases so that factories could be taken over and operated by the Federal Government if necessary.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is it not true that during the last war this same procedure was put into effect.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. During the last war the fact that the procedure existed in the law made it unnecessary to put it into effect, except in a very few instances. However, you may run into the situation where the manufacturer wants to give precedence to Government orders, but he has a contract which already requires him to give preference to some private individual or, perhaps, some foreign government or corporation, and without the present law if he gave precedence to the Government, he would be liable in damages to the other party to the contract.

This provision of the Defense Act would protect him. It would, however, also protect the other party to the contract by giving a right of action in the Court of Claims against the Government for any damages that he might suffer. That case has gone to the Supreme Court, under the provisions of the Defense Act, and a recovery has been had. So it enables speeding up by giving preference to Government orders and at the same time protects both your manufacturer, who wants to cooperate, and those with whom he has already contractual obligations.

It would also reach the case where shipyards, for instance, in recent years have been inoperative and where their financial condition is bad, but the production capacities exist which we so desperately need for ships, but it may take months or perhaps years to straighten up a legal tangle with respect to ownership and refinancing. It would allow in those cases, as the present law would in fact, the Navy to take over and to operate those yards and to pay whomever is determined to be the owner the value of any materials used and also a rental for the yards.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I am very much interested in that particular point. Is it the gentleman's intention and is it his opinion that when rehabilitation and financing are necessary and when the owners are unable or unwilling to refinance, the Secretary of the Navy would have authority to take the yard under the provisions of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Under the provisions of the Defense Act, which are also the provisions of this amendment, I am sure it would be possible for the Navy to take over and to operate such a yard. Of course, fair and just compensation would be due to the owners of the yards under this language.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I would like for the gentleman to distinguish, just as briefly and clearly as he can, between the Smith amendment and the Vinson substitute. As I understand, one difference is that under the Smith amendment the Government would take over summarily on a lease or rental basis, whereas under the Vinson amendment they would be taken over under condemnation proceedings which would result in ownership going to the Government.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. No; I do not believe that is true. That is the distinction between the Overton amendment and the Defense Act provision. Under the Vinson amendment there is set up, however, another step in that recourse must be had to the advisory council of the Defense Commission and, of course, that is a body set up, not by statute, but by Executive order.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The Defense Commission is an advisory commission to the Council of National Defense under a statute.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The Vinson amendment also eliminates any compulsion on the individuals in control of the industry so that the criminal provisions are dropped out of the existing law or the existing provisions of the Defense Act by the Vinson amendment.

The Vinson amendment would keep this provision in effect during the emergency declared by the President. I think it is preferable to limit it to the same period to which we are limiting the other provisions of this act. If we are going to put it through as a part of the same program, to speed up the acquisition of the materials which we need for this Army we are trying to form, and if we are going to hook that up with legislation which will raise the men to be trained for defense, I think we should make them coextensive in time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. A few days ago the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] placed in the RECORD a comparison of these two amendments, with the comments of the Navy Department, and the criticism of your amendment was that it would be permanent law, whereas the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] would be limited to the emergency. Is it not true that under the terms of the pending bill it will be limited to the period expiring in 1945?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Of course, section 16 makes it clear that all provisions of this act, except as to violations and except as to section 3 (c), which has nothing to do with this, but refers to the remaining of men in the Reserves after they have entered a reserve component, shall become inoperative on and after May 15, 1945, unless continued in effect by Congress. So that the Navy Department was incorrect in that statement.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to sections 171 and 175 of the United States Code, which in effect provides that in time of peace there can be no acquiring of title, purchase, or condemnation, even for temporary use, unless the legislature of the State where the land or factory or entity is situated gives its consent, together with the consent of the Attorney General of the United States. I should like to get the gentleman's opinion as to whether or not there would be any difficulty or inconsistency between his amendment and sections 171 and 175 of the United States Code.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The Judge Advocate General's office has studied that question at my request and has given me an opinion that these provisions would not affect action under this act, because as to title, of course, there is no title acquired under the provisions of the Defense Act. If you used a method which included the acquisition of title, that might apply, but it does not, and, according to the Judge Advocate General's opinion, those two sections do not affect this amendment.

Mr. CELLER. So, in your judgment, the acquisition of title means simply the rental or use of a particular property?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. After the amendment was adopted in the Senate, known as the Russell-Overton amendment, it went out over the country that the Senate had written into the bill a provision for the conscription of industries. As a matter of fact, that was entirely wrong, because they were simply extending in the Russell-Overton amendment the right of eminent domain, which means that if the Government took this property it would have to pay the owners fair and just compensation for it, which did not mean conscription at all. Is that not the fact?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I might say that one of my objections to the Russell-Overton amendment is that most of the units which we must use in the production of materials for the equipment of our troops, is industry that normally is not used for that purpose. If we had a separate munitions industry, which was solely working on munitions, then you might have some virtue in something like the Russell-Overton amendment. But if we start to make most anything in great quantities for the equipment of a large force for our own defense, we have to use our existing facilities, which are such things as automobile factories, typewriter factories, and factories which are normally in peacetime production. It does not seem desirable to me to have the Government take over those factories or any part of them in a method which will keep them permanently in the hands of the Government. As the gentleman from New York pointed out, when this provision was in effect during the World War there was very little use for it precisely because it was in effect.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. Is it the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut that the practical effect of the adoption of the committee amendment offered by him would be to bring into operation now the provisions of the National Defense Act on this subject?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That would be exactly the result of the adoption of the committee amendment, with the addition that the provision in the naval bill last spring, about which we have had so much controversy, would be repealed, because it would be replaced by the provisions of the existing Defense Act.

Mr. COOPER. The effect is, then, that instead of a declaration of war or the imminence of an emergency, which are required under the Defense Act, that would make this same provision of that act apply to the situation that exists now?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that the pending bill provides substantially the same penalties that were provided in the Selective Service Act of 1917, for the citizen who refuses to comply with the terms of that act?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I believe that is true.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. So that it is fair, then, that industry should be subjected to a similar penalty if industry refuses to comply, and your amendment so provides?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The amendment continues the same penalties which are in the Defense Act now for the refusal of industry, in case of war or when war is imminent.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But there is no penalty whatsoever under the so-called Vinson substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. There is not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief observation?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield very briefly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. To make the meaning of the question I asked a moment ago perfectly plain, if this amendment or the other amendment is adopted, it does not mean conscription of these plants, it means that we take them and pay a reasonable value for what we take. Is not that all it means?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is that right or not?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That is true. Under the Overton amendment, the Government takes them and pays the bill by condemnation. Under the committee amendment, you would pay them the fair and just value of their use plus any materials that were used.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But in either event it is not conscription.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The gentleman does not consider it conscription. It is a matter of definition.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But it does come down to this: That in any case where certain production is essential to the national defense, unless the Government can get it on terms which are deemed fair and just, it can take possession of that plant for the period of the emergency and turn out those materials itself.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That is true, and that was the purpose of it when it was adopted in 1916, and it worked well then, not because a great number of plants were taken over but because it was not necessary to take over a great number of plants because of the existence of the power.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. May I just say that I think the adoption of the gentleman's amendment, rather than the substitute, is most essential to make this bill fair.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. EATON. It seems to me that the penalties are very excessive. Some of these little subcontractors have not got $50,000 invested in their business, yet you propose to fine them $50,000 and put them in prison for 10 years. That is worse than the punishment for murder in this country.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That is the limit on the penalties, and it is the most that refusal for any reason, whether because of an effort to hamstring the defense program by agreement with foreign governments or for any other reason. It is the limit of the penalty which could be imposed. It is a stiff penalty.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] that it will take a $50,000 penalty to make some of these profiteers sit up and take notice.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. If the Smith amendment is adopted, an amendment which is modeled after the act of 1916, it would have considerable advantage because the act of 1916 has been interpreted by the courts to some extent.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Yes; it has been interpreted to some extent by the courts. At least two cases went up to the Supreme Court under it, so we do know of some extent what the courts would hold the amendment to mean. The new language of the Vinson amendment or any other substitute would not have that advantage.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I have not been here during all the colloquy and if the gentleman has already answered this question, of course, it is satisfactory to me: Were any plants taken over and operated under the Defense Act of 1916?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I am not sure whether any were actually operated. Some forced obligatory contracts were entered into because there were cases that went to the Supreme Court. If any plants were taken over they were few in number. I do not remember that any plant was taken over. The Secretary of War, I believe, said certain ones were, but not more than one or two.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I thank the Members for their attention. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. MAY. To propound a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. A large number of Members have told me during the course of the afternoon that they are compelled to leave at a certain hour this evening. It is certain we shall have one or two roll calls, possibly three.

I ask unanimous consent at this time that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at 5:30.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at 5:30.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to find out how many Members on my side of the aisle wish to speak on this amendment. I do not want to be in the position of an objector, but I want to see what the situation is with regard to actual need for time. I, myself, would like 10 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Seeing the few who have risen, I think I will change my request and say not later than 5:30. I doubt if we will use even that time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Still reserving the right to object, I do not want to stand here and be an objector, as I said before, but this is Saturday. As far as I am concerned, half an hour would be enough, but this is a most important part of the bill. Now, if it does not suit our side, let somebody object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, objection having been made, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at 5:30.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 137, noes 45.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition on the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin and Mr. MILLER objected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I want to offer to the gentleman's amendment in the form of a perfecting amendment. I want to know whether to offer it before or after the Vinson substitute amendment is voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The offer can be made when the gentleman is recognized.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that those of us who believed in the substitute would have as equal an opportunity to present it as those who believed in the committee amendment, and that is the only reason I asked for 15 minutes, as the Committee, before limiting debate, gave that amount to the proponents of the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, had not this entire subject matter originated in a naval affairs bill, I would be hesitant to offer a substitute, because my general feeling is that whenever a great committee of this House, such as the Committee on Military Affairs, that enjoys, and rightly so, the respect and confidence of the entire membership, presents a bill or subject matter for consideration that has been under its consideration for many months the benefit of the doubt should probably be given to the committee. That is a policy that I have always following during the quarter of a century I have served here. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it was with some reluctance that I offered this substitute. But I feel clearly justified, due to the reasons I have just stated. This entire subject matter originated on a naval bill and conference report which was submitted to the House.

Let me say right here that by the language of the substitute and the committee amendment the act of the House in enacting section 8 (b) is repealed; so also the substitute and the committee amendment likewise, whichever is adopted, repeals the Overton-Russell amendment.

As I only have 5 minutes, I want to call the attention of the Committee to the difference between what I have prepared with the aid and assistance of the Navy Department, and you will find in the RECORD of September 4, page 11446, a complete analysis of the difference, and the committee proposal. The proposal I am presenting has the endorsement and approval of the naval officials who engaged in the preparation of it. Let me say that the committee amendment is nothing more than the law passed on June 3, 1917. They say that we should pass that now.

Mr. Chairman, that became necessary due to the fact that we were in a national emergency. War was imminent. We have not reached that condition yet. We are only in a limited emergency, and all legislation is based on that limited emergency. I am going to explain definitely so that every Member can determine which one of these propositions is the fairest, which one is the most equitable, and which one should be adopted.

In my own substitute it is limited to the national emergency fixed by the Executive order of September 8. If the President tomorrow should declare that the emergency had passed, my substitute would fade away. Every naval bill that has been presented here, except those to add permanent additions to the fleet, has been based on a limited emergency. That is as far as we should go in legislating at this time. We should legislate only for the limited emergency. [Applause.]

One further important distinction between my substitute and the committee amendment is that mine is based on the contingency of an order being offered and refused, while the committee amendment does not hinge on that contingency.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, because the gentleman is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I merely objected a while ago because I thought it was manifestly unfair to close debate in 1 hour on such an important amendment and then turn around and give one Member of the House one-fourth of that time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have not spoken on this bill since debate started early in the week. I did want to speak on these two particular amendments. I am not in favor of the committee amendment. I see no chance whatsoever to speak on the amendment under the arrangement that has been made; therefore I object.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] may be given 5 additional minutes, to be added to the time heretofore fixed by the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I simply want to say I am in favor of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me explain it then.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We are entitled to talk on this amendment, and I shall object again.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is very unfortunate that these two very important amendments have to be disposed of so rapidly. It is also unfortunate that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs could not have an abundance of time to explain his amendment. I should like to have had 10 minutes. I have given this matter considerable study, and there is hardly any use for one to start talking about this important matter just for a minute or two.

Let me give you the reason I am against both these amendments. In the first place, it is my judgment that neither is constitutional. If either of them is constitutional it must be on the ground that there is a war or some imminence of war, or some other immediate and threatening national emergency. It cannot be some fear or some probability. It must be a certainty. Now, really, is there such an emergency? No; and we would not have as much of an emergency as we have if the President had been more discreet in his handling of international affairs. These two amendments are patterned after the National Defense Acts of 1919 and 1922; the Smith amendment is identical, with one exception, and that exception is a vital one and one that will render the amendment unconstitutional. Let me explain: In order for the National Defense Act to have been constitutional it was necessary for it to show that there was a national emergency. In the first line of that act as it applies here is found the following language:

> The President, in time of war or when war is imminent, is empowered—

And so forth.

Those words are omitted from the Smith amendment. And again near the end of the third paragraph the same language is omitted from the Smith amendment. The only cases testing the National Defense Act that I have found are cases where the evidence brings out facts showing that the war was on. The Smith amendment cannot be supported from anything decided in these few cases. There is in the Smith amendment language which was in the original Defense Act, which I claim is unconstitutional, and which, so far as I could find out, has never been interpreted by any court of last resort. The language to which I refer is as follows, and is in the last paragraph "or as rented for use of any manufacturing plant while used by the United States." This is my reason for this statement: I maintain that by reason of that provision of the fifth amendment to the Constitution which provides that no person shall be deprived of his property "without due process of law," the President or nobody else at any time, war or no war, can take one's property "without just compensation." The courts have always held that no conscription or condemnation of property shall be had unless or until some judicial body or board has determined what is "just compensation." The President nor any other Army or naval officer can take a man's property and arbitrarily fix a rental fee. The owner must be consulted and considered or a court must decide it. So far as I could find in the short time I had to consider this matter, no court has been called upon to interpret this matter of rent. The word "rent" implies a contract between two persons. All the textbooks and decisions hold that there can be no eminent domain if there is a contract. The right of eminent domain is in the Government as an incident of sovereignty or by reason of the Constitution. The right to condemn property sprung from eminent domain, but condemnation proceedings themselves are all creatures of the statute. No statute gives any agency the right to condemn property for rent. I mean no condemnation can be had by the Government just so it might rent the property.

The Smith amendment is not necessary, for if the Government is wanting to conscript this property because of war, then why not go ahead and do it if there are war conditions? That is the rub. They know that there are no war conditions, so they want to conscript anyway; hence this change of the law. So if this amendment passes they will conscript in peacetime and consequently dictatorship is here. Make no mistake, the best proof of a dictatorship is that he may conscript property in peacetime and without reference to any court. It will be a terrible mistake to take this step into socialism and communism. I warn you of the danger. [Applause.]

The Vinson amendment is bottomed on as unsound principles as the Smith amendment, but it is not as drastic.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I am sorry, as I should very much like to yield to my distinguished friend from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have the official answer.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Getting back to the Vinson amendment, I said it is equally as unconstitutional as the Smith amendment, but its constitutionality is not as patent. It is much more considerate of the rights of the person whose propery is sought to be procured. It provides that before one's property can be taken efforts must be made to deal with him. Under the Vinson amendment an Army captain cannot just step up and throw a man out and then fix the rent to which he may be entitled. He must first talk, a few words at least, to the man about his own property. Then, if they cannot agree, he must take it up with the Secretary of War and the Defense Council, who must also try to deal with him. But the fact that they can eventually throw him out—war or no war—without giving a court or board of some kind the right to call this man and his witnesses in to be heard makes the Vinson amendment unconstitutional and unfair.

Many Members will vote for these amendments under the guise that they do not want to vote to conscript men if they will not also conscript property. Well, I am not in that predicament, for I am not going to vote to conscript men today, and neither am I going to vote to conscript property. When, and if, we get into war, I shall probably vote for conscription. If I vote to conscript men, I shall want it to be along constitutional lines; and if I vote to conscript property, I shall want it to be along constitutional lines. Again let me emphasize this is the longest step into dictatorship that the country has ever taken by legislative action. [Applause.]

As I have already stated, the Vinson amendment does not carry the $50,000 fine and imprisonment penalty that the Smith amendment carries. I shall vote for the Vinson amendment as against the Smith amendment, and if it carries or if it loses I shall vote against both or either, and I shall vote against the whole bill. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I gladly yield to the gentleman, if I have any time left, in view of the fact that he did not have much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am sorry the gentleman does not have it, either.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS to the committee amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Connecticut.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HINSHAW. Are we working on the substitute amendment or upon the Smith amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. On the original amendment, proposing a new section, and the substitute amendment.

Mr. HINSHAW. And an amendment to the Smith amendment is now in order, and not to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the Smith amendment is in order now.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the Smith amendment insert the following:

"Whenever, in the execution or performance of any contract for any article or item of equipment to be used in the national defense, an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States, shall hereafter be used or manufactured by a Government contractor without license of the owner thereof or lawful right to use or manufacture the same, no liability arising as a result of such use or manufacture shall be incurred by such Government contractor, and the owner's sole remedy shall be by suit against the United States in the Court of Claims for the recovery of his reasonable and entire compensation for such use and manufacture: Provided, however, That said Court of Claims shall not entertain a suit or award compensation under the provisions of this section where the claim for compensation is based on the use or manufacture by or for the United States of any article heretofore owned, leased, used by, or in the possession of the United States: Provided further, That in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, that might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, as set forth in title 60 of the Revised Statutes, or otherwise: And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not inure to any patentee who, when he makes such claim, is in the employment or service of the Government of the United States, or the assignee of any such patentee; nor shall this act apply to any device discovered or invented by such employee during the time of his employment or service."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple matter. Under the existing law, which is section 68 of title XXXV, United States Code Annotated, the Government, if it infringes upon a patent, may be sued in the Court of Claims, subject to the provisos which I have incorporated in my amendment. However, that does not cover the ground. This is the situation:

I have a patent covering an article which is necessary to be manufactured for national defense. An invitation is issued by the War Department or the Navy Department to bid upon the manufacture of a million of those articles. But I have a little plant. I am the only man who can manufacture it. I and my subsidiaries—and they always have sense enough to have some subsidiaries organized for the purpose of bidding—are the only ones that can bid without infringing that patent.

But it may be a very simple article, and Mr. Henry Ford's or some other giant concern would gladly manufacture those million articles that are needed just about as fast as I could snap my fingers, whereas it would take me months to manufacture them.

The sole purpose of this amendment is to say to any bidders who care to bid on the production of matériel for national defense that, if necessary to do so, they can infringe a patent, and, if they are bidding on a national-defense item, they will be protected by the Government against suits for infringement. All patentees get their rights patent from the Government. Now the Government says, "In this limited emergency, as well as in wartime, if we need to infringe your patent to prevent exorbitant prices or to expedite the national-defense program, we will do so, but we will pay you what is fair and right, whether the infringement be done by us or by others for us."

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is too plain for argument that if we mean to allow creatures of our largesse to block the national-defense program merely because they have a patent, then we are not as farsighted as we should be. The Government can and does in emergency cases now infringe patents and make itself liable to suit in the Court of Claims. All that this amendment does is to extend that same privilege to all those who bid on the invitation of the Government. [Applause.]

The pending bill proposes to draft men because of the imperious necessity for adequate national defense. A committee amendment will draft recalcitrant industrial plants. Why not draft patents also? Are they more sacrosanct than human life? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBBS) there were—ayes 24, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed in principle to the proposal contained in the amendment. I am opposed in particular to the amendment itself. I am opposed to it because it is undesirable, unnecessary, un-American, and, I am convinced, unconstitutional. I am opposed to it because it constitutes, in my opinion, a pernicious invasion of the principle of private ownership and operation of the Nation's industry, the destruction of individual initiative and enterprise, the demoralization of competitive endeavor, the confiscation of private property, and the denial of that due process that has characterized the jurisprudence of English-speaking people and was old before Magna Carta.

I am opposed to it because I regard it as the wedge to be used by those who are at work undermining our Government to split private enterprise asunder, to hasten the day of government ownership and reduce free citizens of America to the status of communistic proletarians of totalitarian vassals.

I am opposed to this proposal because it will propel this Nation into that status of governmental control of the private interests, rights, and property of our citizens that was met with successful resistance for 140 years—a resistance that has begun to weaken only in these latter years under the constant attrition of the Communist machine.

I am opposed to it because it is obviously a culminating effort to impose under the exigencies of potential war and by subterfuge the principles of communism that at some other time or when proposed openly and boldly the elected representatives of a free people would not hesitate to repudiate.

I am opposed to it because it seeks to ensnare the membership of this House by the subtlety of its appeal, the duplicity of its terms, its ostensible sanction under the power of war, and its necessity, obviously justified by the implied equities involved in the conscription of the human resources of the Nation.

I am opposed to it because of its patent purpose to confer by statute war powers that, if they exist at all, are already the attributes of sovereignty, hence unnecessary of statutory enactment; and because of its latent deceit.

We have witnessed strange phenomena in the Government of America during these recent years, Mr. Chairman. Our private industry is overrun by the inquisitorial agents, officials, bureaus, commissions, and investigators of our Federal Government. Once free and private enterprise is now subject to the inquisitional and peremptory spirit of government that has come to prevail in the land. The food we eat, the homes in which we live, the clothing we wear, the air we breathe—all have become objects of governmental solicitude and inquisition. Our securities, our means of transportation and communication, the wages we pay and the hours we work, our banks, our credit, and our farms, all alike, have been subjected to the prying inquest of governmental agents imbued with the spirit of officious power. Already we direct and regulate the essential industries of the Nation by regimentation under the guise of law through bureaucratic agents; we control them through taxation. By the proposal now before us we would confiscate the meager control that still remains in the hands of private ownership.

Government intervention, Government control, Government regulation, Federal regimentation, have brought the private industry of America to the verge of bankruptcy and collapse. We openly recognize that fact when we propose transfusions from the Federal treasury into the arteries of commerce, industry, and trade. I fear the transfusion of this borrowed blood with its artificial stimulation, for I perceive the real purpose to be the ultimate placental dependence on Government.

The private and independent enterprise of this Nation stands helpless before an invading horde of inquisitional investigators, inquirers, and impractical bureaucratic agents, who have made industry fear for its continued existence and its future, who have destroyed its initiative and undermined its courage. We have embarked upon the socialistic program of a planned economy, foreign to our traditional concepts of private enterprise, individual initiative and spirit of adventure, Government beaureaucrats command the limitation of our productive capacity and we have clothed them with the power to enforce their commands. We permit them to impose penalties for the inability or failure of industry to observe the arbitrary regulations they impose. We have endowed them with a judicial function that they are unworthy to possess and we have denied our people the one exercise of that due process which, under our original philosophy, Government may not withhold. Governmental bureaucrats fix prices, wages, and hours. They ignore economic laws with the same impunity that they defy congressional statutes. Their activities are incompatible with the principles of a free people living under constitutional government. They daily challenge the constitutional safeguards of the people and they threaten the enterprise for free individuals. The membership of this House does not need to be told of our traditions of free enterprise and the sanctity of private property that have characterized the life and success of the Republic. Members need merely to be reminded that for many days the debate in the Constitutional Convention centered upon the qualifications for membership in the National Legislature, and that fundamental in the consideration of those qualifications was the ownership of property not merely by the elected but by the electorate as well. At its very beginning the Constitution of this Republic bears eloquent testimony of the results of the debate in the Convention. I quote it:

> And electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

What were the qualifications here referred to? In the great majority of instances they involved the ownership of property. What, in the opinion of the majority of the delegates to the Convention, was the alpha and the omega of the right to elect representatives to both State and National Legislatures? Electors were to be men of property, citizens who respected the principle of the private ownership of property, and who would be unwilling to entrust to those devoid of property or devoid of the desire to acquire property the power to legislate with respect to the rights of private ownership of property. We have abandoned the qualification of property as a qualification for suffrage in America and we have substituted no equivalent.

Members will recall the words of Colonel Mason as he rises in the convention, not—

> To make any motion but to hint an idea which seemed to be proper for consideration.

One important object in constituting the Senate was, in his opinion—

> To secure the rights of property.

And, he suggested—

> The propriety of annexing to the office a qualification of property.

He thought—

> This would be very practicable as the rules of taxation would supply the scale for measuring the degree of wealth possessed by every man.

Mr. Baldwin thought—

> The second branch ought to be the representative of property, and that in forming it, some reference ought to be had to the relative wealth of their constituents and to the principles on which the Senate of Massachusetts was constituted.

Mr. Gouverneur Morris, Members will recall, objected to an apportionment of Members of the House of Representatives "on the basis of population alone." He thought property ought to be taken into the estimate as well as the number of inhabitants.

Life and liberty were generally said to be of more value than property.

He said—

An accurate view of the matter would, nevertheless, prove that property was the main object of society. The savage state was more favorable to liberty than the civilized; and sufficiently as to life. It was preferred by the man who had not acquired a taste for property. It is only renounced for the sake of property which could only be secured by the restraints of regular government. * * * If property * * * was the main object of government—that certainly it ought to be one measure of the influence due to those who were to be affected by the government.

He thought—

Mr. Butler contended strenuously—

That property is the only just measure of representation. This was the great object of government; the great cause of war, the great means of carrying it on.

Mr. Gerry said that—

If property be one object of government, provisions to secure it cannot be improper.

Mr. Pinckney thought it—

Essential that the Members of the Legislature, the Executive, and the judges, should be possessed of competent property to make them independent and respectable. It was prudent when such great powers were to be trusted, to connect the tie of property with that of reputation in securing a faithful administration. The Legislature would have the fate of the Nation put in their hands. The President would also have a very great influence on it. The judges would * * * hear important causes between citizen and citizen. * * * Were he to fix the quantum of property which should be required, he should not think of less than $100,000 for the President, half of that sum for each of the judges, and in like proportion for the Members of the National Legislature. * * * He would * * * leave the sums blank (however). His motion was that the President of the United States, the judges, and Members of the Legislature, should be required to swear that they were respectively possessed of a clear unencumbered estate, to the amount of $-------.

Time has not permitted a more extensive examination of the proceedings of the convention at present, but I am convinced that the framers of the Constitution would not accept such a proposal as we are confronted with today. It was their purpose to preserve the rights of private property. They drafted the Constitution to protect the rights of individual American citizens from government and they placed restraints upon the Government which they created in order that the rights of individual American citizens might be preserved from governmental invasion. They conferred upon the Government they created the power to tax, a grant of power which in itself recognized the existence of private property as the object of taxation. But they placed limitations upon the grant, and the great Chief Justice, John Marshall, recognized the limitations of the grant in his immortal dictum that the power to tax is the power to destroy. How would the fathers regard this proposal to confiscate?

In the Federalist Papers Hamilton wrote:

The prosperity of commerce is now perceived and acknowledged by all enlightened statesmen to be the most useful as well as the most productive source of national wealth, and has become the primary object of their political cares.

Madison said that—

The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite. The former are exercised principally on external objects, as war, peace, negotiation, and foreign commerce; with the last the power of taxation will, for the most part, be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objectives which, in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties, and properties of the people, and in the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the State.

Nor can I refrain at this time from recalling to Members of the House Madison's concept of the militia, an arm of the State governments which we have transferred to the Federal Government by statutes that might not in an earlier day have withstood successfully a challenge of constitutionality. I quote Mr. Madison's opinion of the menace of a large standing army under the control of the Federal Government. He said:

Let a regular army fully equal to the resources of the country be formed and let it be entirely at the devotion of the Federal Government; still it would not be going too far to say that the State governments, with the people on their side, would be able to repel the danger—

That might come from the presence of such an army. To such an army, said Mr. Madison—would be opposed the militia * * * with arms in their hands, officered by men chosen from among themselves, fighting for their common liberties, and united and conducted by governments possessing their affection and confidence. It may well be doubted whether a militia thus circumstanced could ever be conquered by * * * regular troops.

Need this House be reminded that the militia of this Republic is now no longer under the control of the States but under the control of the Federal Government, and by acts enacted by this Congress?

Hamilton thought that—

Government is instituted no less for the protection of property than of the persons, of individuals. The one as well as the other, therefore, may be considered as represented by those who are charged with the government. Upon this principle it is that in several of the States, and particularly in the State of New York, one branch of the government is intended more especially to be the guardian of property, and is accordingly elected by that order of society which is most interested in this object of government. In the Federal Constitution—this policy does not prevail. The rights of property are committed into the same hands with the personal rights. Some attention ought, therefore, to be paid to property in the choice of those hands.

He said—

I am opposed to this proposal because I doubt its constitutionality. The principle of due process declared in the fifth amendment is a prohibition against the United States. It is a restraint on the legislative as well as on the executive and the judicial powers of the Federal Government. The proposal now before us to take the property of the people of the United States violates, in my opinion, the due process provision of the Constitution in spirit, even if not in letter.

Although statutes enacted by Congress in the exercise of the war power may not be affected by the restrictions imposed by the fifth amendment, the mere existence of war does not suspend or change the operation of the guaranties and limitations of the amendment with respect to those conferred on citizens by the Constitution. And I doubt that it could suspend or change those original, fundamental rights possessed and exercised by American citizens before the adoption of the Constitution, for I regard the fifth amendment but as declaratory of fundamental rights that have existed unchallenged among English-speaking people for a thousand years. Moreover, a state of war does not exist at present. And, should we be so unfortunate as to have war come upon us at some future time, abundant opportunity will prevail for the consideration of the drastic proposal we are now asked to write into law.

In the exercise of the right of eminent domain even by the Federal Government for any public purpose the owner is not barred from his common-law remedy, if the statutory remedy for obtaining compensation is incomplete or imperfect. The proposed amendment is, in my opinion, therefore, unnecessary. Although it may be accepted as an incident of sovereignty that private property is held subject to the necessities of Government, and that under the principles of eminent domain Government may take real or personal property as necessities and exigencies may demand, the fifth amendment to the Constitution guarantees that when this governmental right of paramount appropriation is exercised it shall be attended by compensation. But I know that Government may frustrate the rights of citizens in the enjoyment of their private property when the administration of its laws are entrusted to bureaucrats, and administration of this proposal is so entrusted. The burdens of war should not be made to fall chiefly upon those whose properties can be confiscated by bureaucratic administrators, but upon all the people. If the proposal contained in the amendment before us does not violate that principle, it certainly creates the opportunity for its violation. In Missouri Pacific Railroad against Humes, the Supreme Court said:

In England the requirement of due process of law, in cases where life, liberty, and property were affected, was originally designed to secure the subject against the arbitrary action of the Crown and place him under the protection of the law. * * * a similar purpose must be ascribed to it when applied * * * in this country * * * (It) is intended to give * * * increased security against arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, and the arbitrary spoliation of property.

The framers of the Constitution did not regard government entirely without suspicion. They believed that the liberty of the individual was enlarged as government was restricted. Their philosophy of government was based upon the principle of the rights of the individual. That individualism was intensified by our pioneering ancestors in their conquest of the frontier. Their philosophy was that of self-reliance. They fought their own way westward. They did not rely upon government. They resisted the interference of government in the development of the great industrial progress in which we share today.

But we have witnessed a change in the competitive individualistic enterprises that have made the Nation great and prosperous. We have witnessed constantly increased encroachment by government. We have witnessed a vast process of socialized governmental activity that has brought every man and woman under governmental solicitation and that has invaded every industrial plant in the Nation. Not content, we now propose confiscation.

Individual enterprise, individual initiative, self-reliance—these are among the qualities upon which America was founded and upon which American prosperity is based. The settlement of our vast domain, the development of our vast systems of communication and transportation, the creation and development of our vast industrial plants and processes have resulted from our creative and inventive genius as free individuals untrammeled by the intervention of government. The individual in America still is the unit of national growth, national prosperity, and national security, and I would have him remain so.

I am opposed to the philosophy of the proletarian described in the New York Constitutional Convention of 1915 by Judge Clearwater as—

One who would undermine the principles of government and industry upon which our Nation was built * * * the man who has no property, who has not the industry, frugality, and self-denial to accumulate property; a man who will breed children and throw himself without scruple or reserve upon a community for support.

I recall that Senator Root declared that interference with individual liberty by government should be most closely watched and restrained, because the habit of undue interference destroys that independence of character in its citizens without which free government cannot endure.

I think it most opportune to recall, too, the declaration of Dr. Burgess, the founder of the school of political science at Columbia University, that—

We are threatened by Caesarism, the rule of the one by popular acclaim, the apotheosis of government, and the universal decline of the consciousness of, and a true desire for, true liberty.

The fathers recognized and feared absolutism in government and the weakening of the individual by dependence upon the state. They believed that industry and trade flourished when it was not molested by government. They believed that government interference brought about the repression of industry.

Mr. Chairman, we loudly proclaim our abhorrence of the dictator. We condemn him for his disregard of the rights of the individual. We condemn him for the methods he pursues to accomplish his objectives and establish his dictatorships. We have all but declared war upon him. Yet, Mr. Chairman, the proposal we contemplate here, today, constitutes dictatorship nonetheless effective because adopted by democracy. The dictator at least proceeds by boldness, defiance, and daring, while we are lured by subtlety and craft.

I am opposed to this proposal. I am opposed because they who urge it seek to justify it upon the basis of an equity with the service required of citizens to be trained in the defense of their homes, their liberty, and their lives. The issues are not parallel.

I have urged repeatedly the compulsory selective training of the manhood of this Nation because I believe such training will develop and improve the physical power of that manhood. This proposal will destroy the physical power of the Nation's industry. I have urged the training of the manhood of the Nation because I believe it will vitalize the manhood of the Nation. This proposal will devitalize the industry of the Nation. I have urged the training of the manhood of the Nation because it will restore the moral fiber of the Nation. This proposal will demoralize the industry of the Nation.

I am, therefore, opposed to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote for the Smith amendment. It is by far short of conscription of industry, but is the best of all that has been offered; but I want to try to clarify one matter. We have been told through the press and otherwise that the Senate passed an amendment to the so-called conscription bill conscripting industries. That is not true. The only thing that the Senate did was to extend the right of eminent domain to proceedings of this kind and buy the property through that method. The only difference between that and this is that this is an extension of the right of eminent domain; their amendment does not require the United States Government to buy the property and pay the value of the property, but simply gives the Government the right to take it over and lease it and pay for the lease, which is much better for the Government.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] says it is unconstitutional. I am going to call his attention to what the rule is, what the courts have declared to be the rule in this country:

A taking of private property by the Government, when the emergency of the public service in time of war or impending public danger is too urgent to admit of delay, is everywhere regarded as justified, if the necessity for the use of the property is imperative and immediate, and the danger is impending.

We do not need to be in war. If there is such danger as is stated, that is all that is required. We have the right under the decisions of our courts to take this property whenever we cannot agree on it, but we must pay a reasonable value for the property that we get, and that is why this is not conscription of property. You cannot have conscription of property when you pay value for the property you get, and that is what you do in this case, and when the press states that the Congress in this law is conscripting industries, it is wrong. I do not want the public to be fooled. It gives an erroneous impression to the public. You are taking, but you are paying a reasonable value for it, and that is why you can take it. We can take private property for public use under the stated condition—by paying the value of it—but it is not conscription of industries.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER to the substitute offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: After the word "delivery" in the second line of subsection (b), strike out the word "or" and insert "and."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I believe that is a typographical error. I think the word "and" should be used there.

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BARTON of New York. With respect to these two amendments—the Vinson amendment and the Smith amendment—would the gentleman state, for the benefit of some of us on this side, which, in his opinion, is the better amendment?

Mr. TABER. With the adoption of this correcting amendment, which I have offered, which requires the Government not only to provide reasonable rates of delivery but also prices that would be fair and reasonable, I would say that the Vinson amendment was by far the better amendment.

Mr. BARTON of New York. May I just add that from my study of the two amendments I agree thoroughly with the gentleman that the Vinson amendment is the better.

Mr. TABER. I think it is. The trouble with both of them is that they provide for taking over property at prices, under the Vinson amendment, to be fixed by the Secretary, and in the Smith amendment without telling by whom. It just means that for 100 years, if plants were taken over in such a slipshod way as either one of these amendments provides, there would be claims before the War Claims Committee running into millions and millions of dollars, if there were any substantial number taken over. That is the trouble from the standpoint of the Government. From the standpoint of the workingman, the trouble is it only means a little bit of a while, a few days after any substantial industries are taken over, before we get regimentation of labor.

That is the trouble with the proposition of taking them over. I do not want to throw any stones in the way of progress of national defense. I do not believe there will be very many people who are offered a chance of a little better than breaking even who will not accept the work.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The theory of the Vinson amendment is based on the fact that a manufacturing plant has refused to accept an order, and no plant can be taken over until it refuses. Under the Smith amendment they can take over a plant even though no order has been offered.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I must disagree with that interpretation of section 120.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Well, read the law.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. It says "and in either such case," referring to, first, refusal to give preference, and, second, refusal to manufacture in the quantity or quality the munition desired——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. TABER. I hope the amendment I have offered will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 103, noes none.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to have to oppose the substitute offered by my beloved colleague from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], in whose good faith I have the utmost confidence, but in whose amendment I have no confidence at all. If it is desirable that legislation of this kind should be enacted—and I think it is—it should be effective legislation. It should be legislation of a character which would bring about that cooperation of recalcitrant units of industry with the Government in this period of emergency that all of us so desire to see.

The Committee on Military Affairs has carefully worked out legislation which, in my judgment, will achieve that end. To mention only one of the objections which occur to my mind to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], it contains no penalty. It does not provide for its continued effectiveness until the expiration in 1945 of the draft legislation which we propose to pass. You propose to pass legislation which may be invoked to draft the boys of this country into the Army until 1945, yet you hesitate to pass legislation which will, for the same period of time, insure the cooperation of industry. You are asked to pass legislation under which the boys of the country who refuse to respond can be imprisoned for a term of years, yet you are asked to vote down the committee amendment which would impose some penalties on industry if it refused to accord the measure of cooperation which the Government requires.

Why should the Members of this House become tenderfooted when you undertake to deal with the question of requiring the cooperation of industry? Why should you be willing to conscript the young manhood of the country, to conscript it for a longer period of time than you are willing to require the cooperation of industry and to impose severe penalties for its failure to comply with your draft regulations, and at the same time provide no penalty at all for the failure of industry to comply with the requirements which you impose upon it? I can conceive no justification for that attitude. There are many distinctions which might be made between the committee and Vinson amendments. Under the Vinson amendment no remedy would exist in such a case as that which arose when the Government tried to get the Ford Motor Co. to manufacture the Rolls-Royce engine. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] admitted that on the floor Tuesday last. A remedy would exist under the committee amendment, which requires cooperation whenever a plant, although not equipped to manufacture something the Government needs, may be readily transformed into a plant so equipped.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, not many of the Members seem aware of the fact that we are in a very complicated and difficult legislative situation. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], a moment ago said he was going to vote against both the Smith and the Vinson substitute amendments. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman and any others who are interested to the fact that if both of these amendments are defeated and one of them is not written into law, the sentence in the act of June 28 (Public, No. 671, 76th Cong.) remains in force. That sentence provides—

> That the Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, under the general direction of the President, whenever he deems any existing manufacturing plant or facility necessary for the national defense, and whenever he is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any such plant or facility for its use or operation, to take over and operate such plant or facility either by Government personnel or by contract with private firms: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to fix the compensation to the owner of such plant or facility.

Now, there is a very peculiar situation here. Both of these amendments before the committee strike out that sentence in the act of June 28. No one in this House has shown how that sentence came into the act of June 28. I think it was first requested of the Congress last winter by the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Edison, but was not granted to him. Later on it was found contained in a departmental draft of an appropriation bill and the House struck it out. Certainly it was not in the House version of the Navy speed-up bill, which is this act of June 28.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Both the amendment offered by the committee and my amendment repeal that for all time.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is right, but the gentleman knows that when the act of June 28 was passed in the House this sentence was not in the House bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is true. It came in in the conference report.

Mr. HINSHAW. It came in in the conference report, and nobody knows how it got there. All we know is that when the bill was signed by the President it contained that sentence.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct. Now, let us get down to something to improve on it.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is right.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Now, does not the gentleman think it is far better to have the Advisory Council have a voice in saying whether a plant shall be taken over than to permit some naval officer or some War Department officer, when he gets mad with some manufacturing plant, to go out and grab his plant?

Mr. HINSHAW. I certainly do.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly so; that is exactly what my amendment permits. My amendment permits and makes necessary that they consult the Advisory Commission. Then the Advisory Commission of the Council for National Defense tries to prevail upon them, and no plant will be taken over or can be taken over until all the force and power of the Advisory Commission has been used to persuade the plant; yet in the Smith amendment some admiral or major general could grab off a manufacturing plant because it has not done something he has wanted them to.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is exactly correct, and if this Senate amendment, known as the Overton-Russell amendment, remains in the law it would give every opportunity for any President of the United States or any Secretary of War or of the Navy to set up a totalitarian state in the United States right now, and for no good reason whatsoever. So the amendment should be adopted and this particular sentence stricken out. As a matter of fact if I wanted to set up a totalitarian state in the United States I would ask for a provision such as this one that has been surreptitiously placed in the law.

Mr. Chairman, let me repeat the sequence of events as I understand them. I believe that I have them nearly correct at least, although I have not had the time to engage in the research necessary to establish them. Some time last winter Acting Secretary of the Navy Edison said he wanted the authority granted by the sentence I have quoted. I think his request was made to a House committee. In the spring—perhaps April or May—this sentence, or one like it, appeared in a departmental draft of an appropriation bill, and it was stricken out either by the Appropriations Committee of the House or by a point of order made on the floor.

In June the Naval Affairs Committee brought us the so-called Navy speed-up bill. It was passed and sent to the Senate without any trace of this sentence in it. The Senate made certain minor amendments, but this sentence was not one of them, and the bill went to conference. The House and Senate conferees ironed out the differences, but this sentence was not even considered by them. The conferees reported to their respective bodies in unanimous agreement, and both House and Senate approved the conference report. This was on June 22, 1940. This sentence was not a part of that report, at least not to the knowledge of any of the House conferees. That bill (Public, 671, 76th Cong.) was signed by the President on June 28, 1940, and when it was signed it contained that sentence. I cannot find anyone who knows definitely how it got into that bill, as it was not considered by either the House or Senate or the conferees.

Mr. Chairman, evidently some one wanted that power very badly, and evidently they got it at last. On July 31, 1940, the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], introduced an amendment to the second naval appropriation bill repealing that language in Public, 671, and his amendment was unanimously adopted—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 9754–9755. That bill then went to the Senate and awaited action while that body disposed of the conscription bill now before us. While the Senate was amending the conscription bill, what is known as the Overton-Russell amendment was adopted. This amendment is almost identical with the sentence referred to except that the Secretary of War was also included as a grantee of these broad powers—powers that in one sentence make it lawful for the "man on horseback" to take over all the industry in the United States at any time, in peace or war, at practically his own price, if any.

Mr. Chairman, I would not be so concerned about this matter if I did not know that someone evidently wanted this power very badly and that it is, in a few simple words, a perfect vehicle for setting up the totalitarian state in this country without a struggle.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the House Committee on Military Affairs has brought in its own conscription bill now pending before us.

That committee, through its able and distinguished member, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH], has presented a committee amendment known as the Smith amendment, as an alternate in the House for the Overton-Russell amendment. Some of the curse of the Overton-Russell amendment is removed in the Smith amendment and it does have the effect of repealing that sentence from the act of June 28, Public, No. 671. Then the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], has introduced another amendment as a substitute, which further removes the curse and repeals that sentence in Public, No. 671.

But let us go back for a moment. Last week the Senate took up that appropriation bill containing Mr. VINSON's repealing language, and in a brief moment, and very cleverly, the repealing language was stricken from it. The reason offered was simply and sweetly that the matter had been taken care of in the conscription bill and was no longer needed, or words to that effect. Is that so, Mr. Chairman?

So now we find ourselves in the position where that sentence is still in the law, signed by the President on June 28, 1940, and the only immediate way left to repeal it is to adopt either the Vinson or the Smith amendments now before us. Otherwise it would take either a special bill to repeal or a rider on some bill now in process of passage would have to be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, the powerful powers that want this dictatorial power are bound to get it somehow, and to have and to hold it, in spite of all we can do to prevent it. It has been slid through like a greased pig, but it is so inconspicuous that in the midst of all the language coming before us it has taken sharp eyes to detect it. Finally, by what amounts to devious subterfuge, to say the least, it was gotten into the law and now it will be most difficult to get it out, if it can be gotten out at all.

Now the House and Senate versions of the conscription bill go to conference. There the Overton-Russell amendment will meet the Smith amendment. If the Senate insists on the Overton-Russell amendment and the House recedes, the way is clear for the "man on horseback." If the Smith amendment prevails then the way will be partly closed. If both of them are thrown out then the law, as contained in the act of June 28, 1940—Public, 671—is still on the books.

Mr. Chairman, the situation is diabolical; it is more than dangerous; it is exceedingly perilous for democracy. No good President should want that much power, and certainly no bad one should have it.

Mr. Chairman, if I were, by the grace of God and the high confidence of the people, President of the United States, and secretly wanted to be and become its permanent President—a dictator if you please—then I could ask no better vehicle created amidst confusion and fear for my sinister purpose.

If I could not obtain that power any other way than a measure for conscripting our manhood into an army, carrying, as it does, the long-cherished democratic ideal that if men must be conscripted for war so likewise must wealth and labor and machinery and farms be conscripted. Yes, such a measure passed amidst the din and roar of distant battle would be an easy way to obtain the means for my purpose. I would accentuate and promote fear of immediate invasion; I would rattle the sword and roll the drums; I would find some potential enemy to threaten and hope that he would make a hostile reply; I would, at least, pretend that we were weak and defenseless. In fact, I would do everything to create hysteria and confusion and fear in order that I might be looked upon as the only savior of my people, the "great man on the white horse."

Mr. Chairman, I bow my head humbly in prayer that that time has not come, and then I raise it to shout a warning to our people: "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance." Are we now too late?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike to find myself in the position of opposing an amendment offered by my colleague from Connecticut. In my humble opinion, no Member of this House has given more serious study nor done more hard work in an effort to develop and strengthen the national defense of this country than the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH]. [Applause.]

I oppose the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH] or the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] in time of peace. The adoption of either of these proposals will be but another step toward the establishment of a war economy in the United States. Consider, for a moment, the dictatorial powers we are granting to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and to the President of the United States. These officials, two of them political appointees, can go to a manufacturer who may be working on a war contract for Great Britain, for example, and say to that manufacturer to throw aside the millions of dollars he has invested in tooling up his factory, in the purchase of raw material, and so forth, and accept an order from the United States at a price we think is fair and reasonable. The fact that a representative of the United States Government urged this manufacturer to take the foregoing order a few months ago is beside the question. The fact that there are other manufacturers who can turn out the needed equipment and who would like to have the order does not mean a thing.

The President can simply say to the manufacturer, "You take this order at what I think is a fair price or else we will take over your plant for as long a time as we think it is needed. When we get through with your plant we will pay what we think is a fair price for the rental for the time we used it."

The fact that the manufacturer has lost his customers and his reputation is just too bad. On top of all this, the manufacturer can be thrown in prison for 3 years and fined $50,000. This is the proposal we are asked to accept in free America in time of peace and before Congress has even declared a state of emergency to exist.

The gentlemen who proposed these amendments have just one thought in mind—to speed up the procurement of needed war material. I believe, however, that the enactment of either of these amendments will slow up the procurement program.

Second only to the patriotism of our citizens is the ability of our industries to go into mass production of equipment badly needed by our Army and Navy. We are not going to secure cooperation from industry if we are going to hold a club over its head. At least not until it is proven that the club is necessary, and it has not been proven as yet. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Navy, members of the National Defense Advisory Commission, and the President of the United States have all stated recently that industry has cooperated to the fullest extent in our national defense expansion program.

The whole psychology of these amendments is wrong. We, as Members of Congress, cannot approach this question with clean hands. On the 8th of August, this year, I said on the floor of this House that it would take at least a month to get the excess-profits-tax bill passed by both bodies and signed by the President. Tomorrow is the 8th of September—the month has passed—and the Senate has not as yet had the tax bill before it for adoption. You will recall that the excess-profits-tax bill contained two provisions that should have been considered and passed by Congress separately weeks ago, one providing for amortization of investments made in plant expansion and the other the suspension of the provisions of the Vinson-Trammell Act.

This tax bill, containing these other important items, was driven through this House under the strictest possible gag rule, allowing only 2 hours of debate, protecting the bill against points of order and amendments. Mr. Knudsen recently told a Senate committee that the amortization features of the tax bill will not solve the problem nor make possible the awarding of contracts. It is now admitted that the bill, as it passed, or was driven through the House with its tremendously complicated technical language, contains jokers that will regiment industry for long after the war in Europe is over.

Industry in the United States wants and needs the contracts that should have been awarded 3 weeks ago. Is there a Member of this body who knows of a manufacturer in his district who does not want to take any order on which he can make a dollar today? Industry does not know its standing today. No manufacturer can set a price on his product until he knows what the Government will allow as overhead, and whether or not he will be allowed to amortize the investment of his own money he has made in plant expansion.

The taking over of a plant by the Federal Government of itself implies the taking over of the employees in that plant. Certainly we cannot suppose that the conscription of the physical assets of a plane or munitions factory will give us planes and munitions. It is the employed personnel of these factories, trained to handle the specialized tools, which is the necessary factor in production. Therefore, when we authorize the conscription of industry, we authorize not only the conscription of buildings and machines but conscription of the men to work in the buildings and run the machines. If an industry is taken over, the employees must be taken over as well.

And further, what guaranty is there in the bill, or in the Smith-Vinson amendments, that the men conscripted will not be placed in the factories taken over by the Government on the claim that they are learning how to build planes, guns, and so forth? It appears permissible that the Government may take over plants and fill them with Government personnel or conscripts and I challenge the efficiency of or the excuse for such action. Not only are we granting authority for Federal control of private property in this bill, we are going even further and granting vast Federal control over personal freedom of the individuals by the implied power to conscript labor. Let us give industry a copy of the rules.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Would they not be in a more dangerous position under the Smith amendment? Under that amendment should they refuse to take an order, the War Department or the Navy Department could take them over.

Mr. MILLER. There is no question about that, but I am opposed to both amendments.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks, and to include a telegram, I insert the following telegram received from one of my constitutents to show how deeply concerned some of our citizens are at the present time:

Vote on guard bill and amendments—ADAMS, Senate, MILLER, House—is a revelation of purposes for which our citizens and our dollars are to be used under the guise of national defense. We are preparing an international defense in allegiance to the Monroe Doctrine, and in defiance of the Constitution we have on order—and we are not at war—a compulsory international army to force adherence of all other countries to this doctrine if and when a theoretical danger threatens the Western Hemisphere in the mind of our President. The guard bill and the Burke-Wadsworth bill is for international defense—which is positively unconstitutional. The proposed conscription army is for international defense, not merely national defense; our allegiance is to the United States and not the Western Hemisphere. I propose full investigation before action. Glad to help with time or advice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, as between the two proposals that have been submitted this afternoon, it occurs to me that the one offered by the gentleman from Georgia is preferable. I am sure the Committee does not understand it entirely, and I shall be glad to yield to him to make any further comment on it he wishes. In this connection I hope he will emphasize that before any action is taken by the Government under his proposal it must be upon the affirmative recommendation of the Council for National Defense.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As the gentleman from New York said, it can be done only upon the recommendation of the Council for National Defense.

This is very important. I have in this amendment thrown around industry the strong protective arm of the Advisory Committee of the Council of National Defense. Under the law of 1916—and that is incorporated in the Smith amendment—the War Department or the Navy Department without any industry refusing to accept an order could take over that plant if it saw fit; but under my amendment the Navy Department is required first to place an order. If then the order is refused the Advisory Council is called in and if the Advisory Council cannot persuade the industry to take the order then the President steps in and either leases or takes the plant. That is the vital difference between the two proposals; that is the fundamental premise upon which my amendment is based.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. How can the gentleman say that under a condemnation proceeding there will not be a final judgment if there is a valuation of the property and vesting of title in the Government?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As to the penalty, both amendments are identically the same. Both will have to go to the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] for 1 minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The House has been told today that this legislation is proper because of the existence of a limited emergency or of an emergency. Listen to this statement from a Government publication printed this year, and which shows that this administration has been intent upon getting us into war for some time. Otherwise, we would not find this statement in a Government publication. Let me quote:

> The Nation is at war and every registrant is thus put on notice to know his position and duty.

Here we have a statement printed by authority of the administration that "the Nation is at war." Why is not the administration frank with the American people?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD] for 1½ minutes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH]. My reasons for so doing are that I cannot conceive of the House consenting to draft the manpower of this Nation for training for national defense and at the same time permit industry to arrogantly say that it will produce essential defensive materials only if it is permitted to profiteer at the National Treasury's expense.

We are told by those who oppose drafting industry that if industry is not permitted to produce on its own terms, that these essential materials will not be forthcoming. The materials in question may be airplane engines, clothing for the men in the service, vital parts of guns, airplanes, tanks, or other essential parts that make up the sum total of the instruments essential to the defense of the Nation.

Do I understand that this body is willing that any man, firm, or corporation is to be permitted to say to the United States Government, "We and we alone can produce this or that particular material, and by reason of our fortunate position we insist that you pay us our price, regardless of whether or not that price is exorbitant"?

I am sure that this House will not bow to that kind of arrogance. Mr. Willkie may rave that it is un-American to draft industry; he may later see the error of his ways and recant; but the bald fact remains that if men are to be drafted, regardless of the financial sacrifice involved, then surely industry must of necessity share the same fate if it refuses to cooperate on reasonable terms. I had not intended to inject politics into this argument, but since Mr. Willkie has seen fit to do so I may be pardoned.

I am very glad that Mr. Willkie, without thought of repercussions that might result from his remarks, in effect told the country that he, a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, considers profits of more importance than men.

The fact that he later repudiated his first statement is, I believe, unimportant. His repudiation came only after a group of his supporters frantically high-pressured him into repudiation.

While this amendment does not go as far as I would like it to go, it is, I realize, the best we can get. That being so, I beg of you to adopt it. It is just, and I frankly believe it is essential to the national defense of the Nation.

As a matter of fact, it may never be needed. But I would sooner it were there. We may never need the men we are calling into service, but it is wiser to have called them and not need them than to need them and not have called them. As a very wise Administrator, the Honorable Jesse Jones has said, referring to another matter, this provision in the law will be "a shotgun in the corner."

The bill now before the House provides for training 600,000 men for the armed forces of the United States. Those called through the draft will be called for 1 year only. This is not compulsory military service; it is compulsory training for men who may be needed. The bill prohibits these men being sent for service outside of this hemisphere. I could not vote for the bill if it did not thus prohibit sending our men to fight in Europe.

Personally I favor the Senate provision limiting the age of those to be registered under the draft to 21 to 31.

It is my hope and my belief that with our planned defense made complete by the provisions of this bill, not one man called will ever have to actually participate in war. Let us make our defense so impregnable that no enemy will dare to challenge us. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the remarks I desired to make have been made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], in which I heartily concur.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, again we hear the words "national emergency." What is this national emergency? Defense against Hitlerism? Defense against national socialism?

For the past 8 years we have seen one emergency after another used as the excuse for forcing Government into business of all kinds, forcing Government into the utility field, forcing Government into control of all forms of transportation, forcing Government into banking, forcing Government into insurance, and, yes, even into attempts at regulating our private lives. For 8 long years we have traveled steadily along the road leading to national socialism of economy. Now we are going to go through with the final climax, the complete Hitlerization of this Government. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, a vote for this bill is a vote for the complete Hitlerization of America that we are said to be out to defend ourselves against. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, when the American people grasp the full import of our action here tonight, when they grasp the full import of the powers of regimentation contained in this legislation, when they grasp the full import of the powers of military dictatorship, the additional powers of the Congress again surrendered to the Executive—when the American people grasp the full meaning of what you are doing here tonight, some of you are not going to be returned this fall if you vote for this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, if this emergency does now actually exist, American youth, American industry, American labor, and American wealth will respond voluntarily to defend our republican form of government—our cherished ideals and traditions. It is a confession of weakness, a confession of a lack of confidence in the way we have been heading toward national socialism that now forces you to demand this conscription bill at this time.

Why do you not tell America frankly who and what is behind this measure? Why do you not tell America that you believe complete Hitlerization of our country—yes, possibly of this entire Western Hemisphere—is your chosen defense against the Hitler of Europe. You dare not confess that this measure in itself is a complete repudiation of 8 years of your New Deal. This proves your fear that you have brought about the greatest part of our national defense—our internal economy.

Mr. Chairman, again you speak of an emergency and again you cleverly build a smoke screen to distract our attention to blind us to our internal affairs—our own difficulties right here at home. Again I say, a vote for this conscription bill is a vote to complete the Hitlerization of America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOLLES].

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, at one time there was a Congressman named Tim Campbell from New York who made a very famous contribution to the procedings of the House when he inquired: "What is the Constitution between friends?" For the last 4 or 5 days we have been trying to perfect a black-out of the Constitution of the United States and many of the things that were given to the people of this country by adoption of that great document. Now we find ourselves about to have the Government conscript our labor as well as our men.

I want to ask the proponents of these amendments, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], particularly, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH] what are you going to do to labor? Are you going to conscript labor? What are you going to do about that? How are you going to operate a factory that is conscripted by the Government if you do not conscript labor? The adoption of either one of these amendments means the conscription of American labor and putting it by force into these factories. There is nothing to prevent the Government from taking conscripted men in the Army and putting them at work in the factories.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it was rather interesting to me to hear the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] protesting against drafting industry after his vehement protests the other day against the amendment to give men the opportunity to volunteer before applying the draft.

So far as I am individually concerned, I am in favor of the Government manufacturing its own munitions of war. I am tired of seeing multimillionaires made out of every crisis we have, while the people who serve and suffer pay the bills.

Above all things, this Smith amendment ought to be adopted.

Did you know that during the last war 23,000 men became millionaires out of war profits? If you have ever attended an American Legion convention or any other convention of World War veterans you would know that they are not going to stand for such profiteering in the future. Their wealth accumulated while the soldiers were suffering and dying.

Today with the country only 150 years old we are told that less than 5 percent of our people own more than 90 percent of the Nation's wealth. The other 95 percent of the people own only 10 percent of the country's wealth. This wealth has been concentrated in the hands of these profiteers, and their fortunes increased with every war we have had. If this emergency is serious enough for us to call the young men of this Nation to the colors, Mr. Chairman, it is sufficiently serious for us to call to the colors the industries necessary to supply the material to keep those men going. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have not heretofore participated in the debate on the pending so-called conscription bill nor on the many amendments offered by friends as well as foes of the measure. This debate has already been too long. If there is a real danger facing our country, and practically all agree that such is the case, then the situation demands less talk and more action by this Congress. [Applause.]

But Mr. Chairman, I have been somewhat surprised and disappointed to hear so many Members who are enthusiastically urging the drafting of the young men of the country for 1 year's military training, who at the same time are loud and vociferous in their opposition to any suggestion that the Government even require industry to cooperate during any emergency.

During the past 20 years the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and many other patriotic organizations have consistently advocated the drafting of industries and the wealth of the Nation as well as its manpower in case of future wars. Surely it is not unreasonable to say that wealth, materials, and even money is no more sacred than is the youth of the land. [Applause.]

Of course, the so-called Smith amendment, offered by the committee, does not pretend to draft industry. It does not go as far as the so-called Overton-Russell amendment as passed by the Senate bill. But it does have for its purpose requiring industry to cooperate with the Government. I am not one of those who feel that the average industry will refuse to cooperate unless made to do so. But I have not forgotten that only a few days ago there was placed in one of the defense bills a provision raising the limit from 8 to 12 percent that airplane factories may hereafter be permitted to make on contracts with the Government. And when I protested against such a provision we were frankly told that it was essential in order to secure the cooperation of certain airplane factories. This amendment will have the desired effect on industries, which might otherwise refuse to cooperate, but insist on their "pound of flesh."

Should the word go out to the country that while drafting manpower this Congress had refused to give industry to understand that it must also do its share. I am wondering if such an announcement would meet with the enthusiasm on the part of the youth of America?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Both of these amendments deal with the same subject matter. That word cannot go out to the country that you have drafted the boy and have not dealt with industry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, yes; both deal with the subject, but I am frankly of the opinion that the Smith amendment will be a lot more persuasive to industry that might refuse to cooperate with the Government than the one offered by my good friend, the gentleman from Georgia. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he stated on this floor during this debate that all industry is now cooperating and that it will continue to do so. I sincerely trust that the gentleman is correct. But the American people have not forgotten how some of the big industries of the country profiteered disgracefully during the World War. Surely the gentleman has not so soon forgotten the flagrant abuses by some of our well-known industries.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That was 20 years ago. I am talking about now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; it was 20 years ago that 23,000 millionaires were made during a brief war period, but the spots of the leopard do not change, even in 20 years. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that either one of these amendments, and especially the Overton amendment as carried in the Senate bill, ought to be included in this legislation which is devoted exclusively to preparation for defense in manpower. The control of industry in the preparedness program is of such vital importance that it ought to be considered in a special bill by itself. However, under the circumstances I am going to vote for the Vinson amendment and I wish, before I sit down, to thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], for expressing substantially my views in his able speech, and at the same time to express my sorrow over the sufferings of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. His trouble against tainted money seems to be that it "t'aint" his.

The CHAIRMAN. As this exhausts the list, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] for 4 minutes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, frankly, I believe that if you wish to scuttle this program all you have to do is adopt the Vinson amendment. You have been definitely told that the Vinson amendment provides for no penalties, and you are correctly so informed. The only penalty whatever that the gentleman refers to in his comments on his amendment is the penalty of taking over the plants. Nothing else is suffered by the owner, no matter how or when or to what extent he refuses to comply or to cooperate with the Government during this emergency.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I decline to yield at the present time.

The gentleman from Georgia has explained to you some of the steps that it is necessary to go through before you take over a plant, but he falls far short of explaining all of the steps. Of all the red tape that involves the Washington governmental procedure, adopt this amendment and you will have the greatest pyramid of red tape that has ever been conceived. Read his comment, if you will at bottom of left-hand column on page 11447. The first step is that the firm must refuse. Second, the Secretaries of War and the Navy must go to the Advisory Committee. Third, the Advisory Committee must go to the manufacturer and try to appease him. Fourth, failing that, they so advise the President. Fifth, the President must advise with the Secretaries. Sixth, the Secretaries will then try to lease the property. Seventh, failing in that, they must report back to the President and tell him they cannot lease the property. Then finally, as the eighth step, the President may order that the factory be taken over.

There are the steps that the gentleman's comment indicate you must take in order to accomplish the purposes you are trying to accomplish under this amendment. Furthermore, the gentleman has tried to infrom this House that you do not have to have an order, that there does not have to be a refusal before the Smith amendment can be operative. That is not so. The provisions of the Smith amendment definitely show that the Government must give an order to a manufacturer, who must refuse either to give preference to the execution or the order or he must refuse to manufacture, and not until he does either the one or the other can you possibly invoke the provisions of the Smith amendment. The Smith amendment merely provides that you take the property over and you pay a reasonable rental for the use thereof. If the manufacturer still refuses, then you can invoke the further penalty upon him as provided by this amendment. Under the Vinson amendment, if he still refuses to give over the property, there are no penalties which you can further inflict.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Vinson amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] stated that his amendment had the full approval of the Navy Department. May I ask the gentleman if it is not true that the Smith amendment, which was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, has the full approval of the War Department?

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say to the gentleman that it has, and this legislation comes out of the Committee on Military Affairs. The amendment was very thoroughly discussed by the full Committee on Military Affairs. It was not presented by just one Member, but is the result of committee study and committee consideration.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I do not anticipate that it will be necessary to invoke the provisions of this amendment, as American industrialists are only too willing to cooperate with the Government in times of stress such as the present. To verify my statement, I would like to call attention of the Members to what the aviation industry has already done in the way of expansion of their plants in order to produce the required number of planes which the President is asking.

The growth of aircraft manufacturing, Los Angeles County, 1939–40

	Jan. 1, 1939	Jan. 1, 1940	Aug. 1, 1940
Size of fixed plants.....square feet..	2,000,000	2,714,000	3,836,970
Number of employees.....	15,930	26,274	41,756
Monthly pay roll.....	$2,000,000	$3,638,000	$6,175,280

For the next 4 months, and again for the following 4 months, the expansion will be greater than the gains for the whole 12 months of 1939 and greater than the gains of the first 7 months of 1940. This expansion is now under way and proceeding on schedule.

This indicates what is happening in my own county of Los Angeles alone. The same spirit of cooperation is being evidenced elsewhere throughout the Nation. The only need for this amendment is to make it possible for the Government to take over the plant of that manufacturer who would refuse to aid the Nation in a time of need. Having the power, it will not be invoked, just as this Nation being prepared for its defense, in all likelihood, will not need to use that defense. That is why I favor this bill, as I would rather be in error in passing this legislation than I would want to be in error in opposing it, only to learn next year that it should have been passed but was not. The first error can be remedied, but error in the latter case, might prove fatal. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the Members will defeat the Vinson substitute and accept the Smith amendment, thus protecting the bill as recommended by the House committee.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VINSON of Georgia) there were—ayes 100, noes 117.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio) there were ayes 211 and noes 31.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GUYER of Kansas: On page 34, after line 20, insert a new section, to be properly numbered, to read as follows:

"SEC. —. That the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces of the United States, is authorized to make such regulations as he may from time to time deem necessary or advisable to prohibit intoxicating or spirituous liquors, including beer, ale, and wine, to officers and enlisted men of the land and naval forces of the United States, including persons inducted into the land and naval forces for training purposes under the authority of this act, in or near any military camp, naval base, or other post, station, or premises being used for military or naval purposes by the land or naval forces of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or other proper administrative authority may make regulations permitting the sale and use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes. It shall be unlawful to sell any intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale, or wine, to any officer or member of the land or naval forces of the United States while in uniform, except as herein provided. Any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating the provisions of this section or of the regulations made thereunder shall, unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or both."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I ask the chairman if he has any objection to this section.

Mr. MAY. I certainly do or I would not have reserved the point of order.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I understand that the gentleman introduced it in the committee.

Mr. MAY. I am willing to give the gentleman a chance to speak. Go ahead.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. As to the point of order, this provision is the identical provision adopted in the draft bill of May 18, 1917.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. That is when all the trouble started.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. The trouble is not over yet, but that was not what caused it. Anybody that thinks the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors upon military reservations had anything to do with any kind of trouble that you had has something wrong with his intellectual processes.

I will tell you one of the reasons why the French Army doubled up. It was because they were besotted with liquor. This was the universal verdict of the press all over the world. No matter what you think about the propriety of drinking liquor, it should not be sold on military reservations.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane. It relates to the liquor traffic, an entirely different matter from conscription.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Kansas had confined his amendment to affect only those covered by the pending bill, it would have undoubtedly been germane and in order. However, the amendment is all-inclusive and covers the officers and enlisted men of the land and naval forces of the United States. It goes far beyond the scope of this bill. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, some time ago in a speech before the House, I announced my opposition to this legislation. Having always felt that it was the duty of a Member of Congress in opposing major legislation to offer some constructive suggestions in lieu of that which he proposed to vote against, I therefore offered six suggestions, as follows:

First. Determine whether the Census Bureau can supply from the last census information that would enable the compiling of the names of all eligible for service. If that cannot be furnished, then authorize the registration but do not extend the power to conscript at this time.

Second. Agree to provide all facilities necessary to any educational institution in the United States, private or public, for voluntary military training.

Third. Extend the same facilities to the Civilian Conservation Corps for voluntary military training.

Fourth. Provide for 1-year enlistments in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Fifth. Require the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to change their present policy, as well as rules and regulations, relative to enlistments, so that men with minor defects such as a missing tooth or an injured toe will not be denied the right to enlist.

Sixth. Give the President authority to call out the National Guard and the Officers Reserve Corps, as he has requested.

Since that time, the sixth suggestion has been enacted into law.

The statistics just announced showing voluntary enlistments in the Army for the month of August exceeding the number that have ever entered the service during a given period in peacetime seems to confirm my view that a sufficient number of men can be secured if we will provide for 1-year enlistments and raise the pay of the enlisted men to $30 a month.

On no occasion since I became a Member of Congress have I ever voted against major legislation recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Military Affairs, or the subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee having charge of the appropriations for the Army and Navy.

During the Coolidge administration, and the first 2 years of the Hoover administration, the Republican Party was in charge of the committees. I simply mention this to show I have not looked at the subject of national defense from a partisan standpoint.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House, requested me to place my suggestions before the committee in writing. I complied with his request.

I have the honor to represent, in part, the city of St. Louis. Naturally, there has come to me many appeals from those who have sought to enlist in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, who have been denied the right to enter the service because they could not pass all the physical requirements. In some instances the defect was minor, and I did succeed in getting the Surgeon General of the Army or Navy to waive and permit the enlistment. Recently, a young man who graduated from the Missouri University, had 2 years' experience with the R. O. T. C., and 5 years' experience as an assistant Scoutmaster, was denied the right to enlist in the Naval Reserve because he did not meet the height requirements. I called attention to the Navy Department that this young man, if within the age limit, could meet the height requirements of the Naval Academy and, therefore, it seemed to me that the least the Navy could do would be to change the height requirements of the Naval Reserve to that required by the Naval Academy. I am pleased to say this action was taken. In the last 25 years I have known a number of outstanding men in the Navy, including, I might mention, Admiral Upton, who only a few years ago was Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, who were not tall enough to meet the height requirements of the Naval Academy today. Admiral Upton served with distinction in the Battle of Manila Bay, and at the time of his retirement, had reached the highest grade.

I refer to this to show you it is possible to change rules and regulations and permit young men anxious to enter the service to enlist.

I did not come to my conclusion not to support this legislation until I had read testimony of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, as well as the Chief of Staff of the Army. It was shown the Army did not have the equipment and the facilities to even take care of the National Guard, and at the outset they would only call a few units of the guard. If they cannot take care of the National Guard, how can they take care of conscripted men?

Recently, Lieutenant Colonel Watt, assigned to duty with the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, prepared a memorandum for Senator HOLMAN which was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Reading that memorandum, I felt it was in direct conflict with the testimony of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff, General Marshall. I wrote the Secretary of War and asked for an explanation. I now quote his reply:

DEAR MR. COCHRAN: I think the difficulty you have in reconciling Lieutenant Colonel Watt's memorandum for Senator HOLMAN, as printed in the enclosed page from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the statements that General Marshall and I made before the House Appropriations Committee lies in the failure to distinguish between equipment and facilities.

You will note that Colonel Watt's memorandum refers only to equipment. By this we mean the arms and individual and organizational equipment required for training purposes. As you know, the guard now has most of this equipment.

If you will refer to page 118 of the hearings of the House Committee on Appropriations, you will find that my reply to Mr. POWERS with regard to delay in inducting the National Guard referred to "available facilities," and that General Marshall then added that shelter is an important consideration. Facilities or shelter refer to housing, water supply, sewerage, and similar installations at the camps or stations where units are to be trained. It is primarily a shortage of these things that will make it necessary for us to bring the National Guard to active duty in successive increments as the required facilities can be made available. In a great many cases, of course, construction cannot be started until the money is made available for that specific purpose.

With regard to equipment, as such, General Marshall has testified before both the House and Senate Military Affairs Committees to the effect that the necessary equipment is or will be available when the guard is inducted.

I hope this answers your question.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of War.

I have talked with officers of the National Guard recently returned from camp. I discussed equipment with the major in charge of a tank corps. While the Secretary informs me that the guard has most of its equipment, nevertheless, this major stated that his organization had but one tank and was given trucks to use in lieu of tanks for training purposes. If you will read the Secretary's letter carefully, especially the last paragraph, it seems to me that the War Department not only lacks the facilities but also the equipment because the Secretary says in conclusion that the necessary equipment is or will be available when the guard is inducted. I only hope that he is correct, but I feel from what I have read that it will be some time before sufficient equipment to supply the entire National Guard will be available and, of course, if the calling out of the guard is delayed until it is available it will be some time before members of the guard are all inducted.

I could refer to other statements that have been made to me in reference to those who have actually been in camp and the experience they had.

Mr. Chairman, I am not blaming anyone for the situation that confronts us in reference to equipment and facilities because I do not know where the blame should be placed. I do feel that the War and Navy Departments should always take the committees of the Congress into their confidence and supply them with all information they should have in determining whether or not legislation and appropriations are needed for a proper adequate national defense. I was very much disturbed when I asked many members of the Military and Naval Affairs Committees, as well as the members of the subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee handling the military and naval appropriations, as to whether or not information had been given to them in reference to the activities of Germany in constructing the large tanks, the tremendous number of airplanes, providing for the use of flame throwers, the training of parachute troops, and so forth, and was advised by all that they had had absolutely no information direct from the War and Navy Departments on the subject. I was thinking very seriously of making a speech demanding to know what the military and naval attachés had been doing in Germany and other countries if they had not notified their superiors of the activity of foreign nations in reference to preparedness, and especially Germany. I did not make this speech, as a very outstanding newspaperman with whom I had discussed the matter advised me not to do so, because he said that, while he was in Germany, one of the military attachés had told him the entire story and advised him he had informed the Department. Why, then, I ask, did the Department not give the information to the Congress that we might have appropriated some money and proceeded to secure new equipment?

I realize that men must be in physical condition and properly trained before they can render efficient service with the Army or Navy. There is a vast difference in the method of warfare today in comparison with what existed when we entered the World War. What I have read in reference to the movement of German troops convinces me that the tanks, artillery, and planes have moved up and should now be known as the first line of defense. The infantry comes along and takes over the areas after the tanks, artillery, and planes have moved forward. Why, in some instances, according to the papers, the German infantry was nothing more than military police in some of the engagements.

What we need in the Army and Navy, in my candid opinion, are officers who are willing to change their views when it is demonstrated that some new method of warfare is more effective than the one which they have advocated.

Let me refer briefly to a very interesting experience I had after the World War. As the guest of the then Chief of Operations of the Navy, Admiral Coontz, I witnessed the destruction of what was termed an unsinkable battleship off of the Virginia capes. This ship was allocated to the United States for scientific purposes and while not fully completed, was part of the German Navy. As I recall it, it had five armored decks with many water-tight compartments. We went to the scene on an Army transport. Aboard that transport were the highest ranking officers in the Army and Navy, and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy were also on the scene, as well as the military and naval attachés of all foreign embassies and legations assigned to duty in this country. The first day there were some experiments, but finally the large bombs were to be dropped. Six Army bombers from Langley Field appeared on the scene in battle formation a mile or so apart. Despite the fact that the first bomb dropped landed in the water far astern of the ship, within 19½ minutes by my watch, after that first bomb was dropped which caused no damage, that great vessel had keeled over and disappeared from the surface of the water, stern first. There were four direct hits. When I tell you that Admiral Coontz advised me it would be impossible for the bombers to sink that ship and that it was his intention after their attempt to send the U. S. S. Pennsylvania, then the flagship of the Atlantic squadron, off 5 miles and destroy the vessel, you can realize what a surprise this was to the Navy. Of course, the Army people were highly elated over the success of the bombers. The alibi of the Navy was that it was all offensive and no defensive; further, that the ship was stationary rather than moving. This was true but, nevertheless, it had been demonstrated nearly 20 years ago that bombs could destroy what was termed an unsinkable battleship, the like of which we did not have in our Navy. What improvements resulted from that experiment I do not know, but it does seem to me that the result warranted both Army and Navy officials of changing their views and taking some action in the way of improvements that would have been extremely beneficial.

Mr. Chairman, what we need, and need badly, are planes and tanks. It does take time to train a man for combat service but we have already made provisions and we have thousands of students throughout the country now in training who seek to become pilots. As for the tanks, I am advised that anyone capable of running a truck, a competent automobile driver, could be schooled in 2 weeks to run a tank. The Regular Army men could be assigned to handle the guns.

Right now it seems to me it is our duty to get the equipment and plenty of it.

The last appropriation bill has now been agreed to and is in the hands of the President. Congress has given billions for equipment and facilities. Speed is essential. Let those whose responsibility requires them to secure the equipment and provide the facilities to take care of the men do their duty and let Congress see that they do and do it right.

If you do not want voluntary military training for the Civilian Conservation Corps, then let us provide facilities to make mechanics out of the young men. Prepare them so they can qualify as airplane mechanics as well as teach them to care for the tanks. This will not only guarantee trained men for this purpose in time of war but it will likewise enable the boys, when they leave the C. C. C., to secure employment. I feel they will welcome this education.

There is a provision in this bill that appeals to me. It is the section that will enable the Government to take over industrial plants where the owners refuse to cooperate. It is unthinkable that we would draft manpower and then not provide to take over industry that refuses to cooperate.

So far as I am concerned, I will vote for special legislation giving the departments power to acquire industries that will not cooperate during this emergency, conscription or no conscription.

Mr. Chairman, in perfecting this bill in committee I supported the amendment providing the provisions of the bill shall not go into effect for 60 days, but in the end, firmly convinced it will not be harmful to delay conscripting men until after the volunteer system has been given a fair trial and the entire National Guard called out, I intend to vote against the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. (a) Every person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon publication by the President of a proclamation or other public notice requiring registration.

(b) If any section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase of this act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining sections or portions of this act.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not like to impose unduly upon the time of the House this afternoon by recurring to a subject already discussed, but you will recall that during the afternoon we considered the provision that holds out the hope to the draftees that their reemployment can be compelled under subdivision (f) of section 8.

Mr. Chairman, in the name of legislative integrity, if, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], a member of the committee, admitted, this is only a statement of policy, in all decency and fairness and honesty let us say so. Let us not let the word go out to the draftees that they have the legal right under this bill to enforce their reemployment after their service ends, and then hold out to them the sham—and I do not want to use language too severe here—of a meaningless section which cannot be enforced in any court of the land. If this is true, as admitted by the gentleman of the committee who is a great lawyer, let us make it a statement of policy in the policy portion of the bill, or in conference let us make it legally enforceable, and failing in that abandon it altogether.

I make these suggestions in the hope that in conference the matter will either be dropped or be reduced to a statement of policy, rather than allow a provision to remain in the bill that is altogether nonenforceable in its present form. I hope the committee will give consideration to making it either a statement of policy, or of leaving it out of the bill, or so drafting it in shape so that it is a legal verity. Let us not hold out a hope to the draftees that cannot be enforced when the time comes to try its efficacy. That is not fair to the draftees. It cannot be fair to this House to do a thing of that kind. [Applause.] In its present form it reflects no credit on the intelligence and good faith of this House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. HAWKS. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, at this time, when the Congress of the United States is considering the question of conscription, I deem it particularly appropriate to enter my strenuous protest against the presently existing regulations of the War and Navy Departments which bar a physician or surgeon from entering the commissioned service in either branch unless he happens to be a graduate of a medical institution which has won the approval of the American Medical Association. More specifically, I object to a ruling which says in effect that regardless of the fact that a doctor has been admitted to practice medicine after a strict and scrutinizing State board examination, regardless of how many years a doctor may have been practicing, and disregarding the fact that the doctor or surgeon may be highly regarded as an outstanding practitioner in his State, his application to serve his country as a commissioned officer in the Medical Corps is summarily rejected because the school he attended did not meet with the approval of the American Medical Association.

I have in mind a situation in the State of Massachusetts, where there are practicing today 795 physicians and surgeons who are graduates of the Middlesex University School of Medicine. This medical school has been conferring degrees of M. D. as far back as 1918, and its graduates can be found in almost every city and town of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Most of these doctors have achieved positions of respect in their community for their character and ability, and many of them are today enjoying positions such as medical examiners, city or town physicians, and school physicians. The graduates of this school, under the Massachusetts law, are obliged to take the same State board examinations which are afforded to the graduates of Harvard, Boston University, and Tufts Medical Schools, and after practicing over a period of at least 5 years they are eligible for a fellowship in the Massachusetts Medical Society, which is akin to the American Medical Association.

While this situation could be corrected by the War and Navy Departments through administrative action, it is apparent to me, at the present time, that the War Department, at least does not intend to do so, and that legislation to meet this unfair and unwarranted situation on the part of Government is necessary. The Government of the people should treat all alike. What the Government should do is to determine the ability of the individual, and not arbitrarily, even where there is no intentional discrimination, determine the ability of a doctor by the school he graduated from. As a matter of fact, men of the type of the graduates of this and similarly situated schools should be encouraged, rather than discouraged. Ambitious to go ahead, and their ambition directing them to become a member of the medical profession, under adverse conditions, in most cases, they studied in what might be properly termed the "hard way." Certainly, our Government through any of its departments should not allow a condition to exist as a result of which men and women of the type affected by the policy of the War and Navy Departments are severely penalized. Our Government serves all of the people; it should not in any way allow a policy to exist that produces discriminatory results to any of its citizens.

To meet this situation, I have introduced a bill relating to the qualifications of applicants for appointment as medical officer in the military or naval forces.

The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That no individual who is licensed to practice medicine under the laws of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall be ineligible for appointment, or for examination for appointment, as a medical officer in the active or reserve components of the military or naval forces of the United States solely by reason of any rating or classification of the medical school from which such individual was graduated.

You will note that the bill provides that a doctor applying for a commission must be Licensed to practice medicine under the laws of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia * * *.

That means that a doctor must have passed the State examination that is a condition precedent to a graduate of a medical school, or of any person being allowed to practice medicine in that State. The men affected must pass the same examination that any other person must pass. If so, why should the War and Navy Departments persist in a policy that results in such discrimination? I hope that this situation will be corrected by these Departments through administrative action rather than legislative action.

The alumni of Middlesex University School of Medicine have recently succeeded in interesting in their problems such men as Dr. Elliott P. Joslin, the eminent international authority on diabetes and a moving factor in national and local medical associations, Dr. Stephen A. Rushmore, of the Massachusetts State Board of Registration of Medicine; Dr. Harry Germaine, surgeon in chief of the Cambridge (Mass.) City Hospital; and Dr. Augustus P. Riley, outstanding urinologist, who has been associated with many hospitals, principally the Boston City Hospital, for a period of many years. These men named have in one way or another, signified their sincere interest in the problems of the graduates of this medical school and have cooperated with the alumni in many ways.

It must be emphatically understood that Middlesex University School of Medicine is not, and has never been, a so-called "diploma mill," but on the contrary, has graduated men and women into the medical profession, who have been a credit and a distinction to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

I agree that it is the desire of the people of this country and of the Congress to have in its military and naval service, a corps of physicians and surgeons who are adequately trained and educated, but I contend that a policy which precludes even cursory inquiry into the qualifications of an applicant merely because he is a graduate of a school unaccepted by the American Medical Association, is absolutely wrong and unjust. When a graduate of this school, not classed as acceptable by the American Medical Association, files an application for commissioned service in the Medical Corps of either branch of our armed service, the same is summarily rejected, and this despite the fact that the applicant in question may be one of the outstanding practicing surgeons of Massachusetts.

Picture, if you will, the case for example, of Dr. Harold L. Musgrave, of Revere, Mass., who has been practicing medicine and surgery for over 20 years, is vice president of the Chelsea Memorial Hospital, a fellow and district councillor of the Massachusetts Medical Society, identified with various hospitals and medical associations and one of the outstanding physicians and surgeons of Massachusetts, being inducted under the proposed Conscription Act, into the service of the country as an enlisted man, performing the menial duties of such, perhaps under the command of a youngster who recently graduated from Harvard, Boston University, or Tufts Medical School. This is not a stretch of the imagination, but in fact is entirely possible under the present regulations. Can it be said that a ruling which provides for such a policy is equitable and efficient? It would make no difference under the present regulations who the applicant may be or what may have been his training and ability, for he has stated in his application that he is a graduate of an institution frowned upon by the American Medical Association. It certainly is difficult to understand wherein the justice and equities lie in any rule which precludes the slightest inquiry into the qualifications of an applicant. It would be a hectic state of affairs if similar requisites were made in the case of the legal profession wherein it is well known that many of the outstanding leaders of that profession and even members of the judiciary, are graduates of night law schools.

The War Department has recently stated that if the Middlesex University School of Medicine can succeed in obtaining the approval of the American Medical Association, then at that time it would welcome immediately into the commissioned service of the Army and its Reserves the doctors and surgeons who are graduates of this school. I am unable to determine the logic of this particular reasoning of the War Department wherein they reject today a surgeon who desires to enter its service merely because he matriculated at this particular school but eminently qualifies and readily accepts him tomorrow on the strength of the official approval of a medical association. What change comes over a doctor who graduated from a so-called unapproved school 20 years ago when tomorrow the American Medical Association waves its magic wand of approval? If by reason of his training, education, and experience a doctor or surgeon is eligible tomorrow, he most certainly is qualified today.

I sincerely protest against and offer my condemnation of such an arbitrary and unjust regulation. I urge the War and Navy Departments to modify these regulations by providing that the graduates of such a school be permitted in the future to file their applications for commissioned service of either branch, setting forth in their applications their training, education, and experience, and that the same be seriously considered and inquired into and, if necessary, submit these applicants to individual examinations. When these graduates can satisfy the Departments that they are doctors and surgeons of skill, training, and experience, they should be accepted into the commissioned service regardless of what school they graduated from. In my opinion, the present regulations should be immediately modified.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. I want to say to the gentleman that I heartily subscribe to his views, and may I say further that many of the graduates of the Middlesex School are practitioners in my district, and they are among the most eminent physicians in that district.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will be pleased to yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MAY. I have had the pleasure of discussing this matter with the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I have had up with the Department the question of revising these regulations, and I shall be glad at any time the gentleman wants to confer about it to go with the gentleman to the War Department and see if we cannot work out something that will be satisfactory.

Mr. McCORMACK. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I took this matter up with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs with a committee of doctors from Massachusetts and he gave them very courteous and respectful consideration, but my purpose is to call attention to the bill I have introduced so that the Members of the House may be aware of the situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. When used in this act, the following phrases shall have the following meanings:

(a) The phrase "between the ages of 21 and 45" shall include men who have reached the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and who have not reached the forty-fifth anniversary of the day of their birth; and other phrases designating different age groups shall be construed in the same manner.

(b) The phrase "United States and its possessions" shall be deemed to include the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territories, and the possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands.

(c) "Dependent" of a person registered under the provisions of this act includes only an individual (1) who is dependent in fact on such person for support in a reasonable manner, and (2) whose support in such a manner depends on income earned by such person in a business, occupation, or employment.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Iowa: On page 35, at the end of line 21, insert:

"(d) In time of peace and until Congress shall declare war, "service", as applied to men involuntarily inducted under the provisions of this act, means service for training purposes only and within the United States, its Territories, and possessions only. In time of war, "service" includes all duties assigned to the enlisted armed forces of the United States, but such service shall be restricted to the Western Hemisphere."

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered at this time to give those who have a feeling that they cannot support a draft for service in time of peace an opportunity to go on record for something that is somewhat less.

I myself am opposed to conscription in peacetime for service. I am not opposed to conscription in wartime, nor am I opposed to conscription for training only in time of peace.

What I am opposed to is placing the Army in the position of bringing civilians into the Army by the draft in peacetime for service, completely and totally under the control of the Regular Army and the War Department. The background for my approach to this matter of obtaining adequate training and yet not going off the deep end in totalitarianism started with the Legion convention back in 1919. The great Legion convention of 1919 adopted one resolution stating that they were for a policy of universal military training. Another resolution stated that they were strongly opposed to compulsory military service in time of peace. That distinction has continued to be my own position from that day to this.

In the Senate debate of 1920 this question came up during the course of the perfection of the National Defense Act of 1920. The War Department in 1919 had presented a bill calling for training for 3 months and sending the trainees back to civil life and leaving them subject to being called into the Regular Army at any time in an emergency. It is very interesting to read the debate at that time, including the statement by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] when he criticized that bill by the following statement:

> The Senate committee rejected the War Department's bill because the committee believed that it was in violation of the traditions and the democratic institutions of the United States, in that it attempted to make the citizen-soldier subservient to the professional soldier; in that it attempted to establish in this country a very large regular or professional army in time of peace, and to make that army, through its officers and its machinery, dominate completely the entire military policy and national defense of the country.

Now, I ask in common sense why is it democratic now to draft a citizen-soldier directly into the Regular Army without any training whatsoever? That is exactly what this bill proposes to do for 1 year of service. That is why I have offered my amendment to limit the program to training only, and I am just as interested as any man in this House in maintaining an adequate training program.

There has been considerable objection to any limitation for training only because you could not then use the trainees sent to Panama Canal Zone outside the narrow strip of the Canal Zone itself. I was down in Panama last November and I was there again last July on inspection trips with members of the Committee on Military Affairs. I believe the committee will agree with me that the officers there are much opposed to our sending soldier boys down there for less than 2 years, and they are also opposed to our sending them down there for less than 3 years. If we would use a little common sense about our training plan we would go slow about sending our soldier boys down there for 1 year's service.

Another point I would like to make clear is the resemblance of my proposed amendment to British procedure prior to the outbreak of the present war. Great Britain had a training program very similar in its restriction for training purposes only. A bill was enacted in May of 1939 providing for conscription but restricting it to training only and providing that the act could be superseded in case of war or great emergency. Hitler marched into Poland on September 1, 1939. On September 3, 1939, Great Britain declared war, and on September 3, 1939, they enacted a compulsory-service bill to supplant their training bill. Great Britain adhered to that principle of democracy of freedom from conscription for service in peacetime; yet they went ahead with a training program.

I have obviated the necessity for further legislation by providing in my amendment that when war is declared by Congress, "service" shall then be interpreted as all service charged to any enlisted man of the Army limiting the place of such service to the Western Hemisphere.

Another comparison to which I call attention is the Canadian program. Canada passed a conscription law just this year providing for limiting the service of conscripts to Canadian territory and to the territorial waters of Canada.

If we study the acts of these democracies of the earth, few that they are, we might take a lesson in distinguishing between training and compulsory service in peacetime. That is the purpose of my proposed amendment. It goes to the heart of the bill. It is a pretty big change in the philosophy of this bill, but I think you are entitled to have the matter brought to your attention with a proper explanation of its background. I submit it to you for your judgment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Iowa) there were—ayes 88, noes 142.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 14. Except as herein provided, all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended for the period in which this act shall be in force.
> SEC. 15. This act may be cited as the "Selective Training and Service Act of 1940."
> SEC. 16. This act shall take effect immediately. All the provisions of this act shall become inoperative on and after May 15, 1945, except as to the provisions of section 3 (c), and except as to violations of this act, unless continued in effect by the Congress.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California: Page 36, line 5, strike out "May 15, 1945" and insert "October 1, 1942, except as to men already inducted into service and."

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, we have been told repeatedly in the course of this debate that this was an emergency bill. My amendment is offered for the purpose of making certain that it will be an emergency measure.

There are many things we may not like to do which, under the impulsion of what some people tell us is an emergency, we may be willing to do. I feel as I said before in connection with this bill, that insofar as it is possible to obtain it, a unity of action is important. I have said that whatever happened with regard to this bill, if it became law I would support it with all the vigor at my command, and I will. It seems to me, however, that this amendment is of basic importance. It would say that this bill would last in its operation for 2 years instead of 5. It would mean that the next Congress would have opportunity to decide for itself whether it thought the emergency was continuing or not. It could continue this legislation if it felt it necessary, but it could not continue it if it felt it was not necessary.

Remember that if you pass this legislation for a 5-year period an attempt to repeal it might require its passage by two-thirds vote over a veto.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do.

Mr. MAY. I call the gentleman's attention to section 6, which reads:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of this act, the President shall have no authority to induct persons into the land or naval forces of the United States until Congress shall hereafter appropriate funds specifically for such purposes.

With emphasis on "hereafter."

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I understand that provision, but I submit to the membership of the House that if you leave "1945" in this bill you are passing a bill declaring what may become a permanent policy for the United States. For those of us who are fearful of this kind of measure it will make a great deal of difference if there is evidence that we really mean what we say when we say we are passing it only for the period of the emergency.

As a permanent policy it is, as I have already told you, my earnest conviction that it is all right and may be a very good thing for the United States to have a program of general training and service, but if we are going to do that we should apply it to everybody in a certain age group. It should be opportunity as well as training. It should be planned to be controlled by a group of people, a board of people representative of all groups of society. You should maybe give separate rewards to those who go into the military forces. It should mean for every man a start in life, a part of his education, such as they have in Switzerland, and the Swiss plan has been referred to during the debate. It should not be a bill like this if it is to be a permanent program. [Applause.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I had sent to the desk an amendment substantially the same as the one that the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] has offered. I gladly support his. This amendment, to limit the automatic operation of the bill to 2 years, is now the test of whether this is an emergency measure or not. In this connection I wish to point out that it is in strict keeping with the constitutional attempt to prevent military control in this country. The Constitution in section 8, article I, says the Congress shall have power—

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than 2 years.

This amendment puts that 2-year limitation upon peacetime conscription. True, a subsequent Congress can repeal this legislation, but, if we put in this limitation, the question will automatically come before us or the power granted will expire. Without this limitation, this cannot be called emergency legislation.

Mr. Chairman, before we began the debate on this bill, I was expecting to vote for it. I wrote friends to that effect and made a statement to the press, only reserving final judgment until the bill had been debated and finally amended. Facts brought out in the debate have unsettled many of us. Official figures have been introduced to show that today there are more than 900,000 men in the armed forces of the United States, in Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Marine Corps, National Guard, and Reserves. Through summer months, recruits exceeded 30,000 a month and August figures will reach 45,000. This, in the face of the fact that men join the Army for 3 years at $21 a month, while boys can enroll in the C. C. C. for 6 months at $30 a month. It is only reasonable to believe that if Army enlistments were accepted for 1 year as this bill proposes, with a starting salary of $30 as this bill proposes, recruits would come in even more rapidly. By January we could have 1,200,000 under arms, if housing were available. In the face of these facts, what is the emergency that calls for fastening upon the country peacetime conscription? Keep in mind that all of us, I think, would vote for wartime conscription.

The emergency is also lessened, Mr. Chairman, by the announcement this week that the United States is acquiring some of the outlying bases for which several of us have long contended. True, most of our bills have advocated outright acquisition rather than lease and most of us have urged closing the back door to the Panama Canal as well as the front one. But a start has been made and certainly the acquisition of these bases reduces our dangers. In connection with that acquisition, the Government asked and received formal assurances that the British Fleet would not be scuttled or surrendered. That has seemed obvious to those who believed that the fleet would follow the seat of government, but now formal declarations support the logic of the situation, and again, it must be said that our hazards are reduced.

Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, it is in order to face this proposition squarely and to ask whether this measure provides a fair and just system of universal military training or whether it fastens compulsory military service upon America. Certain features of the bill are unjust and the committee has resisted amendments to correct them. Storm cellars have been created for Government officials, including Members of Congress. Sons of rich men can escape—or at least put off their service until July 1941 if they have the price to enter college. The poor man's sons will have no choice but to begin their service when called. A 10-year reserve provision saddles 10 years of uncertainty and liability for training onto the man who is drafted after he has given his year of service while the man who escapes call goes scot free. That is not universal service with general sharing of the obligations and privileges in a free society as the bill claims in its declaration.

If there be an emergency that justifies an unequal peacetime conscription of men, the emergency should be just as great for men in essential industries; yet this House yesterday approved Senate amendments to an appropriation bill that, in effect, lifts the lid on profits for munition makers and shipbuilders and guarantees time-and-a-half wages for men who work more than 8 hours a day in contract factories. If there is an emergency, it is an equal emergency for men and machines and industry, and the Smith amendment in this bill lacks a long way of giving equal emergency treatment.

Mr. Chairman, these considerations destroy the emergency character of this legislation, unless we limit the life of its automatic operation to conform to the 2-year limit on Army appropriations established in the Constitution. This amendment, then, offered by the gentleman from California, is the final test of whether this is an emergency measure or whether in the guise of an emergency, peacetime conscription is to be fastened upon the country as a permanent policy. The amendment simply applies the caution of the constitutional fathers—a limitation of 2 years. It can be extended if conditions demand. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does not the gentleman believe that the people of this country have been led to believe largely that this is just a military training bill and not a selective compulsory bill?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is correct, and in further answer to the gentleman's question the American people think this is an emergency proposal. As a matter of fact, if this bill is passed in its present form and remains in effect for 5 years, it will establish peacetime conscription, not only for 5 years but as a permanent policy of our country. I do not believe that to be in accord with the will of the American people. This amendment is one of the most important that will be presented. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from California and my amendment are agreed to, I shall vote for the bill.

If the next Congress has the right to work its will on the conscription bill at the end of 2 years, then it would be an emergency measure, but as the bill is written it provides for 5 years of conscription. More than that, according to the declaration of policy in this bill, there is no reference to emergency legislation. According to that declaration of policy, this is a peacetime conscription bill for all time. It amounts to permanent legislation, but the people back home believe it is merely for an emergency. If you put the conscription bill into effect for 2 years, at the end of that time you will have an army of 2,400,000, and that ought to be sufficient for any purposes of national defense in any emergency. But if you refuse to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, then you will be practically voting for permanent peacetime conscription. The people of the United States have not the faintest idea that this is anything but emergency legislation for the purpose of national defense in this great crisis. Therefore, I am appealing to you, regardless of partisanship, to vote for this amendment and give the next Congress a chance to say whether we shall have permanent conscription or only emergency conscription. It is only right that the next Congress shall have the right to decide what policy to pursue in view of world conditions 2 years from now.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the amendment offered by my colleague from California is necessary because, as you all know, the Congress always has control of all legislation. The gentleman from New York has recommended that the next Congress should have power to say whether it shall continue this legislation or not. If the next Congress so desires, it can eliminate this legislation entirely, if it finds it is not needed any further, regardless of the fact that this bill provides for 1945. It can be repealed in 1941 if the emergency no longer exists.

I believe the language of the bill should remain as it is. If you change the last section, you will find that you have left 1945 appearing at various places throughout the bill. I thoroughly agree with my colleague from California that if this were intended as permanent legislation it should be in entirely different form from what it now is. The program of training would be far different from what is now described in the bill, but because it is intended as a temporary thing, because we believe there is an emergency that requires the immediate training of a million men, we have written it in the form in which it is written, calling men to the Army camps, not to train them in colleges or universities, not to train them for 2 or 3 months, not to train them in any one of a dozen different ways that might be suggested. This method has been followed because we believe it is necessary to train these men here and now, train them thoroughly and for a period of at least 1 year.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the language should remain as it is. If the emergency continues we will train three, four, or five million men and we will have a reservoir of trained men that will be available in the event of any emergency that may come and thereby this country will have adequate national defense.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the pending amendment will be defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VOORHIS of California) there were—ayes 113, noes 151.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. VOORHIS of California and Mr. MAY.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 159, noes 172.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, President Roosevelt has, by formal proclamation, designated tomorrow, Sunday, September 8, as a national day of prayer for peace.

The Philadelphia Inquirer has by editorial said the following—

IF THEY BELIEVE IN PRAYER

By formal proclamation, issued nearly a month ago, President Roosevelt designated a day of prayer upon which Americans of all creeds and denominations were urged, in their churches or at their homes, to ask Almighty God "to grant to this land and to the troubled world a righteous, enduring peace."

That day is tomorrow, Sunday, September 8. It should be observed by everyone who has even a modicum of faith in the efficacy of prayer.

Not only "church people," so called. Doubtless there are many who accept the basic truths of religion that are not identified with any church. Remembering the publican, whose importunate prayer was approved by the highest authority over that of the smug Pharisee, it is clear that participation in this Nation-wide appeal to omnipotence need not be limited to persons who are accustomed to participate in public worship.

It would seem, however, that a weightier obligation rests upon those who are definitely identified with some branch of the church, and are therefore presumed, not unreasonably, to assent wholeheartedly to its teachings. In a special sense it is their privilege as well as their duty, if they believe

"More things are wrought by prayer Than this world dreams of,"

to assemble in their accustomed places of worship tomorrow to pray for the peace of the world, a peace formulated not in a pattern of their own devising but in accordance with the Divine will.

Men either believe in the potency of prayer or they do not. In considering those who do—or say they do—one may be pardoned for speculating as to what strange process of reasoning would make it possible for them deliberately to ignore tomorrow's observance.

PRAY FOR A JUST PEACE AND AN ENDURING PEACE

In every pulpit throughout this Nation and by special interfaith radio broadcast, tomorrow, there will be prayers offered for peace. Over this broadcast will be heard the following outstanding churchmen: Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen, Rabbi Abba Silver, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam.

If we pass this bill today, without the 60-day period of voluntary enlistment, the reading of the President's proclamation in the churches will fall on heavy hearts and the plea for prayers for peace will be received with mixed emotions.

Let us by our vote adopt the voluntary-enlistment amendment so that tomorrow and every day for the next 60 days, God-fearing citiens of our Nation will be able to kneel before God and pray for peace with hope in their hearts.

I voted for the 60-day amendment which is identical with the amendment supported by 41 Senators, many staunch Democrats, including the 2 Senators from New York State. The Senate roll call on this amendment indicates that party lines were totally absent.

I wish to say to my colleagues from the South, who made a special point of the enlistment by States, that under the terms of this bill, when the Selective Service Act goes into operation, their respective States will be credited for all their men now in service.

As far as my State is concerned, I am sure that our citizens will not be lacking in their patriotic duty.

It is my opinion that, as a result of a fireside, heart-to-heart chat by the President, giving the people the facts, there will be more men applying for enlistment than can be immediately absorbed by the armed forces. Should the plea of the President fail to produce the desired number of volunteers we shall still have the Selective Service Act.

As we listen to the Gospel on Peace Sunday, let us contemplate on the unchanging words of comfort and guidance that have persisted for more than 1,900 years. In contrast to this unbroken chain which links us to peace and human happiness, consider the almost continuous mad frenzy of the Old World rulers toward ruin and destruction. Thank God, we live in a country where the people still believe in the dignity of the living and in a Supreme Being Whom they may worship as they choose.

Regardless of our personal religious convictions, we should, in obedience to the President's proclamation, make our prayer for peace this minute and not wait until tomorrow. In accordance with my lights, I shall offer a prayer that the 60-day amendment be adopted, because I believe that the passage of this bill, without the amendment, would be a step that might lead away from peace rather than toward a just and enduring peace.

I respectfully urge every Member of this House to join with me in my efforts to obtain the adoption of the 60-day voluntary-enlistment period. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question now recurs on the adoption of the committee substitute, as amended, for the original bill.

The committee substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10132) to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service, pursuant to House Resolution 586, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Fish amendment, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Smith amendment, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole?

If not, the Clerk will report the so-called Fish amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, after line 21, insert the following:

"(d) The President is authorized to issue a call as soon as possible after the date of enactment of this act, and another call at any time after January 1, 1941, for qualified men between the ages of 18 and 35 to volunteer for training and service for 12 months in the land and naval forces of the United States under this act. Each such call shall be for not more than 400,000 men. The President is authorized to induct into such forces for such training and service so many of the men who volunteer pursuant to such call as are not in excess of the number of men for whom the call was issued. If, upon the expiration of 60 days after the issuance of either of such calls, the President finds that the number of qualified men who have volunteered pursuant to such call is less than the number for whom the call was issued, he is authorized to select and induct into such forces such number of qualified men selected in accordance with section 3 (a) as, when added to the number who have volunteered pursuant to such call, will equal the number for whom he issued such call. Until the expiration of 60 days after the date of issuance by the President of the second call authorized by this subsection, no man shall be inducted into the land and naval forces of the United States under any provisions of this act other than this subsection. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require or postpone, during either of such 60-day periods, the registration, classification, or selection of persons to be adopted for training and service under this act.

"(e) Quotas of men to be furnished for such training and service shall be determined for each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, and for subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, who are liable for such training and service but who are not deferred after classification; credits shall be given in fixing such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who are in the land and naval forces of the United States on the date fixed for determining such quotas, and those who volunteer during the 60-day volunteer period; and until the actual numbers necessary for determining the quotas are known the quotas may be based on estimates and subsequent adjustments therein made when such actual numbers are known; all in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays on the adoption of the so-called Fish amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 207, nays 200, answered "present" 2, not voting 20, as follows:

NOT VOTING—20

Arnold	Collins	Fernandez	Risk
Caldwell	Darrow	Garrett	Schaefer, Ill.
Cartwright	Dempsey	Johnson, Okla.	Sutphin
Chapman	Dies	Murdock, Utah	Wallgren
Clevenger	Ellis	O'Day	Wolfenden, Pa.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Collins (for) with Mr. McGehee (against).
Mr. Alexander (for) with Mr. Caldwell (against).
Mr. Wolfenden of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. Ellis (against).
Mr. Risk (for) with Mr. Garrett (against).
Mr. Clevenger (for) with Mr. Dies (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Darrow.
Mr. Fernandez with Mr. Sutphin.
Mr. Cartwright with Mr. Wallgren.
Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma with Mrs. O'Day.
Mr. Murdock of Utah with Mr. Chapman.
Mr. Schaefer of Illinois with Mr. Mills of Louisiana.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to withdraw my vote and be recorded as voting "present," because of a live pair I have with my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. COLLINS.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded as voting "yea." I wish to change my vote to "nay."

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded as voting "nay." It was my intention to vote "yea." I ask that my vote be changed accordingly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I have a pair with the gentleman from Florida, Mr. CALDWELL. I withdraw my vote, which was "yea," because the gentleman from Florida, if present, would have voted "nay." I vote "present."

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, by inadvertence I voted "nay" when it was my purpose to vote "yea." I wish to be recorded as voting "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 34 at the end of section 11 insert:

"The President is empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for such product or material as may be required, and which is of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry.

"Compliance with all such orders for products or material shall be obligatory on any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof, and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed with such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, owning or operating any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, owning or operating any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall be capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or other necessary supplies or equipment, who shall refuse to give to the United States such preference in the matter of the execution of orders, or who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or who shall refuse to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment, at a reasonable price as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, then, and in either such case, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Departments of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of any such plant or plants, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy to manufacture therein such product or material as may be required, and any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 3 years and a fine not exceeding $50,000.

"The compensation to be paid to any individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for its products or material, or as rental for use of any manufacturing plant while used by the United States, shall be fair and just: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, safety, security, and employment standards of the employees in such plant.

"The first and second provisos in section 8 (b) of the act entitled 'An act to expedite national defense and for other purposes,' approved June 28, 1940 (Public, No. 671, 76th Cong.), are hereby repealed."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the parliamentary situation, Mr. Speaker, the question now is on the Smith amendment, known as the industrial conscription amendment, and the vote "yea" is for the amendment and the vote "nay" is against it.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 330, nays 83, not voting 16, as follows:

NOT VOTING—16

Arnold	Darrow	Fernandez	Risk
Caldwell	Dempsey	Garrett	Schaefer, Ill.
Chapman	Dies	Murdock, Utah	Sutphin
Collins	Ellis	O'Day	Wallgren

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs until further notice:

General pairs:

Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Darrow.
Mr. Garrett with Mr. Risk.
Mr. Fernandez with Mr. Sutphin.
Mr. Wallgren with Mrs. O'Day.
Mr. Murdock of Utah with Mr. Chapman.
Mr. Collins with Mr. Schaefer of Illinois.
Mr. Dies with Mr. Ellis.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute committee amendment as amended for the original bill.

The question was taken; and the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the Congress hereby declares that it is imperative to increase and train the personnel of the armed forces of the United States.

(b) The Congress further declares that in a free society the obligations and privileges of military training and service should be shared generally in accordance with a fair and just system of selective compulsory military training and service.

(c) The Congress further declares, in accordance with our traditional military policy as expressed in the National Defense Act of 1916, as amended, that it is essential that the strength and organization of the National Guard, as an integral part of the first-line defenses of this Nation, be at all times maintained and assured. To this end, it is the intent of the Congress that whenever the Congress shall determine that troops are needed for the national security in excess of those of the Regular Army and those in active training under the provisions of this act, the National Guard of the United States, or such part thereof as may be necessary, shall be ordered to active Federal service and continued therein so long as such necessity exists.

(d) The President is authorized to issue a call as soon as possible after the date of enactment of this act, and another call at any time after January 1, 1941, for qualified men between the ages of 18 and 35 to volunteer for training and service for 12 months in the land and naval forces of the United States under this act. Each such call shall be for not more than 400,000 men. The President is authorized to induct into such forces for such training and service so many of the men who volunteer pursuant to such call as are not in excess of the number of men for whom the call was issued. If, upon the expiration of 60 days after the issuance of either of such calls, the President finds that the number of qualified men who have volunteered pursuant to such call is less than the number for whom the call was issued, he is authorized to select and induct into such forces such number of qualified men selected in accordance with section 3 (a) as, when added to the number who have volunteered pursuant to such call, will equal the number for whom he issued such call. Until the expiration of 60 days after the date of issuance by the President of the second call authorized by this subsection, no man shall be inducted into the land and naval forces of the United States under any provisions of this act other than this subsection. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to require or postpone, during either of such 60-day periods, the registration, classification, or selection of persons to be adopted for training and service under this act.

(e) Quotas of men to be furnished for such training and service shall be determined for each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, and for subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, who are liable for such training and service but who are not deferred after classification; credits shall be given in fixing such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who are in the land and naval forces of the United States on the date fixed for determining such quotas, and those who volunteer during the 60-day volunteer period; and until the actual numbers necessary for determining the quotas are known the quotas may be based on estimates and subsequent adjustments therein made when such actual numbers are known; all in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 2. Except as provided in section 5 (a), all male citizens and all male aliens residing in the United States or its possessions, who are between the ages of 21 and 45 on the day or days fixed for registration, shall present themselves for registration, and shall register at such times and places and in such manner and by such age groups as shall be determined by regulations prescribed hereunder.

SEC. (3). (a) Every male citizen, and every male alien residing in the United States or its possessions who has declared his intention to become a citizen, between the ages of 21 and 45, who is not excepted herein from registration, shall be liable for training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States. The President is authorized to select for training and service in the manner herein provided, and to induct into the land and naval forces of the United States, such number of men as in his judgment, whether a state of war exists or not, is required in the national interest for such forces: Provided, That any person, regardless of race or color, between the ages of 18 and 35 shall be afforded an opportunity to volunteer for induction into the land or naval forces of the United States for the training and service described in subsection (b): Provided further, That no man shall be inducted for training and service under this act unless and until he is acceptable to the land or naval forces for such training and service: Provided, That such induction shall not be effected until adequate provision shall have been made for the proper housing of the men selected for training and service, the term housing to include such sanitary facilities, adequate water supply, heating and lighting systems, medical care and hospital accommodations, as are in general accepted by the United States Public Health Service as essential to public and personal health: Provided further, That voluntary enlistments in the land and naval forces of the United States, including the reserve components thereof, shall continue as now provided by law: Provided further, That except in time of war there shall not be in active training or service in the land and naval forces of the United States at any one time under the provisions of subsection (b) more than 1,000,000 men inducted under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That persons inducted into the land forces of the United States pursuant to this act shall not be employed beyond the limits of the Western Hemisphere except in the Territories and possessions of the United States, including the Philippine Islands: Provided further, That in the case of any person who, during the year 1940, entered upon attendance for the academic year 1940–41—

(1) at any college or university which grants a degree in arts or science, to pursue a course of instruction satisfactory completion of which is prescribed by such college or university as a prerequisite to either class of such degrees; or

(2) at any university described in paragraph (1), to pursue a course of instruction to the pursuit of which a degree in arts or science is prescribed by such university as a prerequisite;

if, during his attendance at such college or university while pursuing such course of instruction, such person is selected for service and training prior to the end of such academic year, or prior to July 1, 1941, whichever occurs first, his induction into the land or naval forces shall, upon his request, be deferred until the end of such academic year, but in no event later than July 1, 1941. Men selected for training and service shall be assigned to camps or units of the land and naval forces of the United States.

(b) If and so long as the United States is not at war, each man selected for training and service shall serve for a training period of 12 consecutive months: Provided, That if during his training period the Congress shall declare that the national interest is imperiled, he shall be subject to service until the Congress shall declare the national interest permits his being relieved from active service.

(c) Each man, after completion of his training period, shall be transferred to a reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States, and until the expiration of 10 years after such transfer or until he reaches the age of 45 or until he is discharged, whichever occurs first, he shall be deemed a member of such Reserve component and be subject to such additional training as may now or hereafter be prescribed by law: Provided, That every man upon completing 12 months' training and service in the land forces, in time of peace, shall be given the option, if a vacancy exists in the National Guard or the Regular Army to which he can be assigned, of serving a 2-year enlistment, and satisfactory service of such enlistment will exempt him from further duty in the Reserve components of the Army of the United States in time of peace.

(d) Men during their training and service period, as provided for in this section, shall receive the same pay, allowances, and other benefits, pensions, compensation, and disability allowances as are provided by law for enlisted men of like grades and length of service of that component of the land and naval forces to which they are assigned and thereafter they shall receive the same benefits provided by law in like cases for members of the Reserve components of the land and naval forces to which they have been transferred. Men in training and service shall have an opportunity to qualify for promotion.

(e) (1) The monthly base pay of enlisted men of the Army shall be as follows: Enlisted men of the first grade, $126; enlisted men of the second grade, $84; enlisted men of the third grade, $72; enlisted men of the fourth grade, $60; enlisted men of the fifth grade, $54; enlisted men of the sixth grade, $36; enlisted men of the seventh grade, $30; except that the monthly base pay of enlisted men with less than 4 months' service during their first enlistment period and of enlisted men of the seventh grade whose inefficiency or other unfitness has been determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, shall be $21. The pay for specialists' ratings, which shall be in addition to monthly base pay, shall be as follows: First class, $30; second class, $25; third class, $20; fourth class, $15; fifth class, $6; sixth class, $3. Enlisted men of the Army shall receive, as a permanent addition to their pay, an increase of 10 percent of their base pay and pay for specialists' ratings upon completion of the first 4 years of service, and an additional increase of 5 percent of such base pay and pay for specialists' ratings for each 4 years of service thereafter, but the total of such increases shall not exceed 25 percent. Enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps shall be entitled to receive at least the same pay and allowances as provided for enlisted men in similar grades in the Army.

(2) The pay for specialists' rating received by an enlisted man of the Army at the time of his retirement shall be included in the computation of his retired pay.

(3) The pay of enlisted men of the sixth grade of the National Guard for each armory drill period, and for each day of participation in exercises under sections 94, 97, and 99 of the National Defense Act, shall be $1.20.

(4) No back pay or allowances shall accrue by reason of this act for any period prior to the date of its enactment.

(5) Nothing in this act shall operate to reduce the pay now being received by any retired enlisted man.

(6) The provisions of this section shall be effective from the date of enactment of this act to May 15, 1945. During such period all laws and parts of laws insofar as the same are inconsistent herewith or in conflict with the provisions hereof are hereby suspended: Provided, That nothing contained in this or any other act shall be construed as forbidding the payment of compensation by any person, firm, or corporation to persons inducted or enlisted as provided herein or to members of the Reserve components of the land and naval forces of the United States below the grade of captain now on or hereafter placed on any type of active duty, which persons and members were, prior to their induction or enlistment, or being placed on active duty, receiving compensation from such person, firm, or corporation, during the time they are in training and service hereunder or on active duty under the provisions of law.

SEC. 4. (a) The selection of men subject to the training and service provided for in section 3 (other than those who are voluntarily inducted pursuant to this act) shall be made in an impartial manner from the men between the ages of 21 and 45 who are liable for such training and service and who at the time of selection are registered and classified but not deferred: Provided, That in the selection and training of men as well as in the interpretation and execution of the provisions of this act there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race, creed, or color.

(b) Quotas of men to be furnished for such training and service shall be determined for each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, and for subdivisions thereof, on the basis of the actual number of men in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the subdivisions thereof, who are liable for such training and service but who are not deferred after classification; credits shall be given in fixing such quotas for residents of such subdivisions who are in the land and naval forces of the United States on the date fixed for determining such quotas; and until the actual numbers necessary for determining the quotas are known, the quotas may be based on estimates and subsequent adjustments therein made when such actual numbers are known; all in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 5. (a) Commissioned officers, warrant officers, field clerks, pay clerks, and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the federally recognized active National Guard, the Officers' Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserve, the Enlisted Reserve Corps, the Naval Reserve, and the Marine Corps Reserve; cadets, United States Military Academy, men who have been properly appointed and qualified, and who have been accepted, for admittance commencing with the academy year next succeeding such acceptance to the United States Military Academy as cadets, but only during the continuance of such acceptance; midshipmen, United States Naval Academy, and cadets, United States Coast Guard Academy; and cadets of advanced course, senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps; diplomatic representatives, technical attachés of foreign embassies and legations, consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents of foreign countries, residing in the United States, who are not citizens of the United States, and who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, shall not be registered. No exceptions from registration shall continue after the cause therefor ceases to exist: Provided, That the following persons will be excepted from registration under section 2 and from liability to serve in any reserve component of the land or naval forces of the United States in time of peace and from liability for the training and service provided for in section 3 (b), but such persons shall in time of war be subject to registration under section 2 and shall be liable to serve in the land and naval forces of the United States:

(1) Any man who has completed or who will complete at least 3 consecutive years' satisfactory service in the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard as an officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man before or after the time fixed for registration or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration.

(2) Any officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man of the active National Guard who has completed or who will complete at least 1 year's satisfactory service in active Federal service as an officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man of the Army of the United States, and subsequent thereto at least 2 years' consecutive satisfactory service as an officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man in the Regular Army or in the active National Guard, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration.

(3) Any man who is an officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man in the active National Guard at the time fixed for registration, and who completes at least 6 consecutive years' satisfactory service therein as an officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man, before or after or partially before and partially after the time fixed for registration.

(4) Any man who is in the Officers' Reserve Corps on the eligible list at the time fixed for registration, and who completes at least 6 consecutive years' satisfactory service therein on the eligible list before or after the time fixed for registration or partially before or partially after the time fixed for registration: Provided, That the persons enumerated in this paragraph and paragraph 3 while in Reserve components of the land or naval forces of the United States may be ordered or called to active duty in such forces.

(b) The Vice President of the United States, and the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, except judges of inferior courts not of record, of the United States, and of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, while holding such official positions, shall be deferred, which deferred classification may be waived from training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States.

(c) Regular or duly ordained ministers of religion, and students who are preparing for the ministry in theological or divinity schools recognized as such for more than 1 year prior to the date of enactment of this act, shall be exempt from training and service (but not from registration) under this act.

(d) The President is authorized under such regulations as he may prescribe to defer training and service in the land and naval forces of the United States of those men whose employment in industry, agriculture, or other occupations or employment is found to be necessary to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest. The determination of each deferment of training and service shall be made with regard to the status of the individual and shall not be made by deferring the training and service of individuals by occupational groups without regard to the status of the individual therein. The President is also authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to defer the training and service in the land and naval forces of those men in a status with respect to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their deferment advisable; and those found to be physically, mentally, or morally deficient. No deferment from training and service shall continue after the cause therefor ceases to exist.

(e) Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training or service in the land or naval forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. All persons claiming such exemption from combatant training and service because of such conscientious objections shall be listed on a Register of Conscientious Objectors at the time of their classification by a local board. After appropriate inquiry by the local board, a hearing shall be held by the local board in the case of each such person with respect to the character and good faith of his objections, and such person shall be notified of the time and place of such hearing. The local board shall, after such hearing, if the objections are found to be sustained, recommend (1) that the objector shall be assigned to noncombatant service as defined by the President, or (2) if the objector is found to be conscientiously opposed to participation in such noncombatant service, that he shall be assigned to work of national importance under civilian direction. If, after such hearing, the objections of any such person are found not to be sustained, the objector shall be immediately notified thereof, the name of the objector shall then be removed from the Register of Conscientious Objectors, and such objector shall thereafter be liable to training and service as provided by this act. If, within 5 days after the date of such findings by the local board, the objector gives notice to the local board of disagreement with such findings, the local board shall immediately refer the matter for final determination to an appropriate appeal board established pursuant to section 11 (a) (2).

SEC. 6. Notwithstanding the provisions of this act, the President shall have no authority to induct persons into the land and naval forces of the United States until Congress shall hereafter appropriate funds specifically for such purpose.

SEC. 7. All persons called, ordered or inducted into the land and naval forces of the United States pursuant to this act shall be subject to the laws and regulations concerning that branch of the land and naval forces to which they are assigned from the date they are required by the terms of such call, order, or induction to obey the same.

SEC. 8. No bounty shall be paid to induce any person to enlist in or be inducted into the land and naval forces of the United States: Provided, That the clothing or enlistment allowances authorized by law shall not be regarded as bounties within the meaning of this section. No person liable to service in such forces shall be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service; nor shall any substitute as such be received, enlisted, enrolled, or inducted into the land and naval forces of the United States; and no person liable to service in such forces shall be permitted to escape such service or be discharged therefrom prior to the expiration of his term of service by the payment of money or any other valuable thing whatsoever as consideration for his release from service in the land and naval forces or liability thereto.

SEC. 9. (a) The benefits of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, approved March 8, 1918, are hereby extended to all persons inducted into the land and naval forces pursuant to this act, and except as hereinafter provided, the provisions of such act of March 18, 1918, shall be effective for such purposes.

(b) For the purposes of this section—

(1) the following provisions of such act of March 8, 1918, shall be inoperative: Section 100; and paragraphs (1), (2), and (5) of section 101; article 4; article 5; paragraph (2) of section 601; and section 603;

(2) the term "persons in military service," when used in such act, shall be deemed to include persons inducted into the land or naval forces pursuant to this act;

(3) the term "period of military service," when used in such act, when applicable with respect to any person inducted into the land or naval forces pursuant to this act, shall be deemed to mean the period beginning with the date on which such person is so inducted and ending with date of his discharge;

(4) The induction of any person into the land or naval services of the United States shall not be deemed to be complete until his physical and mental fitness for military or naval service shall have been satisfactorily determined and the required oath shall be administered only after such determination. At the time of discharge, each person inducted into service under the provisions of this act shall be given a certificate showing any illness, injury, or disease suffered by him while in such service.

(5) Article III of the act of March 8, 1918, chapter 20, United States Statutes at Large, entitled "Rent, Installment Contracts, Mortgages," is amended by the addition of a new section to be known as section 303, as follows:

"SEC. 303. Nothing contained in section 301 shall prevent the termination or cancelation of contracts by mutual agreement of the parties thereto, or their assignees, executed in writing, nor the repossession of property pursuant to such agreement."

(c) Any member of any reserve component of the land or naval forces who is on active duty, and any person inducted into the land or naval forces under this act who, in the judgment of those in authority over him, satisfactorily completes the service required under this act shall be entitled to a certificate to that effect upon the completion of such service, which shall include a record of any special proficiency or merit attained.

(d) In the case of any such person who has left or leaves a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer and who (1) receives such certificate, (2) is still qualified to perform the duties of such position, and (3) makes application for reemployment within 40 days after he is relieved from such service—

(A) if such position was in the employ of the United States Government, its Territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, such person shall be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay;

(B) if such position was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so;

(C) if such position was in the employ of any State of political subdivision thereof it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person should be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay.

(e) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b) shall be considered during the period of service in such forces as on furlough or leave of absence; and shall be so restored without loss of seniority; and shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time of being inducted into such forces; and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within 1 year after such restoration.

(f) In case any private employer fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of subsection (d) or subsection (e), the district court of the United States for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business shall have power, upon the filing of a motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading by the person entitled to the benefits of such provisions, to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions. The court shall order a speedy hearing in any such case and shall advance it on the calendar. Upon application to the United States district attorney for the district in which such private employer maintains a place of business, by any person claiming to be entitled to the benefits of such provisions, such United States district attorney, if reasonably satisfied that the person so applying is entitled to such benefits, shall appear and act as attorney for such person in the amicable adjustment of the claim or in the filing of any motion, petition, or other appropriate pleading and the prosecution thereof to specifically require such employer to comply with such provisions and as an incident thereto to compensate such person for any loss of wages or benefits suffered by reason of such unlawful action: Provided, That no fees or court costs shall be taxed against the person so applying for such benefits.

(g) The Director of Selective Service herein provided for shall establish a Personnel Division with adequate facilities to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of persons who have satisfactorily completed their service under this act, and to aid such persons in finding employment elsewhere if such replacement in their former positions is impossible or unreasonable.

(h) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces for training and service under this act shall, during the period of such training and service, be permitted to vote in any general, special, or primary election occurring in the State of which he is a resident, if under the laws of such State he is entitled to vote in such election even though he is outside of such State at the time of such election.

(i) It is the expressed policy of this Congress that whenever a vacancy is caused in the employment rolls of any business or industry by reason of induction into the service of the United States of an employee pursuant to the provisions of this act that such vacancy shall not be filled by any person who is not a citizen of the United States or who is a member of the Communist Party or the German-American Bund.

SEC. 10. Any person charged as herein provided with the duty of carrying into effect any of the provisions of this act, or the regulations made or directions given thereunder, who shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform such duty, and any person charged with such duty, or having and exercising any authority under said act, regulations, or directions who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making, of any false, improper, or incorrect registration, classification, physical examination, deferment, induction, enrollment, or muster, and any person who shall knowingly make, or be a party to the making of, any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or unfitness or liability or nonliability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this act, or regulations or directions made pursuant thereto, or who otherwise evades registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this act, or who knowingly counsels, aids, or abets another to evade registration or service in the land or naval forces or any of the requirements of this act, or of said regulations or directions, or who in any manner shall knowingly fail or neglect to perform any duty required of him under or in the execution of this act or regulations made in pursuance of this act, or any person or persons who shall hinder or interfere in any way by force or violence with the administration of this act or the regulations made pursuant thereto, or conspire to do so, shall, upon conviction in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years or a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, or if subject to military or naval law may be tried by court martial, and, on conviction, shall suffer such punishment as a court martial may direct. In cases of persons subject to this act who fail to report for duty in the land or naval forces as ordered, military and naval courts martial shall have concurrent jurisdiction of offenses arising out of such failure. Precedence shall be given by courts to the trial of cases arising under this act.

SEC. 11. (a) The President is authorized—

(1) to prescribe the necessary regulations to carry this act into effect;

(2) to create and establish a selective service system, and shall provide for the classification of registrants on the basis of availability for training and service and shall establish civilian local

boards and such other civilian agencies, including appeal boards and agencies of appeal as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. There shall be created one or more local boards in each county or political subdivisions corresponding thereto of each State, Territory, the District of Columbia, and the possessions of the United States. Each local board shall consist of three or more members to be appointed by the President, from recommendations made by the respective Governors or comparable executive officials, none of which local board members shall be members of the armed forces, and each member must be a civilian and a citizen of the United States residing in the subdivision or area in which the respective local board will have jurisdiction under the rules and regulations prescribed by the President. Such local boards shall have power within their respective jurisdictions to hear and determine, subject to the right of appeal to the appeal boards herein authorized all questions of exemption or deferment from training and service under this act and all questions of or claims for inclusion for training or exemption or deferment from training and service of all individuals within the jurisdiction of such local boards under the rules and regulations prescribed by the President. The decisions of such local boards shall be final except where an appeal is authorized in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. The appeal boards and agencies of appeal shall be created within the selective service system and persons comprising such appeal boards and such agencies shall be civilians and citizens of the United States. No person who is an officer, member, agent, or employee of the selective service system or of the local or appeal boards or other agencies provided for in this act or any regulations pursuant thereto, shall be exempt from registration, or deferred if qualified and eligible, from training and service as provided for in this act;

(3) to appoint, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of War, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and fix the compensation of a director of selective service, who shall be directly responsible to him and to appoint and fix the compensation of such other officers, agents, and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act;

(4) to utilize the services of any or all departments and any and all officers or agents of the United States and to accept the services of all officers and agents of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and subdivisions thereof in the execution of this act; and

(5) to purchase such printing, binding, and blank-book work from public, commercial, or private printing establishments or binderies upon orders placed by the Public Printer or upon waivers issued in accordance with section 12 of the Printing Act approved January 12, 1895, as amended by the act of July 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 475), and to obtain by purchase, loan, or gift such equipment and supplies for the selective service system as may be necessary in his discretion to carry out the provisions of this act, with or without advertisements or formal contract.

The Chief of Finance, United States Army is hereby designated, empowered, and directed to act as the fiscal, disbursing, and accounting agent of the Director of Selective Service in carrying out the provisions of this act.

(b) All officers and agents and persons designated or appointed by the President or under regulations prescribed by him shall have full authority for all acts performed by them in the execution of this act by the direction of the President. In the administration of this act voluntary services may be accepted. Correspondence necessary in the execution of this act may be carried in official penalty envelopes.

SEC. 12. The President is empowered, through the head of the War Department or the Navy Department of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, to place an order with any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for such product or material as may be required, and which is of the nature and kind usually produced or capable of being produced by such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry.

Compliance with all such orders for products or material shall be obligatory on any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof and shall take precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed with such individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any plant equipped for the manufacture of arms or ammunition or parts of ammunition, or any necessary supplies or equipment for the Army or Navy, and any individual, firm, association, company, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry or the responsible head or heads thereof owning or operating any manufacturing plant, which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall be capable of being readily transformed into a plant for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or parts thereof, or other necessary supplies or equipment, who shall refuse to give to the United States such preference in the matter of the execution of orders, or who shall refuse to manufacture the kind, quantity, or quality of arms or ammunition, or the parts thereof, or any necessary supplies or equipment, as ordered by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or who shall refuse to furnish such arms, ammunition, or parts of ammunition, or other supplies or equipment at a reasonable price as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, then, and in either such case, the President, through the head of the War or Navy Departments of the Government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, is hereby authorized to take immediate possession of any such plant or plants, and through the appropriate branch, bureau, or department of the Army or Navy to manufacture therein such product or material as may be required, and any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, or organized manufacturing industry, or the responsible head or heads thereof, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 3 years and a fine not exceeding $50,000.

The compensation to be paid to any individual, firm, company, association, corporation, or organized manufacturing industry for its products or material, or as rental for use of any manufacturing plant while used by the United States, shall be fair and just: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to render inapplicable existing State or Federal laws concerning the health, saftey, security, and employment standards of the employees in such plant.

The first and second provisos in section 8 (b) of the act entitled "An act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1940 (Public Act Numbered 671, Seventy-sixth Congress), are hereby repealed.

SEC. 13. (a) Every person shall be deemed to have notice of the requirements of this act upon publication by the President of a proclamation or other public notice requiring registration.

(b) If any section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase of this act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining sections or portions of this act.

SEC. 14. When used in this act, the following phrases shall have the following meanings:

(a) The phrase "between the ages of twenty-one and forty-five" shall include men who have reached the twenty-first anniversary of the day of their birth and who have not reached the forty-fifth anniversary of the day of their birth; and other phrases designating different age groups shall be construed in the same manner.

(b) The phrase "United States and its possessions" shall be deemed to include the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territories, and the possessions of the United States, except the Phillipine Islands.

(c) "Dependent" of a person registered under the provisions of this act includes only an individual (1) who is dependent in fact on such person for support in a reasonable manner, and (2) whose support in such a manner depends on income earned by such person in a business, occupation, or employment.

SEC. 15. Except as herein provided, all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended for the period in which this act shall be in force.

SEC. 16. This act may be cited as the "Selective Training and Service Act of 1940."

SEC. 17. This act shall take effect immediately. All the provisions of this act shall become inoperative on and after May 15, 1945, except as to the provisions of section 3 (c), and except as to violations of this act, unless continued in effect by the Congress.

SEC. 18. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit which is at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman a member of the committee?

Mr. SHORT. I am, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SHORT. Most emphatically.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies, and the Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHORT moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to that committee to report the bill back forthwith with the following amendments: On page 32, line 10, after the word "board", insert the following: "shall be bipartisan and"; and on page 33, line 3, after the word "President", strike out the remainder of line 2, all of lines 3 to 8, inclusive, and the words "United States" on line 9, and insert the following: "There shall be created in each State one or more appeal boards to which appeals may be taken from decisions of local boards in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe. Such appeal boards shall be bipartisan and shall be appointed in the same manner and possess the same qualifications provided for members of local boards;"

and on page 36, line 5, strike out "May 15, 1945," and insert "October 1, 1942, except as to men already inducted into service and."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee on the majority side, I have a motion to recommit, also.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, there is only permitted one motion to recommit, and the minority side under the universal practice has the right to be recognized on such motion.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 241, not voting 17, as follows:

NOT VOTING—16

Arnold	Darrow	Fernandez	Risk
Caldwell	Dempsey	Garrett	Schaefer, Ill.
Chapman	Dies	Murdock, Utah	Sutphin
Collins	Ellis	O'Day	Wallgren

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Wallgren (for) with Mrs. O'Day (against).
Mr. Dies (for) with Mr. Thorkelson (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Darrow.
Mr. Garrett with Mr. Risk.
Mr. Fernandez with Mr. Sutphin.
Mr. Murdock of Utah with Mr. Chapman.
Mr. Collins with Mr. Schaefer of Illinois.
Mr. Ellis with Mr. Caldwell.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES. If he were present, he would have voted "aye." I voted "no." I withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion by Mr. MAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 586, I call up the bill (S. 4164) an act to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, and I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of said bill and insert the provisions of the bill H. R. 10132.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does that preserve the amendments that were adopted today in the House?

The SPEAKER. This includes all amendments adopted in the House.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the vote whereby the bill (H. R. 10132) was passed will be vacated, and the bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendment to the bill (S. 4164) and request a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON, Mr. HARTER of Ohio, Mr. ANDREWS, and Mr. SHORT.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a very brief statement for the benefit of a number of Members who have spoken to me.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, it is hoped that the conferees on this bill may be back to the House with a conference report by next Wednesday; not later than Thursday, in any event. Some gentlemen wanted to know about that.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, if it has not already been done, I now ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is agreed to.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. MOSER, Mr. CROSSER, Mr. LUDLOW, and Mr. ENGEL were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be absent indefinitely, on account of business.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole today and to include therein certain extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a table of farm imports.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TO PROHIBIT TRANSPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce for printing under the rule.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. SUTPHIN, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Texas a question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman from Texas kindly state what the program is for next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. Monday is District day, and I understand the Committee on the District of Columbia will probably bring up a reorganization bill. If that is disposed of, the Committee on Naval Affairs has three small bills which they expect to get up by unanimous consent.

On Tuesday the so-called naval-housing bill carrying, I think, a $150,000,000 authorization will be considered.

Wednesday we plan to take up the bill providing for the codification of the naturalization laws.

As stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], the conference report on the selective-service bill may be filed on Wednesday to be taken up Thursday, but I will make this statement, Mr. Speaker, that when the conference report is filed I think it is only fair to give 24 hours' notice before it is called up.

That is the program as far as I know it.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

S. 4272. An act to amend the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled "An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes," as amended.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10263. An act making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, September 9, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

By Mr. GREEN:

H. R. 10485. A bill to amend the act approved August 24, 1935, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept without cost to the United States certain land in Duval County, State of Florida; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Washington:

H. R. 10487. A bill to grant to the city of Vancouver, Wash., road rights-of-way and a retrocession of jurisdiction thereover; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALTER:

H. J. Res. 603. Joint resolution to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to furnish to the State of Pennsylvania a vessel suitable for the use of the Pennsylvania State Nautical School, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

Mr. JEFFRIES introduced a bill (H. R. 10486) for the relief of Walter C. Holmes, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9276. By Mr. ANGELL: Petition of sundry citizens of Oregon, protesting against military conscription; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9277. By Mr. GREGORY: Petition of Sam Easley, commander of American Legion Post, No. 26, of Mayfield, Ky., and Mrs. Harold J. Lewis, president, American Legion Auxiliary, of Mayfield, Ky., favoring material aid to the Allies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Whitledge Chapter, No. 9, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, of Outwood, Ky., urging the United States to immediately supply Great Britain with every available destroyer, submarine, and airplane, and all necessary food, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, August 5, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord of our life, our Creator and Redeemer, before whom we bow in reverent adoration: We thank Thee for this new day, for its long hours waiting to be filled with helpful labor, but especially for its open door of opportunity to serve Thee and our beloved country. Let us not break faith with our promises of other days, nor be content until we have righted all the wrongs of yesterday. Do Thou meet and speak with us today in the secret chamber of our hearts, that we may cast aside all selfish and unworthy thoughts, all malice toward our fellow men, all hesitancy in surrendering our wills to Thine.

To Thy loving guardianship, O Holy Father, we commend our President and all who share with him the heavy responsibilities of government in these days of gravest import. Rebuke the madness that is in the world because of war, and restrain all those who are engaged therein from needless cruelties and frightfulness. Do Thou look with mercy upon all who suffer, all who are bereaved, for Thou alone art the Refuge of the broken-hearted, the Deliverer of the oppressed, the Companion of the brave, and the everlasting Hope of all mankind; and so we humbly beg of Thee give peace, O God, give peace again. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Friday, September 6, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, with an amendment; that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill, asked a conference with the Senate thereon, and that Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON, Mr. HARTER of Ohio, Mr. ANDREWS, and Mr. SHORT were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED DURING RECESS

Under authority of the order of the 6th instant,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced that during the recess of the Senate he affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had been signed previously by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

On September 6, 1940:

H. R. 10263. An act making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

On September 7, 1940:

S. 4272. An act to amend the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled "An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes," as amended.

THE LATE SENATOR LUNDEEN: CONDOLENCES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chief of Protocol, Department of State, enclosing copy of a note, dated the 3d instant, from the Soviet Ambassador in Washington, expressing his condolences on the tragic death of Hon. Ernest Lundeen, late a Senator from the State of Minnesota, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

OUTSTANDING SETTLEMENT CLAIMS ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to facilitate the disclosure of outstanding settlement claims on the public domain, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS, AFFIRMATIONS, OR AFFIDAVITS IN THE ENFORCEMENT OF LAW

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting drafts of proposed legislation to authorize and empower certain officers, employees, and agents of the United States to administer and take oaths, affirmations, and affidavits in certain cases, and to amend the act entitled "An act to empower certain officers, agents, or employees of the Department of Agriculture to administer and take oaths, affirmations, and affidavits in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1925, which, with the accompany papers, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

EXPENSES OF ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of the Federal Security Agency, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, listing the detailed expenses of that institution for the fiscal year 1940, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution of the American Legion, Department of the District of Columbia, favoring the enactment of pending legislation to establish a division of aviation education within the United States Office of Education, Federal Security Agency, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the board of directors of the Mobile (Ala.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the enactment of the so-called Smith bill, to amend the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Forty-fourth Annual Convention of the Allied Printing Trades Council of New York State, assembled at Syracuse, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to enable widows and children of deceased veteran-members of the allied printing trades unions and other labor unions to receive the $100 burial allowance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a mass meeting held under the auspices of the American Legion, Department of Mississippi, at Jackson, Miss., favoring the preservation of liberty and the American way of life, and also the taking of prompt measures for the national defense, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the executive committee of Local No. 1, United American Federal Workers of America, Works Progress Administration Union (C. I. O.), of Washington, D. C., protesting against the enactment of selective compulsory military training legislation in peacetime, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland and Washington, D. C., praying for enactment of adequate measures for the national defense and the suppression of subversive activities, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10267) to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant an easement in a small strip of land at Veterans' Administration facility, Los Angeles, Calif., to the county of Los Angeles, Calif., for sidewalk purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2086) thereon.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 467) to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1941, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2087) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (S. 4227) for the relief of Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, Dorrit Claire Zucker, and Martha Hirsch, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2088) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3907. A bill to authorize the acceptance of donations of property for the Vicksburg National Military Park, in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2089);

H. R. 2728. A bill to add certain lands to the Cleveland National Forest in Orange County, Calif. (Rept. No. 2090);

H. R. 9942. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Henry W. Shurlds and W. H. White a patent to certain lands in the State of Mississippi (Rept. No. 2091);

H. R. 9943. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Ruth Gainey Branscome a patent to certain lands in the State of Mississippi (Rept. No. 2092); and

H. R. 10176. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title (Rept. No. 2093).

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3172. A bill to provide for the extension of certain oil- and gas-producing permits (Rept. No. 2094); and

H. R. 8448. A bill to provide for the extension of certain oil- and gas-prospecting permits (Rept. No. 2095).

Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8353) to change the designation of the Fort Marion National Monument, in the State of Florida, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2096) thereon.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10339) to authorize the President to requisition certain articles and materials for the use of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2097) thereon.

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4297) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2098) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRISON:

S. 4333. A bill for the relief of Richard P. Tell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. 4334. A bill to amend section 5278 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN COMMERCE AFFECTING NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask consent to submit a resolution to investigate conditions in interstate and foreign commerce which may or do delay, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense. I request that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce; and while

I shall not ask the clerk to read it, I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 309) was received and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Whereas authentic reports indicate that German and other foreign corporations enjoy a measure of control over some of our most important defense industries; and

Whereas an American corporation which supplies glass for instruments and weapons for the Army and Navy has been shown to have close relations with a German concern involving disclosure of secret processes; and

Whereas one of the most important metals, invaluable in the manufacture of airplanes, is controlled by a corporation half of whose stock is reliably reported to be owned by the German Chemical Trust; and

Whereas information has come to hand that some large concerns important to national defense have deferred national interests to monetary considerations by giving preference to foreign munitions orders; and

Whereas national defense, with which the American people are vitally concerned, demands the elimination of any such abuses and foreign controls which are contrary to our national interests:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make, and to report to the Senate the results of a thorough and complete investigation of acts, practices, methods, and omissions to act, by persons, partnerships, associations, corporations, other entities, and foreign governments, in interstate or foreign commerce, and of conditions of interstate or foreign commerce, which may or do delay, interfere with, or obstruct the national defense, including, among other things:

(1) Part or entire ownership by stock or otherwise of, influence in, control of, and power over, domestic business and production related to national defense, by any foreign person, partnership, association, corporation, foreign government, or agents or instrumentalities thereof, or other entity.

(2) Pooling arrangements or other contracts or agreements between any one or more of the foregoing, and any American person, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity, for interchange of business or trade secrets or other information, for interchange of patents or processes or patent rights, for allocation of sales or places of doing business or production, for restriction of production, or for fixing of prices.

(3) Sale, directly or indirectly, in or for foreign commerce, of materials or products, whether raw, semifinished or finished, used or usable in war industries or war activities or preparations by any foreign person, partnership, association, corporation, or other entity.

(4) Financial arrangements and demands therefor with respect to profits, taxes, or other matters, affecting national defense.

(5) Restraints of trade by foreign or domestic persons, partnerships, associations, corporations, or other entities, whether through monopolies or otherwise, affecting national defense.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to obtain such facts as other Government agencies may have, and to secure the assistance of other Government agencies in the investigation hereby authorized.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, during the sessions, recesses, and adjournaled periods of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and subsequent Congresses, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production and impounding of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

TRANSPORTATION IN COMMERCE OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. NEELY submitted a report, which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment, insert the following:

"That whoever shall knowingly transport or knowingly cause to be transported in interstate commerce, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist, knowingly, in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one State, Territory Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or both: Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal or District of Columbia penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State, or States, or political subdivisions thereof; to parts for the repair of farm machinery; or to agricultural commodities: Provided further, That this Act shall go into effect one year after its approval by the President."

And the House agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

PAT MCCARRAN,
M. M. NEELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR HILL ON FREIGHT-RATE DISCRIMINATION

[Mr. HILL asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him at Atlanta, Ga., on March 29, 1940, before the Atlantic Traffic Bureau on the subject of freight-rate discriminations, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS AT TEXAS STATE CONVENTION OF AMERICAN LEGION

[Mr. SHEPPARD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD extracts from an address by Hon. Josephus Daniels, American Ambassador to Mexico, at the Texas State Convention of the American Legion, at Laredo, Tex., on Monday, August 19, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE CARRIERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to state the parliamentary situation.

At the last session, a unanimous-consent agreement was entered into providing that the Senate shall vote upon the points of order made by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to the conference report on Senate bill 2009 at or before 1 o'clock today. The question as presented will be as follows:

Are the points of order raised by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] well taken? Those thinking they are well taken will vote "aye." Those holding the contrary view will vote "no."

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, together with the message from the House, requesting a conference with the Senate thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, what is that bill? It is not the conscription bill, is it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is the selective-service bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Can the consideration of this message from the House interrupt the consideration of the conference report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not interrupt it, but it is in order. It is a privileged matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does it displace the conference report now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It temporarily displaces it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The conference report will automatically come back before the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In view of the fact that there probably will be some discussion of a motion to instruct the conferees, and in view of the time limit which was placed on the consideration of the pending points of order, I suggest to the Senator from Texas that the consideration of the conscription bill be delayed until after the time limit fixed for the vote on the pending conference report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator intend to make a motion to instruct the conferees?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that a motion may be made to concur in the House amendment; and, failing that, I intend to make a motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is a motion to instruct the conferees in order when the bill first goes to conference?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is the only time it is in order, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true—after the request for a conference is granted, and before the conferees are appointed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No Senator has made such a motion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was suggesting to the Senator from Texas that if he intends to press this matter at this time, of course it would completely prevent carrying into effect the unanimous-consent order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well, Mr. President; the matter may go over for the present.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE CARRIERS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire briefly to state my position with respect to the point of order. I shall vote against sustaining the point of order for the following reasons:

I am impressed, by considerable experience in the practice of law and observation of the practice by others, that a statute obtains a practical meaning and application through construction by the tribunals which deal with it. We have had some very remarkable instances of complete changes in the literal meaning of statutes by construction by the courts; for example, the changing of the antitrust laws by construction so that there was read into them the rule of reasonableness, which had not been enacted by Congress; and citizens and officers of government and others who act under such statutes are bound, as I view it, by the state of the jurisprudence at the time they act. If they act strictly according to the letter of the statute before it is interpreted to have a different meaning than the normal interpretation of the English language allows, they are violating the law, rather than one who acts according to the statutes as it has been applied by the courts and other tribunals whose duty it is to apply the law.

I cannot accept any other theory of parliamentary law than that. I cannot vote to condemn as an unparliamentary act the conduct of conferees on the part of the two Houses of Congress who act according to the state of parliamentary law as it is today. The issue is very succinctly summed up in the admirable opinion of the present occupant of the chair, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], after quoting from an opinion by the Vice President relating to a point of order raised to the agricultural act which was under consideration as follows, to wit:

> Under the interpretation of the present occupant of the chair, where all after the enacting clause of a House bill is stricken out and an entirely new bill inserted by the Senate, the question arises as to whether or not the language used as a substitute for the two sections is germane and carries out the intent of both bodies with regard to such particular legislation.

I say, after referring to that part of the Vice President's decision, the present occupant of the chair said, among other things:

> There is the ruling of the Vice President to the effect that when the Senate amends a House bill, or a Senate bill is amended by a House bill, by striking out all after the enacting clause, and substituting the other body's bill, rule XXVII does not apply. That is a question which the Senate will have to determine.

That is the question which confronts me in deciding what my vote shall be on this point of order; and I cannot bring myself to condemn the action of the conferees, which was entirely within the scope of that decision and within the letter of it. So far as the issue of fact goes—and I have attentively listened to the debate—I cannot find as a fact that the matter inserted was not germane, and I cannot find that the omission of material was in conflict with rule XXVII as interpreted in the Vice President's ruling made in 1935.

No matter what my views may be as to the wisdom of such a ruling—and I shall be glad to state those views whenever the time arrives for doing so—I feel bound by the state of the law as it is today. During some 13 years this principle has been adhered to, with some exceptions, as pointed out by the learned occupant of the chair at the present time; but, on the whole, the weight of decision by the Senate has been that whenever all after the enacting clause of a bill as passed by one House is stricken out and the other House's text is substituted for it, matter inserted in the bill is matter properly within the jurisdiction of the conference, provided only that it is germane and carries out the intent of both bodies with respect to the particular legislation.

Personally I have arrived at the judgment that it is germane in this instance and that it does carry out the intent of both bodies with respect to such particular legislation. I shall therefore vote against the point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator whether, in his judgment, the view he has taken would not, if carried out, mean a complete nullification of the Senate's rule?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Then our rule amounts to nothing.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I do not think that. It is a complete nullification in this particular instance, not a complete nullification or negation of the rule. It is an interpretation of it which makes it inapplicable in such circumstances.

If I may be permitted a further answer in explanation, what we do here now should not be retroactive, it seems to me ex post facto to an extent. If we do not think that the practice has been correct, if we do not believe that the rule as it has become modified by these decisions is a rule which we want, let us make that known by an amendment of the rule, or by the adoption of a resolution which will have a future application, instead of taking these very conferees, for example, these honorable men, and condemning their act. I know from working with them on the Committee on Interstate Commerce how devoted they were to the purpose of the legislation, how hard they have worked to perfect it, and for practical reasons, to say nothing about the ethical reasons involved, I cannot bring myself to vote to support a point of order against their conduct, since their action seems to me to be in accord with the interpretations which were referred to so ably by the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede all the Senator has said about the fidelity of the hard-working members of the conference committee and other members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce; I agree fully with that, but it seems to me that if the Senator's position is correct, it means the nullification of clause 2 of rule XXVII of the Senate Rules, which I understand was enacted to meet just this kind of a situation. The Senator says we should change the rule. Can the Senator conceive of any language to insert in an amendment to the rule which would meet his suggestion?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the rule as it now stands, without any exception being made to it, meet the situation? There is nothing in the rule which indicates that it shall have no application, when a conference report is brought in, because an entire bill has been stricken out by one body and another inserted.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator is correct so far as the exact and precise language of the rule goes, but I am dealing with the rule as it has been interpreted; and that is what I say we are all bound to do. At any rate, it is a sufficient justification, it seems to me, for the conferees, who have acted according to the status of the law, not to feel bound to adhere to the exact letter of the rule.

The Senator asked me whether I could conceive of any language which would make the rule clearer, and I replied in the affirmative. I can conceive, in view of rulings which have been made, that we could clear up the situation for the future entirely by inserting language such as "under all circumstances" or "without exception," something of that kind, because we have arrived at a time when by interpretation the language is modified and an exception created.

Mr. NORRIS. Are not the words the Senator has suggested in the rule now in effect? The rule itself makes no exception.

Mr. AUSTIN. I know that.

Mr. NORRIS. So that it should apply to all conference reports.

Mr. AUSTIN. I know that, but the decisions have put an exception in it.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but I take it a court would find, as I think we should find, that when the decisions are absolutely contrary to the spirit and letter of the rule, we should not continue to follow the error any longer than it would take us to find it out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, let me answer in this way: The rulings which put the exception into the rule were not merely the rulings of the Presiding Officer of the body. They have the sanction and force of the vote of the United States Senate. I feel bound by that. I think we should not change the law as it exists today by an act which reflects upon and overturns the faithful service of our representatives in a conference who have acted in the light of the law as it is today. That is my view of the matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will agree, will he not, that the provision to which he refers, and which he says put an exception in the rule, overturned a decision of President pro tempore Cummins, who was sustained on appeal by a decisive majority of the Senate? It seems to me the ruling is no more binding in one case than in the other.

Since the Senator made reference a moment ago to what the present occupant of the chair stated, I wish to say that I intend to put into the RECORD before the debate closes, if I can get the floor, several paragraphs of what he said, because I think they are very pertinent. The Senator from Nevada stated a few days ago that each House has its own rules, and that neither can do anything to suspend the operation of the rules of the other body.

Was not the inference from that, and I think the clear intendment of what the President pro tempore said, that no practice of the House of Representatives can be binding on the Senate, such as the practice of having the previcus question, and a great many other practices which obtain in the House?

Mr. AUSTIN. I assent to that.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I call attention to the fact that, no matter what the rule may say, after all, the Senate of the United States interprets its own rules, and if it interprets the rule in question to mean what we are contending, as it has done ever since 1927, that stands as the rule of the Senate at the particular time.

I wish to call particular attention to the fact that the Senator from Nebraska, when the agricultural bill was before the Senate, voted to put on the rule the very interpretation we are putting upon it today, and if I am not mistaken, so did the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Missouri voted to put identically the same interpretation upon the rule.

I also call attention to the fact that there was a difference between the Wadsworth amendment and the Miller amendment which vitally affected the whole substance of the amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have said all I care to submit.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate at any length on this matter, except to refer to the fact brought out by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] that I did vote to sustain Vice President GARNER'S opinion. As I pointed out the other day, every question in these cases is a mixed question of law and fact, and on the occasion referred to I did vote to sustain Vice President GARNER, and have no apology to make for having done so.

My purpose in taking the floor today for a brief period is not to argue the point of order, which I discussed at some length on Friday, but, inasmuch as the point of order has been pending before the Senate since Friday, August 30, more than a week ago, and since the very able statement of the President pro tempore was made some 10 days ago, I desire to avail myself at this time of the opportunity of refreshing the memory of Senators by reading the concluding paragraphs of the statement of the President pro tempore at that time.

After referring to the opinion of President pro tempore Albert C. Cummins, of Iowa, sustaining a point of order raised under clause 2 of rule XXVII, pointing out that rule XXVII had a few years before been adopted for the specific purpose of obviating just such assumptions of excessive power on the part of conferees, the President pro tempore proceeded, after stating that the opinion of President pro tempore Cummins had been sustained on appeal:

> The Chair calls attention to the fact that that is about the same vote by which the ruling of Vice President GARNER was sustained, indicating, as stated before, that it is unfortunate that there is evidence before the Senate of long years' standing that very frequently Senators, instead of voting on the question of violation of the rule, vote on whether or not they want the conference report agreed to. The Chair thinks a majority of this body wants this conference report agreed to if it contains what was in the bill when the Senate passed it.

I am now reading from the statement of the present President pro tempore of the Senate on this very point of order:

> It is impossible for the Chair to review the provisions of the Senate bill or the provisions of the House bill. They are voluminous. It is practically impossible for the Chair to review the conference report, which carries numerous amendments and changes. All the Chair is attempting to do is to lay down the various definitions of the rule. With all due respect to the Vice President, for whom the Chair has the highest regard—

Which I very fully share, Mr. President—> he does not believe that the precedents of the House of Representatives, which provide that the conferees have a very wide latitude and may write a new bill in the case of an amendment in the form of a substitute apply to the Senate, since the adoption of this particular rule on March 8, 1918. Each body has its own rules, and neither body can suspend or affect the rules of the other.

> Mr. Jones of Washington stated in his ruling that the annoyance to the Senate of having to act on conference reports under the rules of the House had made the Senate rule necessary. Before the adoption of the rule in 1918 a conference report would come into the Senate based upon an amendment consisting of a substitution of one bill for another bill after the enacting clause, which would contain new legislation never considered by either body, or the elimination of legislation agreed to by both bodies. Prior to March 1918 there was no provision or rule in the Senate by which a point of order could be made. A Senator had only one remedy, and that was to vote against the conference report, as now appears to be the case if the Vice President is correct in holding that an amendment by the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill eliminates rule XXVII.
> If the ruling of Vice President GARNER is correct, then the Senate has been deprived of the opportunity to consider, discuss, reject, or approve the new legislation submitted in the conference report.
> As to whether the matter is relevant or not, the Chair does not consider material. Under the rule, there is no question of relevancy. The rule provides that no new matter may be added and that no matter agreed on between the two Houses may be excluded. Whether or not new matter has been inserted in the report, the Chair does not know, and does not attempt to decide. It is evident that the repeal of the La Follette Seamen's Act would be relevant to this proposed legislation. Yet if the conferees should have included a provision in the conference report repealing the La Follette Seamen's Act, each Senator would feel that he was entitled to the privilege of debating that question and rejecting the proposal separately or amending it to suit himself. Yet the Chair does not think anyone can question that the La Follette Seamen's Act would be relevant to the general regulation of rates and operations of railroads, motor carriers, and steamboats.

The Senate has a right to determine for itself whether or not a matter is sufficiently relevant to be included with the ordinary subject matter dealt with. Senators have a right to vote against it. But if the ruling of Vice President GARNER is correct and is to be followed, because there was an amendment by substitution instead of section by section, then every Senator is denied the right to vote separately on any new legislation that may be placed in the bill. A conference report is not open to amendment. If adopted, it becomes the law.

It seems to the Chair that if the ruling of Vice President GARNER is correct, rule XXVII is set aside by the simple procedure of the House amending the Senate bill by substitution, and then each Senator may be denied the privilege of debating the new provisions and the privilege of voting on it and is compelled, under such a ruling, either to vote for the conference report, the majority of whose provisions he favors and for which he voted in the Senate, and accept the new matter in the conference report in doing so, or voting against the conference report, which in part, if not in greater part, he favors, because objectionable matters are put in which were never under consideration by either the House or the Senate.

The Chair sees no distinction between amending a Senate bill by amending every section of it separately and amending every section of it by a substitute bill. If the substitute bill is different in language for the entire language of the Senate bill, then it constitutes an amendment of every section of the bill. If the substitute House bill only changes the language of half the Senate provisions, then it agrees with half, and there is an amendment to the other half, which would be in conference.

The substitution of a House bill for a Senate bill or a Senate bill for a House bill is purely a matter of convenience. It does not change one iota the questions that would be in conference between the two Houses. It is simply a fiction. Both bills deal with the same subject, or are supposed to deal with the same subject; both bills, as a matter of fact, are identical in some particulars, while in other particulars there is only a difference of language.

I should like to have Senators listen particularly to this provision, because it is extremely pertinent, and involves the whole gist of the controversy.

If conferees can take a provision of the Senate bill which is a little different in language and form from the provision in the House bill, both having in view the accomplishment of the same purpose, and say, "We will not try to adjust these two amendments, but we will strike both out," notwithstanding the Senate rule, then, to a certain extent, it makes futile the labors of the Senate and the similar labors of the Members of the House.

The House—

Says the President pro tempore, and it is simply what I repeated the other day and amplified to a certain extent—

The House is satisfied with such procedure. The House—

Goes on the President pro tempore—

probably because of its numerous Members, has been forced into somewhat of committee control of legislation. The Senate has never had any such theory of legislation. The Senate contends that no provision of a bill has a right to become law without each Senator having the opportunity to debate the subject so long as he wants to and reject it or approve it or amend it.

And the President pro tempore goes on to submit the question. I stand on the reasoning of the President pro tempore.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator knows, however, that notwithstanding the statement of the President pro tempore, the Senate, for the past 15 years, has followed the rulings to which the Senator referred.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am familiar with the decisions which have been referred to a number of times.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; and the Senator knows, does he not, that the present occupant of the chair, the President pro tempore, himself made a ruling when he was in the chair, which conformed to the procedure to which the Senator referred?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I heard that decision referred to the other day. I stand on the very well considered language of the President pro tempore which I have just read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair say to the Senator that he respectfully differs with the Senator from Montana in the statement he just made.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say that having examined the decision of the present President pro tempore, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], to which the Senator from Montana referred, I do not think it is a case in point, nor do I think the case decided by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] when he occupied the chair is a case in point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if it were not for these differences, the legal profession would go out of business.

I do not desire to discuss the merits of the conference report, although in discussing the point of order it is not altogether possible to avoid reference to the differences between the two Houses on the points at issue, and the effect which the House amendment and the conference report have had on the legislation.

I think it is also important that in voting on the point of order we lose sight of the merits of the bill, because we are about to make a rule which will operate as a precedent for future Senates to be guided by. If the point of order is overruled, which I hope it will be, we have then an opportunity to vote on the merits of the conference report as such; so I hope that in casting our votes now we may vote strictly on the question of the rule itself and our interpretation of the parliamentary situation. That question is, Have the conferees gone beyond their authority in bringing in the conference report on two points, on which the point of order has been made—in the first place, the changes in the Panama Canal Act, and in the next place, the elimination of the Miller-Wadsworth amendment?

Regardless of any rulings of the Chair made heretofore or currently, the question is, Have the conferees exceeded their authority in this particular instance? In determining that question it is not at all inappropriate to ask whether previous decisions have upheld the theory that when one House strikes out all the language of a bill passed by the other House, and writes a new bill, conferees have wider authority than they otherwise would have if the bill had been amended section by section. I think it will appear to Senators reasonable, and almost necessary, that when a new bill has been written in, when the sections do not correspond, when a provision in a Senate bill in section 10, we will say, may be deleted and carried over into section 40 or section 50 in connection with some other subject, it is much more difficult to keep a meticulous account of the difference between the respective bills of the two Houses than it is where the language in any section is simply amended by adding thereto or striking out language in the section, because when one comes to a conference report on that, all one has to do is to sit down and read the section, and if it stands by itself, to determine the latitude which should be allowed conferees in dealing with the italics which have been printed as an amendment of either the House or the Senate.

It is much more easy to decide the latitude which should be allowed to conferees in a situation such as that than it is to decide their latitude in a case when a bill has been entirely rewritten and the old bill has been stricken out.

Therefore it is necessary that the conferees be given wider latitude when one House strikes out the entire bill than it is when it does not. That necessity has been recognized not only by Vice President GARNER but by Vice President Dawes, who rendered a decision to which Vice President GARNER referred to in his decision. That theory has been acted upon from that time to this. So it has become a well-acknowledged principle of the Senate that when one body strikes out all of a bill and inserts a new bill the conferees have wider latitude than they otherwise would have. They must have wider latitude than they ordinarily would have if they are to come to an agreement at all. The rules of both Houses thus provide, of necessity, so that both Houses can come together in order to legislate at all.

On the question of the Panama Canal Act I maintain that there is no difference between the House and the Senate, practically speaking. The Panama Canal Act authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission from time to time to extend the time beyond 1914 during which the railroads might operate steamboat lines. That authority has been extended from time to time. Twenty-six years have passed since 1914, and during those 26 years the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the act of Congress, has extended the time, and it may continue to do so indefinitely. There is no limit fixed in the law that gives them their authority as to the time during which they may extend the right to operate steamships.

We must all take knowledge of the fact that a steamship does not last forever. It wears out; and if a railroad is operating a steamship line under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and a steamship of the line wears out and becomes useless, the railroad certainly has the right to replace the steamship by building another and operating it. Therefore the railroads have always had the implied power to buy, build, own, and acquire title to steamships. Both Houses have a provision which amends the Panama Canal Act in that respect; and all the conferees have done has been to clarify the power of railroads which have permission to acquire and own steamships. I think the railroads have had such power all the time, but the Interstate Commerce Commission wanted it clarified. That is what has been done. The words "own and acquire" have been added. A fair interpretation of the law would require the implication that those words were in it, because certainly Congress did not mean to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to authorize railroads to operate steamships until their property had become useless and then refuse to give them authority to continue to do so. The Interstate Commerce Commission has interpreted that language to mean not steamships which were in existence in 1914 or when the law was enacted prior to that time, but steamships in existence at the time the application is made to the Commission for permission to continue to operate.

So it seems to me perfectly clear that, so far as the Panama Canal Act is concerned, the conferees have not gone beyond their authority in dealing with the amendment to the Panama Canal Act. Therefore, even if we did not have before us the situation of a new bill having been written by the House as a substitute for the Senate bill, the point of order would not lie against the amendment to the Panama Canal Act if it had been amended section by section and paragraph by paragraph. So, on that point, it seems to me, the point of order ought to be overruled.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I also call attention to the fact that paragraph 20 of the present law provides for application for new lines. So, as a matter of fact, we have not changed in the slightest degree the interpretation which has always been placed upon the language, which I think is the correct interpretation. All we did was to transpose the language from paragraph 20 to what would be paragraph 21 of the present law.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be perfectly ridiculous to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission could authorize a company to operate new lines, and then refuse to give the company power to acquire the facilities necessary to operate the new lines.

The Miller amendment had reference particularly to the long-and-short-haul clause of the present Transportation Act. The Miller amendment reads as follows:

> In order that the public at large may enjoy the bentfit and economy afforded by each type of transportation, the Commission shall permit each type of carrier or carriers to reduce rates so long as such rates maintain a compensatory return to the carrier or carriers after taking into consideration overhead and all other elements entering into the cost to the carrier or carriers for the service rendered.

That is written in directly in connection with the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to authorize the railroads to charge less proportionately for a long haul than for the same mileage on a short haul. That is all a part of the interpretation of section 4, known as the long-and-short-haul clause of the Transportation Act.

The Wadsworth amendment nullifies the Miller amendment. The Wadsworth amendment, added in the House, reads as follows:

> Provided, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed so as to affect the long-and-short-haul provision of section 4.

In other words, the Wadsworth amendment, added in the House, absolutely nullified the Miller amendment of the Senate. So, when the bill came to the conferees, in my judgment they had the authority, not only under the strict interpretation of the language of rule XXVII but also under the interpretations which have been given for the past 13 years, to amend or eliminate altogether the Miller-Wadsworth amendment, because it nullified itself. When the bill came back from the House, the effect of it was the same as though a pen had been stricken through the entire Miller amendment and it had been eliminated from the bill, because the proviso automatically nullifies its effect.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. When the so-called Miller amendment came up in the Senate, at first blush it seemed to embody a provision which I personally should like to see adopted. However, when we came to study its effect, it not only changed section 4 but likewise changed section 3. It would permit the railroads to go back to the practice of granting rebates, and would practically nullify the whole intent and purpose of regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That fact was not brought out in the debate. The amendment was not discussed, because no one had an opportunity to consider it. We were not expert enough to understand its real effect.

I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that when the committee appointed by the President brought the bill to me and asked me to introduce it, I refused to introduce it because it contained a provision with reference to the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause. I said I would not introduce a bill of that kind. When the Miller amendment was adopted, no one dreamed that it would affect the long-and-short-haul clause. No one dreamed that it would repeal the third section and permit the railroads to grant rebates, as they did before the Interstate Commerce Act was enacted. The Miller amendment would practically destroy the purpose for which the Interstate Commerce Act was enacted, namely, to keep the railroads from granting rebates to this community or that community, or this industry or that industry. So, naturally, when the bill reached the stage of conference, and we found that the Miller amendment disagreed in one particular with the fourth section, and likewise turned back to the railroads the right to fix freight rates, we were opposed to it.

Under the rules of the Senate, and the rulings for 13 years, we maintain that we had authority to do what we did. There was a difference between the Senate and the House. I submit to any fair-minded person who knows anything about the subject, and who has studied the effect of the Miller amendment upon the fourth section, that he could not avoid coming to the conclusion that we lived up to the rules of the Senate, even though they be strictly interpreted, and that we lived up to the rulings of the Senate for the past 13 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Miller amendment, while not referring to the fourth section, in effect would nullify the fourth section of the Transportation Act. The Wadsworth amendment nullified the Miller amendment. They cancel each other out, and the effect is the same as though there were no language there at all. Certainly the conferees had the right to place that interpretation upon the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield. I have only 2 minutes left.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely wish to make a very brief statement of my own views.

My judgment is that the ruling of the present occupant of the chair is a correct ruling upon the question. I make that statement in order that my vote may not be misunderstood. I am accepting the statement of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] that what the conferees have done under the rule is not in conflict with the ruling and interpretation of the present occupant of the chair. I think it would be most unfortunate if the rule should be strictly enforced.

I make that statement of my own view so that at a subsequent date I shall not be confronted with the fact that I voted in favor of the ruling.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in conclusion, I recognize how difficult it is for any of us to separate our convictions on the merits of the bill from the point of order; but it is important that we vote upon the point of order having in mind the rulings which may be made in the future.

In the minute I have left I wish to say that what I am about to say has nothing to do with the point of order, and it ought not to influence the vote of any Senator; but no committees of the House or Senate have worked more diligently or longer to produce legislation than have the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. I think it cannot be disputed that if the point of order shall be sustained it will mean the end of this legislation not only for this session but for a long time. If the point of order shall be overruled, we shall vote, not later than 3 o'clock, upon the conference report itself. If the conference report shall be rejected, it will mean that all the effort which has been made during the past 2 or 3 years to obtain some sort of coordination in our transportation system, which has been recommended by various Presidents and public bodies, will be at an end for a long time. For that reason, the votes we are about to cast on the point of order and on the conference report itself are very important.

I think the committees which have been dealing with this problem have rendered a great service in trying to bring about legislation, and that they are entitled to the thanks of the Senate and of the House for the diligence they have shown. Of course, the point of order is made in good faith; but unless it is voted upon by the Senate, having in mind the possibilities of the future, it is possible that we may do our transportation system an injustice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate is to vote at this time on the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	La Follette	Schwartz
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard
Austin	George	McCarran	Stewart
Bailey	Gerry	McKellar	Taft
Barbour	Gibson	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Barkley	Gillette	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Green	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Guffey	Minton	Townsend
Bulow	Gurney	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg

Clark, Idaho	Hill	Pittman	White
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wiley
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Reed
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Russell

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is, Are the points of order raised by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] well taken?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. To sustain the point of order, the vote is "yea" and the vote to overrule the point of order is "nay"? Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A vote "yea" will be a vote to sustain the point of order and a vote "nay" to overrule the point of order. The Chair was under the impression that the yeas and nays had been ordered. He finds, however, that they have not been ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am informed that, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota (Mr. FRAZIER). I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. On this vote I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are necessarily absent.

I am authorized to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], who, if present, would vote "yea," with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], who, if present, would vote "nay";

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. If present, the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea" and the Senator from Kentucky would vote "nay."

I am authorized to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following special pairs:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who would vote "yea."

I also announce the following general pair:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Alabama are unavoidably absent.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—23

Bailey	Ellender	McKellar	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	George	Miller	Sheppard
Burke	Gibson	Norris	Stewart
Caraway	Gillette	Overton	Taft
Clark, Mo.	Herring	Pittman	Walsh
Connally	Lodge	Radcliffe

NAYS—51

Adams	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Thomas, Idaho
Ashurst	Gerry	Lee	Thomas, Okla.
Austin	Green	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Barbour	Guffey	Maloney	Townsend
Barkley	Gurney	Mead	Tydings

NOT VOTING—21

Bankhead	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bone	Glass	Pepper	Tobey
Bridges	Holman	Reynolds	Truman
Chandler	Holt	Shipstead
Chavez	King	Slattery
Donahey	Lucas	Smathers

So the Senate decided that the points of order raised by Mr. CLARK of Missouri against the conference report on Senate bill 2009 were not well taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	La Follette	Schwartz
Andrews	Downey	Lee	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Ellender	Lodge	Sheppard

Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Russell

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy any more time on the question of the parliamentary procedure involved further than to say that in view of the very decisive vote by which the point of order has been overruled I think that in common self-respect the Senate ought to repeal rule XXVII, and tomorrow I intend to submit a resolution for the repeal of that rule. Following the logic of that, I think it would be in order, if it were possible under the Constitution, simply to provide that the Senate shall not consider measures coming from the House, but that they shall be immediately committed to conferees, because that is the effect of the ruling made just a few minutes ago by the Senate of the United States in completely overriding and disregarding a specific provision of a rule adopted to meet just exactly such a situation as this.

Mr. President, so far as the merits of the conference report are concerned, I had intended to make some remarks upon the subject of what is being done to the motor-transport industry of the United States under the provisions of this bill; but I believe that is sufficiently well understood. It has been discussed during the course of the debate on the point of order. I merely desire to point out to the Senate of the United States precisely what it is doing by adopting this conference report by narrating very briefly a remark which I once heard made by one of the greatest railroad tycoons who ever lived in this country, James J. Hill.

One time in my father's office I heard my father ask Mr. Hill whether his railroad suffered at all from water transportation. Mr. Hill chuckled and said, "No; water transportation does not bother us at all. We used to have transportation on the Missouri River as high up as Fort Benton; but," he said, "by juggling the rates we were able to put most of them out of business, and there are only four or five boats left on the river, and we own them."

Mr. President, this conference report is designed to bring about again precisely that situation, in which there will be only a few boats on the rivers, there will be only a few boats engaged in intercoastal transporation, and the railroads will own them. Whatever lines are engaged in motor transportation will undoubtedly be owned by the railroads, which is unquestionably the purpose of this conference report. When the Senate adopts it, the Senate ought to realize that it is voting to re-create the old, bad situation in which the railroads, by unfair methods, strangled water transportation along the rivers, the lakes, and the ocean in competition with their transportation monopoly; and there cannot be any dispute that that is the sole purpose of this conference report.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the report.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, there is one minor question which I desire to propound to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is in charge of the bill, before the vote is taken.

Beginning at the bottom of page 36 of the conference report and going over to the top of page 37 there is a provision exempting from the terms of the act—

> Commodities * * * loaded and carried without wrappers or containers and received and delivered by the carrier without transportation mark or count.

Some of those who feel that they might be affected by that provision think the language is not clear. They do not know just what is meant by "without transportation mark or count."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that that is a term commonly used in shipping on the Great Lakes. It is a well-known and well-defined term. It simply means that materials carried in bulk are exempt.

Mr. BURKE. For instance, commodities such as sand, gravel, coal, salt, various ores, sulfur, crushed stone, and so forth. They are shipped in bulk without wrappers or containers, but necessarily in the shipping document they are measured by weight or by volume; but that fact would not take away the exemption?

Mr. WHEELER. No, indeed.

Mr. BURKE. I merely wanted to be sure that that was understood.

Mr. WHEELER. They are exempt, because it is recognized that there is not any competition at all with reference to those materials.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, in the course of the debate the other day some controversy took place between the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and me as to the attitude of some of the inland waterway carriers; and the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co. was quoted. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a letter from Mr. L. W. Childress, president of the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co., pointing out that he had previously supported this bill, but that he is now against it by reason of the elision of the Miller-Wadsworth amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY BARGE LINE CO.,
St. Louis, Mo., August 8, 1940.

Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LEA: In the belief that it would not be the intent of the authors of the Wheeler-Lea bill to enact legislation that would prove injurious to water carriers, the management of the Mississipi Valley Barge Line Co. gave both the Senate and the House committees its sympathetic cooperation when most other inland water carriers were striving valiantly to defeat the legislation.

The representatives of the Mississippi Valley Barge Line who appeared before the Senate and House committees undertook to emphasize the necessity for a provision designed to prevent the railroads from resorting to methods of the past which resulted in complete destruction of river transportation. This appeared to us to be essential because numerous decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission during the past few years have to all practical purposes nullified the protection of Congress intended to throw around water carriers by enactment of the fourth-section clause of the Interstate Commerce Act and section 500 of the Transportation Act.

In consequence of the representation made by ourselves as well as other interests, the Miller-Wadsworth amendment was passed by an overwhelming majority in both the Senate and House. My conviction is that without this or a similar amendment, the rail carriers will, through devastating rate reductions, continue their onslaughts on water-competitive traffic to a point where there is little hope for the continued operation of inland water carriers. In the circumstances, if the bill as recommended by the conferees' committee is enacted, Congress should as its plain duty concurrently enact legislation to discontinue the expenditure of all appropriations for the improvement of inland waterways.

It is urged in all sincerity that the bill in its present form will place an additional handicap on industry and agriculture in the Mississippi Valley.

Very truly yours,

L. W. CHILDRESS.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I merely wish to inquire of the Chair whether the yeas and nays were ordered on the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They were not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I asked for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request was not seconded.

Mr. MILLER. Then, Mr. President, before the vote is had, I merely want the RECORD to show that I shall vote against the adoption of the conference report for reasons which I undertook to state last week on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, let me again ask for the yeas and nays. I do not think the Senate completely understood the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the conference report. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am informed that, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am permitted to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are necessarily absent.

I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] would vote "yea."

I also announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], who would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following special pairs:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], who would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who would vote "yea."

I also announce the following general pair:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. These Senators are unavoidably absent.

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 15, as follows:

So the report was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement giving some explanations of certain provisions which were changed. I desire to have these explanations in the RECORD because I feel they would be helpful to the Interstate Commerce Commission in interpreting the various provisions of the act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

This bill, S. 2009, which is generally known as the omnibus transportation bill, passed the Senate May 25, 1939, by a vote of 70 to 6. The Senate bill was what is known as a codified bill. The present Interstate Commerce Act is in two parts, part I relating generally to railroads and a limited number of water carriers, and part II to motor carriers. The Senate bill consolidated the respective provisions of these two parts of present law, such as those relating to the reasonableness of rates, and amended the present law in certain respects; and, in addition, the bill provided for the regulation of water carriers operating in interstate or foreign commerce by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The House of Representatives struck out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill, and adopted an amendment which accomplished substantially the same purposes as the Senate bill, by a different method. The House amendment provided specific amendments of parts I and II of the Interstate Commerce Act and a new part III to that act, providing for regulation of water carriers. The House amendment also contained certain additional legislation, which I shall discuss later.

After a lengthy conference, the conferees agreed upon a bill which follows the form of the House amendment, but which, I believe it can be said fairly, contains legislation on every important point included in the Senate bill.

As originally reported, the conference substitute did not contain three amendments made from the floor of the House by Representatives JONES, HARRINGTON, and WADSWORTH, respectively. The House voted to recommit the bill with instructions to its conferees to insist upon such amendments. After further consideration, the conferees again reported out the bill with substitutes for the Jones and Harrington amendments.

With these amendments the bill was passed by the House on Monday, August 12, by a vote of 247 to 74.

One of the things that apparently has caused some confusion in the minds of those opposing this legislation are the changes made in the provision of the Panama Canal Act.

The provisions of this act, found in paragraphs (19), (20), and (21) of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act involve many ambiguities and uncertainties of language, and without administrative interpretation they would have been impossible of practical application. Under such circumstances administrative interpretation is controlling unless overruled by the courts. The Commission's interpretation of these provisions has not been challenged in the courts, although such interpretation has been followed for many years by the Commission.

These paragraphs are not clear on the question of the installation of new water service and on the acquisition of interests in water lines by rail carriers.

However, in the case of Southern Pacific Co.'s Ownership of Atlantic Steamship Lines (77 I. C. C. 124), the Commission found, following prior cases decided by it, that these paragraphs, considered as a whole, authorized the approval by the Commission of the installation of new water service upon the same terms and conditions that the continuance of existing service might be approved. Section 7 of the conference report follows this interpretation. The report proposes to amend paragraph (16) of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, authorizes the Commission to approve new operations of vessels not previously engaged in, upon a finding by the Commission as to public interest and competition which is the same finding required under paragraph (21) of section 5 of present law. Therefore, as to extensions of service, it seems perfectly clear that the conference substitute does not go beyond present law, as interpreted, but merely clarifies it.

It has been argued by certain opponents of any legislation for the regulation of water carriers that the conferees have changed present law substantially by failing to substitute for the words "not operated through the Panama Canal" in paragraph (16), the words "through the Panama Canal or elsewhere." It is argued that the failure to include the words "or elsewhere" in paragraph (16) of the conference substitute results in repeal of the prohibition in present law against acquisition by railroads of competing water services on the inland waterways and on the Great Lakes.

Now, I trust that this unfounded interpretation results from confusion in the minds of those who advance it, occasioned by the ambiguities in the present law, rather than from an attempt to confuse the issue as to the actual effect of the amendments proposed in the conference substitute.

When considered alone, the present law, in paragraph (19) contains an absolute prohibition against the owning by a railroad of an interest in a competing water carrier "operated through the Panama Canal or elsewhere." However, paragraph (19) must be read in connection with paragraph (21) of present law, which clearly provides for relaxation of this absolute prohibition; and permits the Commission to authorize continuance of operation of a water service in which a competing railroad is interested where certain findings as to the public interest have been made by the Commission, and where it is a "service by water other than through the Panama Canal."

Now paragraph (14) of the conference substitute, corresponding to paragraph (19) of the present law, contains the identical words, "common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal or elsewhere" which are found in the present law. Also, paragraph (16) of the conference substitute contains the words "a common carrier by water or vessel, not operated through the Panama Canal," where the corresponding paragraph (21) of the present law, using slightly different words having precisely the same meaning, states "service by water other than through the Panama Canal."

To sum up, paragraph (21) of the present law provides for relaxation, under certain circumstances, of the provisions contained in paragraph (19), but such relaxation is permitted only as to a "service by water other than through the Panama Canal." Similarly, paragraph (16) of the conference substitute provides for relaxation under certain circumstances of the provisions contained in paragraph (14), but such relaxation is permitted only as to "a common carrier by water or vessel, not operated through the Panama Canal." Under the circumstances, I cannot see how any understanding person can state with candor that the conferees propose to turn the railroads loose to acquire the water lines of this country in order that they might throttle water competition.

In a memorandum which has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, reference is made to a decision of the Commission in 1916 in Lake Line Applications Under Panama Canal Act (33 I. C. C. 699). While the purpose is not entirely clear, I assume that this decision of the Commission is referred to on the theory that the action of the conferees on this bill would preclude any future decisions by the Commission along the line of that in the Lake Line Applications case. Nothing could be further from the truth. In that case the Commission found that the services by water which were the subject of the application were not being operated in the interest of the public or with advantage to the convenience or commerce of the people. Under paragraph (16) of the conference substitute the Commission, upon making such a finding, would be required to deny this application today just as it denied the 1916 application. Paragraph (16) of the conference substitute requires the same tests to be applied by the Commission in such a case that the present law, paragraph (21) of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, required to be applied in 1916.

The principal objection to this bill in the House was caused by the elimination of the Miller-Wadsworth amendment. This amendment as it passed the Senate reads:

"In order that the public at large may enjoy the benefit and economy afforded by each type of transportation, the Commission shall permit each type of carrier or carriers to reduce rates so long as such rates maintain a compensatory return to the carrier or carriers for the service rendered."

When the bill was submitted by the House, they added to the Senate bill the following proviso:

"Provided, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed so as to affect the long-and-short-haul provision of section 4."

The Wadsworth amendment provides that the Commission is to permit a floor to be placed under rates. It must be compensatory and in addition it must cover all overhead and all allowances of costs, meaning overhead including taxes. There is considerable freight in this country that is carried at a low level of freight rates on a narrow margin because of competitive conditions or because it will not move at a higher freight rate. Many agricultural commodities are in this category, as are passenger fares. In this country there is great need of cheap transportation because of the wide spread of the country and the fact that productive centers are scattered throughout the Nation. The effect of the amendment would be to raise the freight rates on a large part of the heavy commerce of the United States. Passengers in the United States are carried at a heavy loss which has been approximated at $100,000,000 a year. If the Miller-Wadsworth amendment was adopted by the railroads, theoretically it would have to recover that $100,000,000 by higher fares. Obviously it could not do so. It would simply mean that the rates would be raised and it would have less traffic on the railroads and less income. As I have said, there are certain movements of freight traffic on the railroads, or anywhere else for that matter, that will not move unless it has a cheap rate. Much of that includes agricultural products. The rates on these articles are not fixed on a full allocated cost which would include overhead and profit and all the other things, but they figure what the out-of-pocket cost is to move that freight and add something to it on the theory that it is better to make a little profit than not to move the freight at all. There are rates like that all over the country. There are rates made on a basis other than the full allocated cost which have been made effective simply to equalize the competitive advantages of different communities trying to get into a consumer market. The Wadsworth amendment means that a rail carrier could not reduce a rate below the full allocated cost in order to move the traffic that would otherwise not be moved. It seems to me the effect of this would be to raise the rates over the country, particularly on agricultural commodities. I do not believe anyone wants that done. There is no sound economic reason why it should be necessary for each rate to pay its share of all costs and at the same time contribute something to profit. If rates were made on this theory the classification of goods and commodities for rate-making purposes would be next to impossible and as a consequence rates on many commodities, particularly farm products, would be greatly increased. If this amendment goes into effect it appears to me that practically every branch line of the country will be seriously affected. The reason is that the amendment provides that no rate shall be reduced below the cost of operating a particular line. It is well known that branch-line transportation is more expensive than main-line transportation. Under our rate structure, rates charged on grain, for example, from a certain point on the main line to the city of Chicago is identical with that which is charged on the branch line. The rate on the branch line would have to be raised, and the same thing would be true as to passenger fares.

This amendment met with most vigorous objection of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, headed by Chairman Eastman. The Commission pointed out that there are two kinds of costs, out-of-pocket costs and full allocated costs, which are quite different. The amendment is not clear as to what manner of cost is meant, and it is also uncertain what is meant by a compensatory return. It stating why the amendment was objectionable, the Commission said:

"In the past the freight rates of railroads, and also of other carriers, have taken into consideration not only cost of service but value of service, or 'what the traffic would bear.' This had the result of putting a somewhat disproportionate burden on the higher-valued commodities, particularly those capable of a comparatively heavy car loading, but in general was approved by public opinion. The intense transportation competition of the present day, including the ability of many shippers to provide their own transportation, is tending rapidly to break down this method of constructing rates, and it may be that eventually it will be impossible to give much, if any, weight to the so-called value of the service. * * *

"Let us suppose, for example, a situation where competing railroads, coastwise steamship lines, and trucks are all maintaining, to their own and the shippers' satisfaction in general, a comparatively high level of freight rates on various packaged goods of high value, and some carrier, for the sake of a temporary advantage, undertakes to cut these rates. If this must be allowed, ultimately all the competing rates will be reduced and a hole created in carrier revenues which may make it necessary to increase rates on traffic less able to stand the burden. We think that it should not be allowed, and that the Commission should be in a position to prevent such a train of events by exercise of its authority over minimum rates.

"In our judgment, the provision in question is not necessary in order that the public at large may enjoy the benefit and economy afforded by each type of transportation. The requirement in the rate-making rule that the Commission give due consideration to the effect of rates on the movement of traffic by the carrier or carriers for which the rates are prescribed, and also to the need in the public interest of adequate and efficient transportation by such carrier or carriers at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service, coupled with the admonition in the declaration of policy in section 1 that the provisions of the act be so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each mode of transportation, will afford adequate protection in this respect. If experience should show that further protection is needed, contrary to our expectation, Congress can then amend the act, but such a restriction as is now proposed is, we believe, both unnecessary and undesirable.

Coming now to the Jones amendment relating to export rates, etc.

"The Jones amendment reads as follows:

" 'It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that shippers of wheat, cotton, and all other farm commodities for export should have substantially the same advantage of reduced rates, as compared to shippers of such commodities not for export, that are in effect in the case of shipment of industrial products for export, as compared with shipment of industrial products not for export, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to institute such investigations, to conduct such hearings, and to issue orders making such revisions of rates as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out such policy.' "

Objections were made to the Jones amendment on the basis that it set up an arbitrary rule to determine whether or not agricultural products were entitled to export rates granted industrial products. What the conferees have done is to substitute an amendment for the Jones amendment declaring the policy of Congress to be that agricultural products shall be granted export rates on the same principles as industrial products. It also provided that the Commission on its own initiative or upon complaint shall make investigation after hearings, make orders to carry out the policy that Congress has here declared. I am happy to say, as Chairman Lee stated on the floor of the House, that the conference has the agreement of the author of the amendment, Mr. JONES. I am satisfied that it accomplishes in a sound way what he desires and what we all desire, that is, to secure equal justice to agricultural and industrial products so far as export rates are concerned.

THE LONG-AND-SHORT-HAUL PROVISION OF SECTION 4 OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

As reported to the Senate, this bill provided for repeal of paragraph 2 of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act. After discussion on the floor of the Senate this paragraph was restored to the bill. The House amendment also provided for repeal of this paragraph, but the conference substitute, like the bill as it passed the Senate, retains this paragraph of the present law.

The Senate bill provided for repeal of the so-called equidistant clause of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act. The Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as many of those who are insistent upon retaining the protection of the long-and-short-haul provision, have long advocated the repeal of this equidistant clause on the ground that it is unworkable in many instances. The conference substitute provides for repeal of the equidistant clause.

The Senate bill in the last proviso of section 5 of paragraph (1) contained a provision intended to permit prompt filing by railroads of rate tariffs containing departures from the long-and-short-haul provision after such departures had been approved by the Commission. It was feared in some quarters that this provision would be construed as relaxing the requirements of the long-and-short-haul provision, and the conferees accordingly rewrote the provision to the satisfaction of the proponents of the protection afforded by this section of the law. The amended provision will be found in section 6 of the conference substitute as the last proviso in amended section 4 (1) of the Interstate Commerce Act.

POWER OF THE COMMISSION TO ESTABLISH THROUGH ROUTES "SHORT HAULING" A RAIL CARRIER

Section 15 (4) of the Interstate Commerce Act now provides that, except in certain instances which need not be mentioned here, the Commission cannot establish through routes which short haul any rail carrier participating therein. Bills removing this restriction on the Commission's power had twice passed the Senate by overwhelming votes. The Senate bill in S. 2009, as passed, also removed this restriction entirely, leaving the power with the Commission to act in the public interest in such cases. The House amendment did not relax the present restriction on the Commission's power to establish through routes.

The conference substitute, section 10 (b), contains a compromise provision on this point, permitting the Commission to establish a through route where it "finds that the through route proposed to be established is needed in order to provide adequate and more efficient or more economic transportation," subject to the proviso that the Commission shall give reasonable preference to the carrier by railroad which originates the traffic and to the condition that the Commission shall not establish a through route and joint rates applicable thereto for the purpose of assisting any carrier that would participate therein to meet its financial needs.

Section 27 (1) of the Senate bill contained an important related provision, which protects the through routes to which a carrier is now a party. That provision is carried forward in section 10 (b) of the conference substitute, amending section 15 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act.

It reads as follows:

"If any tariff or schedule canceling any through route or joint rate, fare, charge, or classification, without the consent of all carriers parties thereto or authorization by the Commission, is suspended by the Commission for investigation, the burden of proof shall be upon the carrier or carriers proposing such cancelation to show that it is consistent with the public interest, without regard to the provisions of paragraph (4) of this section."

REGULATION OF CONTRACTS WITH RAILROADS FOR THE FURNISHING OF PROTECTIVE SERVICE AGAINST HEAT OR COLD

Section 4 (12) of the Senate bill contained new legislation requiring approval by the Commission of contracts made with railroads for the furnishing of refrigeration or other protective services. This was designed to meet abuses in connection with the furnishing of such services which had been called to the attention of the committee. This legislation is carried forward in the conference substitute in section 4 (a), as a new paragraph (b) to be added to section 1 (14) of the Interstate Commerce Act.

BOARD TO INVESTIGATE VARIOUS MODES OF TRANSPORTATION

The Senate bill, section 53, provided for a temporary board of three members to be named by the President to investigate, among other things, the relative economy and fitness of the various modes of transportation for particular purposes, the extent to which the several types of carriers have been or are subsidized, and related matters. The conference substitute contains a similar provision under title III.

POOLING AND CONSOLIDATIONS

The provisions of the conference substitute governing pooling and consolidations, mergers, etc., of all carriers are in section 7, amending section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act. These provisions follow generally the provisions of section 10 of the Senate bill as to pooling, and of section 49 of the Senate bill as to unifications of carriers. The pooling provisions in amended section 5, paragraph 1 cover all carriers subject to the act. The conference substitute here differs from the Senate bill, in which the pooling provisions related only to carriers by railroad or water.

The principal change in existing law on consolidations is the repeal of provisions requiring the Commission to prepare and adopt a general consolidation plan. Section 213 of the Motor Carrier Act, which related to unifications of motor carriers, is repealed, and the law governing all consolidations of carriers subject to the act is covered by the amended section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Present law is also amended by inclusion of the Harrington amendment, protecting employees in the event of consolidations and by directing the Commission to give weight to the following questions when passing upon any proposed transaction: First, the effect upon adequate transportation service to the public; second, effect upon the public interest of the inclusion, or failure to include, other railroads in the territory involved; third, the total fixed charges; and, fourth, the interest of the carrier employees affected. The Commission is also instructed not to approve any consolidation, merger, etc., which contemplates a guaranty of dividends, except upon a specific finding that such guaranty is not inconsistent with the public interest.

REGULATION OF WATER CARRIERS

The Senate bill contained certain exemptions from the regulation proposed for water carriers. A proviso to section 2 (1) (b) of the Senate bill exempted certain contract carriers of bulk commodities on the Great Lakes; section 2 (7) (a) provided for exemption of certain contract carriers by water by the Commission; and section 2 (5) (b) contained conditional exemptions of certain water transportation, such as that within a single harbor. Section 303 of the conference substitute contains these and certain more liberal exemptions. The conferees felt that these more liberal amendments should be adopted at this time, on the theory that if experience should show that more extensive regulation is necessary that can be accomplished at a future time.

These amendments are as follows: Section 303 (b) exempts transportation by a water carrier of commodities in bulk when the cargo space of the vessel is being used for the carrying of not more than three such commodities. Section 303 (c) exempts contract carriers by water of commodities in bulk in a nonoceangoing vessel on a normal voyage during which not more than three such commodities are transported and the vessel passes through waters made international for navigation purposes by any treaty. This is the exemption which covers the Great Lakes contract carriers. These contract carriers are in competition with Canadian or other foreign ships. It was not intended to exclude a vessel operating from the Atlantic ports to and from Great Lakes ports where such vessels customarily use the route via the Welland Canal, a Canadian route. Obviously you could not have one type of carrier using the all-American route subject to regulation and not regulate the other type of carrier using the Canadian route via the Welland Canal. Section 303 (d) exempts water transportation of liquid cargoes, in bulk, in tank vessels. Section 303 (e) corresponds to section 2 (7) (a) of the Senate bill. Under this paragraph the Commission is directed to exempt transportation by contract carriers by water under the circumstances there described. Section 303 (f) exempts certain terminal operation by water and the performance of floatage, car ferry, lighterage, or towage. Section 303 (g) provides a conditional exemption, which is operative unless the Commission acts to remove such exemption, and covers such transportation by water as that within the limits of a single harbor and transportation by certain small craft.

It has been argued by certain opponents of this legislation that the regulation of water carriers will be seized upon by the railroads as an opportunity to force up the rates of water carriers and thus drive traffic to the rails. The Senate bill contained a number of provisions negativing any such idea, which have been included in the conference substitute.

For example, in each of the rate-making rules, in parts I, II, and III, the Commission is required, in exercising its power to prescribe reasonable rates, to consider, among other things, "the effect of rates on the movement of traffic." Following the theory of section 30 of the Senate bill, each of these rules has been amended in the conference substitute so that the Commission will consider "the effect of rates on the movement of traffic by the carrier or carriers for which the rates are prescribed." Thus in a water-carrier-rate case, the Commission is not to consider the effect of the water carrier rates prescribed on the movement of traffic by railroad. These rate-making rules will be found in sections 10 (e), 22 (d), and 307 (f) of the bill before the Senate.

Again in section 307 (e) of the conference substitute it is provided that in the case of a through route where one of the carriers is a common carrier by water the Commission shall prescribe such reasonable differentials as it may find to be justified between all rail rates and the joint rates in connection with such common carrier by water.

The following provision which is self-explanatory is contained in section 305 (c) of the conference substitute:

"Differences in the classifications, rates, fares, charges, rules, regulations, and practices of a water carrier in respect of water transportation from those in effect by a rail carrier with respect to rail transportation shall not be deemed to constitute unjust discrimination, prejudice, or disadvantage, or an unfair or destructive competitive practice, within the meaning of any provision of this act."

This provision for the protection of water carriers is taken from section 6 of the Senate bill.

The conference substitute also contains a provision, which was not in the Senate bill, providing for repeal, under certain conditions, of the land-grant railroad rates on Government property, except on military and naval property, or for transportation of military or naval personnel when on official business, and another provision, amending section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, which was not in the Senate bill. These provisions are fully explained in the statement of the managers on the part of the House, which accompanied the conference report.

MOTOR CARRIERS PERFORMING COLLECTION AND DELIVERY SERVICE

Section 17 (c) of the conference report contains an exemption from direct regulation under the bill of motor carriers performing only transfer, collection, or delivery service within terminal areas for other carriers subject to the act. Although these motor carriers are not directly regulated under this provision, they will be regulated through the carriers for which the transfer, collection, or delivery services are performed. In other words, the responsibility for compliance with the law on the part of these little motor carriers performing services for other regulated carriers will be transferred to the employing carrier. All questions of regulation, such as the hours of service of employees, will depend entirely on the extent to which such employing carrier is subject to the provisions of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2627) to empower and authorize special agents and such other employees of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior, for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, and Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2114, Senate bill 4204.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That section 9 of the act of January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby amended (a) by striking out "June 30, 1941", and inserting in lieu thereof "January 22, 1947", (b) by striking out "$200,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$700,000,000", (c) by striking out the second proviso thereof, and (d) by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"In order to assist in the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economies, and the orderly marketing of products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere, the Export-Import Bank of Washington is authorized, upon the written request of the Federal Loan Administrator, with the approval of the President, subject to such conditions and limitations as may be set forth in such request or approval, to make loans to any governments or to their central banks or to other acceptable banking institutions and, when guaranteed by any such government or a central bank or other acceptable banking institution, to a political subdivision, agency, or national of any such government, notwithstanding any other provisions of this section insofar as they may restrict or prohibit loans or other extensions of credit to, or other transactions with, the governments of the countries of the Western Hemisphere or their agencies or nationals: Provided, That no such loans shall be made in violation of international law as interpreted by the Department of State, or of the act of April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 574), or of the Neutrality Act of 1939. Such loans may be made and administered in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the Export-Import Bank of Washington may determine. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to supply such bank with funds for such purposes, in an aggregate amount not to exceed $500,000,000 outstanding at any one time, through loans to or by subscriptions to the preferred stock of such bank."

SEC. 2. The aggregate amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date of enactment of this act is hereby increased by $500,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the pending bill is an essential element in our program of total defense. Its merits can be fully understood only in relation to the series of measures undertaken by Congress and the President to guard this hemisphere against the military and economic repercussions of wars now raging in the Old World.

HEMISPHERE DEFENSE AND THE MONROE DOCTRINE

The American people have been going through a period of rude awakening. They have seen how nations which pursued the ways of peace and social advance were not ready to meet the military challenge of nations which pursued the ways of war and social retrogression. The Old World is confronted with no ordinary wars of territorial adjustment, but with revolutionary forces of darkness and hate, menacing enough to disrupt the established religious, social, and economic order, and powerful enough to set back for centuries the cultural development of civilized man.

We have never been a militaristic people, but neither have we been slow to look facts in the face. The national security demands that we take to heart the urgent lesson inscribed on the headstone of one fallen European democracy after another: "Weakness invites aggression. Partial defense is no defense." Regardless of any immediate military threat to our territory or possessions, the inevitable result of a totalitarian victory in Europe will be a world in flux, a world in which we could not afford for one instant to lower our guard.

In the few fateful months since the invasion of the Low Countries demonstrated the full power and sweep of totalitarian ambitions, Congress has appropriated unprecedented sums of money for the weapons we need to defend ourselves, and provided for the training of the men we need to use those weapons well. By a master stroke of statesmanship, President Roosevelt has acquired for our unrestricted use, and without commitments of any kind, a chain of defensive outposts protecting the Atlantic seaboard from Canada to Brazil.

The total defense for which we strive can be viewed only in terms of our geographical position and our historical commitments. More than a century ago, when we were a weak and struggling Republic in a world of great powers, at a time when it took weeks to cross the Atlantic Ocean by sailing ships, we began to formulate a policy of hemisphere defense. the Holy Alliance, which then held dominion over Europe, was systematically uprooting the democratic gains of the French Revolutionary period, and spreading far and wide its ideology of reaction and dictatorship. In the face of that threat, emphasized by several disturbing incidents in this hemisphere, along both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, President Monroe laid down America's policy in his message of December 2, 1823:

In wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparation for our defense. With the movements in this hemisphere we are of necessity more immediately connected, and by causes which must be obvious to all enlightened and impartial observers. The political system of the allied (Holy Alliance) powers is essentially different in this respect from that of America. This difference proceeds from that which exists in their respective governments; and to the defense of our own, which has been achieved by the loss of so much blood and treasure, and matured by the wisdom of their most enlightened citizens, and under which we have enjoyed unexampled felicity, this whole Nation is devoted.

I stop to emphasize those words, "to the defense of our own."

President Monroe went on to say:

We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintain it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

Mr. President, the Monroe Doctrine has been invoked again and again—against Austria and France in the Maximilian affair in Mexico, against Spain in her attempt to reoccupy Peru, and against Great Britain in the Venezuelan boundary dispute. Under the Lodge resolution adopted in 1912, the Senate itself broadened the Monroe Doctrine to include the occupation or acquisition of any harbor or other place in the American continents, not simply by a foreign power, but "by any corporation or association which has such a relation to another government, not American as to give that government practical power of control for national purposes," in situations where military or naval use "might threaten the communications or the safety of the United States." This resolution was adopted by the Senate because of reports that a Japanese company was seeking control over Magdalena Bay in southern California.

This interpretation is all-important in view of our strategic problem of defense in this hemisphere. We have no direct land communications with South America. For all practical and defensive purposes it is an island, lying far to the east of us, nearer in fact to Europe and Africa than to New York. The protection of the Panama Canal and our continental territory and possessions therefore demand that at any cost we prevent any potentially hostile foreign power from obtaining spheres of influence for air or naval bases anywhere in the Western Hemisphere.

Only a few months ago, in the light of the latest developments abroad, the Senate by unanimous vote resolved that we would not recognize or acquiesce in the transfer of any territory in this hemisphere to any non-American power; and that if such transfer appeared likely, we would, in addition to other measures, consult with the other American Republics on steps to safeguard their common interests. In the National Guard bill and the conscription bill, the Senate backed up that declaration by confirming our military policy of hemisphere defense.

The good-neighbor policy so carefully fostered by our far-sighted President and our distinguished Secretary of State has freed our relations with the other American republics of all taint of imperialism or dollar diplomacy. Step by step, in the Pan American meetings at Montevideo, Buenos Aires, Lima, Panama, and Habana, the 21 American republics have developed a spirit of continental solidarity for the greater security and welfare of us all.

This summer, at Habana, the good-neighbor policy bore fruit in a series of far-reaching measures. The conference resolved that "any attempt on the part of a non-American state against the integrity or inviolability of the territory, the sovereignty, or the political independence of an American state shall be considered an act of aggression" against all the signatories. This establishes a policy of common defense and mutual assistance, now reinforced by the bases we have leased from Great Britain and made available to all the American republics. The conference also set up machinery for the provisional administration of foreign possessions threatened with transfer of sovereignty. It took effective steps to protect against "fifth column" activity. And lastly, the conference approved a declaration on economic and financial cooperation to meet the urgent economic problems created by the war abroad.

OBJECTIVES AND PROVISIONS OF THE BILL

The economic conditions which lie at the basis of this declaration are readily stated.

First, by severing normal trade ties between Latin America and Europe, the war has increased the dependence of these countries on American producers for products hitherto purchased abroad.

Second, by disrupting or threatening normal world trade, the war requires the development in this hemisphere of all the strategic and critical materials necessary for the mutual security and welfare of the United States and the other American republics.

Third, by preventing the flow of Latin American surpluses to their normal export markets, the war has brought serious economic stress in these countries.

These economic conditions, which I will discuss in detail later, present an opportunity and a challenge to our good-neighbor policy. They serve as a frame of reference upon which to consider the provisions and obectives of the pending bill.

Section 1 extends the life of the Export-Import Bank from June 30, 1941, to January 22, 1947, and increases its lending authority from $200,000,000 to $700,000,000—that is, an increase of $500,000,000. Section 1 authorizes the bank to make loans to any governments or to their central banks or other acceptable banks. When guaranteed by a government or a central bank, the Export-Import Bank may lend to any division, agency, or national of such government.

Such loans may only be made with the approval of the President, upon the written request of the Federal Loan Administrator, and subject to regulations which they may prescribe. A revolving fund of $500,000,000 will be available for use in making these loans. This will be supplied to the Export-Import Bank by the R. F. C., either as a loan or through purchase of the preferred stock of the bank by the R. F. C.

Section 1 repeals the $20,000,000 maximum limit on the amount of loans to any one country which may be outstanding. For the countries of the Western Hemisphere, it lifts all other restrictions on loans, as prescribed in section 9 of the present law. The bill reaffirms, however, that no loans may be made in violation of international law as interpreted by our State Department; and to settle any possible doubts on the matter, it specifically forbids the making of any loans in violation of either the Johnson Act or the Neutrality Act of 1939.

Section 2 of the bill simply provides for a $500,000,000 increase in the note-issuing power of the R. F. C.

The grant of authority is necessarily broad and flexible, in order to be useful in any cooperative arrangement which may be agreed upon in the light of any emergency which may arise.

EXPANSION OF UNITED STATES TRADE WITH LATIN AMERICA

The first objective I have mentioned is the expansion of our opportunities in Latin American trade.

A program of economic cooperation stands to the advantage of all the American nations. The economy of Latin America is in many respects the natural complement of our own. Latin America lies for the most part within the Tropics. The staple export crops of this area—coffee, cocoa, bananas, sugar, and long-staple cotton—do not compete in any way with our agriculture and cannot be obtained from any other assured source. The temperate regions of Latin America also produce many agricultural items such as flaxseed, carpet wool, and hides, which our farmers do not find it profitable to raise in sufficient quantities for our needs. Latin America is a major world producer of certain raw materials and minerals which now constitute a large part of our imports.

On the other hand, Latin America is a major importer of machinery and manufactured goods. It also serves as an important outlet for our surpluses of lard, wheat flour, canned fruits, and cotton cloth—a fact of special interest to American farmers.

Our trade with Latin America since 1933 has shown a strong upward trend, our exports increasing from $200,000,000 in 1932 to $633,000,000 in 1939. This tremendous increase is due to the greatly increased income and purchasing power of the American people under the present administration and to the success of our trade-treaty program in clearing the road for our exports. Exports to Latin America are currently almost 50 percent higher than those of last year. Latin America takes one-fifth of our world exports today, and there are abundant opportunities for further expansion. For example, Pennsylvania alone has almost as much mileage of good roads as the whole of South America, and it has 3 times as many registered automobiles. There are less than 3,000,000 radios for 120,000,000 people in all of Latin America; the United States has 40,000,000 radios for substantially the same population.

We should be making a serious error to consider money devoted to the development of trade as a hand-out or an attempt to "buy" friendship. That is no more true in this instance than in any other credit transaction engaged in for mutual gain. Every effort to expand our markets in Latin America, in the long run, will result in mutual gain.

By financing the development of certain local industries we can greatly contribute to the stability of economic life throughout Latin America. At the same time the improved living standards in Latin America which would result from a strengthened local industry would increase purchasing power and open immense new markets for our products. It would be short-sighted, indeed, to allow the markets for capital equipment in Latin America to pass into the hands of our competitors.

The development of local manufacturing industry in Latin America will not destroy our markets for manufactured goods. The fact is that the highly industrialized countries of Europe are normally among our best customers for manufactured goods as well as agricultural products and raw materials. Our exports to Canada expanded with Canadian industrial expansion. It is an economic axiom that the poorest markets in the world for manufactured goods are agricultural populations living at the subsistence level.

Latin America is better endowed by nature than any other similarly undeveloped region in the world. Once Latin America has developed the framework of a manufacturing industry, it will be freed from the violent economic ups and downs occasioned by Europe's political turmoil. Our markets there will be greatly expanded and stabilized. Conflicts in Europe or Asia will then be less of a threat to our own economy. Every dollar that we can add to the productive capacity in Latin America is potentially a dollar that our exporters can reach for American business.

In aiding the expansion of Latin American trade, the Export-Import Bank will be expanding its already familiar function of opening new opportunities for American commerce. The bank has made loans of more than $160,000,000 to finance America's foreign trade—in cotton, wheat, corn, fruit, tobacco, and other agricultural products, in railway equipment, printing presses, chemicals, fountain pens, pipe, construction machinery, and other manufactured goods. These orders opened up new opportunities to American manufacturers and new jobs for American labor which might well have gone to our competitors at a time when orders and jobs were sorely needed. The bank has performed this valuable service to American agriculture and industry while earning a regular profit of 3 percent upon its preferred stock.

There need be no fear that the enactment of this bill will bring a repetition of the sad experience we had with loans made to Latin America in the 20's, loans which were mostly defaulted when the depression struck. The present circumstances are completely different from those of the boom times of the 20's. The reasons for the defaults were fully developed in hearings before the Senate Finance Committee in 1934:

First. The loans were originally floated without regard to the interests and needs of either the peoples of Latin America or the American investors. Underwriting houses in this country had no interest in the loans, except to unload as much as possible on the American people at fat commissions. Promoters were looking for quick speculative profits.

Second. Many loans were made in total disregard of the foreign exchange situation of the borrowing countries.

Third. Bribery and corruption of officials were resorted to in some cases to push unsound projects.

Fourth. Rates of interest were excessive, often as much as 10 percent. These high rates not only weakened the position of the borrowers, but provoked the cry in Latin America that the loans were a form of imperialistic exploitation.

Fifth. Excessive trade restrictions by countries which were the principal markets for Latin American countries made it extremely difficult for many of them to obtain foreign exchange to meet interest charges. The United States itself imposed severe restrictions on imports from Latin America.

Any loans made by the Export-Import Bank will be made on entirely different considerations and with entirely different results. Such loans will be made only after careful consideration of all the economic problems involved. Every loan would also be scrutinized by the Departments of State, Treasury, Agriculture, and Commerce. In this way the operations of the Export-Import Bank can be brought fully into line with our hemisphere program. Such a program has nothing in common with the speculative ventures of the 1920's.

The Export-Import Bank has been making loans to Latin American countries since 1934. Over $200,000,000 in loans have been authorized, and $62,000,000 actually disbursed. Two-thirds of this amount has already been repaid. Mr. Jesse Jones reported to our committee that there has not been a dollar of default on any of the Export-Import Bank's loans. They are all sound loans, being made under the able and experienced direction of Mr. Jesse Jones, who, as everyone concedes, has established an enviable record for enterprising yet conservative financing.

Of course, we do not propose to remake the economic life of this hemisphere in a day; but a beginning has been made, and with courage and intelligence much more can be accomplished.

LATIN AMERICAN SOURCES OF STRATEGIC MATERIALS

The second objective of the bill is to develop in this hemisphere all the materials necessary for our mutual security and welfare. The latest report of the Munitions Board lists the following strategic materials which must be imported into the United States: Rubber, tin, silk, tungsten, manganese, antimony, chromium, coconut shell char, manila fiber, mercury, mica, quartz crystal, and quinine. Our Government must have power to assure an unfailing supply of all these materials. This cannot be done as long as we are dependent, as we now are, upon imports from remote areas in the Soviet Union, Asia, and Africa, supply lines which may be severed at any moment by a new shift in the world conflict.

Sources of all these strategic materials or their substitutes are available within this hemisphere. Latin America has large resources of tin, tungsten, manganese, and chromium. Rubber, silk, coconut shell char, and quinine can be produced without difficulty. All that is lacking is capital and a long-range, purposeful economic program. Rubber plantations may be developed in Brazil, Colombia, and elsewhere; tin, tungsten, platinum, and chrome mines in Bolivia, Mexico, Chile, and Peru; manganese and iron in Brazil, Mexico, and Cuba; drying oils and carnauba wax in Brazil; cocoa in Ecuador, Santo Domingo, Haiti, and Brazil; tanning extract in Paraguay; insecticides in Brazil, Peru, and Ecuador; quinine and manila fiber in Central American countries.

If there are promising undeveloped domestic sources of any one of these products—as possibly in the case of manganese—first consideration should, of course, be given to potential domestic producers. But the broad objective cannot be disputed that sources of strategic materials should be developed wherever possible in this hemisphere.

On our part, loans to Latin America for the purchase of necessary war materials here instead of abroad would likewise promote the mutual security of the countries in this hemisphere. This bill, in my opinion, will go a long way toward achieving that objective.

ORDERLY MARKETING OF LATIN AMERICAN SURPLUSES

The third objective of the bill is to aid in the orderly marketing of Latin American surpluses.

We have a double interest in preventing the dumping of these products on the world market at distress prices. If distress selling occurs in commodities such as meats and cereals which compete with our own agricultural exports, the prices our farmers receive will be driven down. Second, we do not want to see our Latin American neighbors plunged into economic chaos which may have dangerous political consequences.

The war in Europe has completely disrupted the normal foreign markets for these Latin American surpluses. I have here an item from the Washington Post of August 2. It is headed "Coffee and sugar skid to new lows as war piles up United States surplus." It goes on to give figures which spell tragedy for the people of the American republics—85 cents a hundred pounds for sugar, 5½ cents a pound for coffee. So it goes for most of the main products of our neighbors to the south.

During the past year it was possible to move a large part of the surplus crops, although at ruinous prices in many cases. That was before the spread of the war and the fall of France, when many European countries had stocked up on certain commodities for fear of trouble later. But the prospects for next year are entirely different. Now the entire continent is cut off by the British blockade. The British Government itself will not be able to spare much foreign exchange for purchases in Latin America. The British will have to buy as much as possible within their own Empire, and tighten their belts for the remainder.

The surplus problem for this coming crop year, which for most of South America begins in December, is therefore a very serious one. There will be an estimated surplus of from ten to twelve million bags of coffee. Five million boxes of Brazilian oranges will have no normal market. There may be from half a million to three-quarters of a million bales of surplus cotton from Brazil, Argentina, and Peru. There are probably about 1,500,000 tons of sugar in Cuban warehouses at the present time. If the last European market for this sugar is closed, the results will be disastrous for Cuba, Haiti, Santo Domingo and other producers.

In the light of these facts, the economic and political chaos which would certainly result from a do-nothing policy on our part would destroy Latin American economy and seriously impair our own.

There is nothing in this proposed legislation looking to a continental cartel, or to a policy of keeping Latin American surpluses away from European markets. As the President said in his message recommending this proposed legislation:

> No sensible person would advocate an attempt to prevent the normal exchange of commodities between other continents and the Americas, but what can and should be done is to prevent excessive fluctuations caused by distressed selling resulting from temporary interruption in the flow of trade, or the fact that there has not yet been reestablished a system of free exchange. Unless exporting countries are able to assist their nationals, they will be forced to bargain as best they can.

The soundness of this view is very apparent. The Federal Loan Administrator has specifically pledged that no loan would be considered that appeared to the officers and directors of the bank to be inimical to our own agricultural interests. It is patently in the interest of our farmers, as I have said, for us to make judicious loans to avoid cutthroat prices in competitive markets.

If we refuse this reasonable measure of limited aid, we are undermining not only our own economy and markets, but also our national security. The threat of totalitarian infiltration is very real. If we foresake the Latin American countries in this time of desperate need, we will drive them directly into the arms of the Axis Powers.

TOTALITARIAN INFILTRATION IN LATIN AMERICA

The evidence is conclusive that to the Nazi Germany of today, foreign trade is an instrument of political control. Wherever the Nazi's power has been unchallenged, as in the Balkans, their economic policy has been to undermine the local industry of their neighbors and reduce them to the status of economic colonies—producers of crude materials for Nazi Germany's industries.

Such was the fate of Rumania, which in April 1939 was forced to sign a 5-year economic agreement with Nazi Germany, giving the latter practically complete control over its resources to do with as she pleased. The great German Dye Trust was brought in to direct the production of soya beans for Germany's benefit. Nazi companies were given exclusive rights to exploit the great resources of oil, bauxite, chrome, manganese, and other materials which were to be developed. The Nazis were granted "free zones" to establish plants free from Rumanian control. All production from these enterprises was committed in advance to Nazi Germany at fixed prices. Thus Rumania became a reservoir of supplies for the Nazi army.

In Yugoslavia, too, taking another instance, the Nazis have made trade serve the purposes of political domination. Yugoslavia, like the countries of Latin-America, is a producer of raw materials. In 1934, Yugoslavia's agriculture was in a desperate situation, with piled-up surpluses which could not be moved at any price. The Nazis at that moment appeared with attractive offers to buy these products under a clearing agreement at 25 to 30 percent above world prices. Yugoslavia could not resist such an offer; it appeared to them that her agriculture was saved. But as time went on, the price exacted by the Nazis became more and more heavy. Yugoslavia had lost all her former trade connections, and could not obtain any free exchange. Therefore, she had to take most of her imports from Germany, and at prices dependent on the agreed rate of exchange. The Nazis gradually pushed up the rate of the mark in Yugoslav dinari, so that the price advantages all shifted to Nazi Germany. As a result, Yugoslavia suffered from a steeply rising price level, which created discontent among peasants and workers. But there was no way for Yugoslavia to turn back. In October 1938, Yugoslavia had to agree to Dr. Funk's demand for a higher price for German marks.

The Nazis have used their economic power in Yugoslavia to destroy competing local industries. Thus, Yugoslavia has fallen more and more under the ecomonic and political dominion of the Nazis. The fate of Yugoslavia, Rumania, Hungary, and the other Balkan lands has a double lesson for us, because of the great similarity between the economic and political structure of the Balkans and that of Latin America. Both areas are primarily producers of raw materials; both of them have considerable Nazi minorities.

These methods have been pronounced in Nazi trade with Latin America. It was not long after Hitler came to power in 1933 that the Nazi Government began to push its exports into Latin American markets by a variety of devices now familiar to all of us—barter deals, "aski-mark" sales, and special subsidies.

It is fair to say that every German exporter is and was at that time subsidized by his Government. Raw materials for the export trade are supplied at special reduced prices; cartels are formed to enable Nazi exporters to dump their products on the world market. In many cases special subsidies are paid to exporters, the funds for which are squeezed out of the German consumer.

The Nazis have offered very attractive prices for Latin American surpluses during the past several years. The joker has been that payment was made in "aski-marks"—that is, in marks which could be spent only in Germany and only for certain specified products, at prices controlled by the Nazi Government. Thus a situation arose in which Latin American exporters were very anxious to sell to Nazi Germany, and very anxious to maintain cordial relations with Nazi firms, because of the high nominal prices offered in Germany for their products. But the apparent advantages to Latin America were illusory, because of the maze of restrictions placed on German exports by the Nazi government. As a result of these restrictions many Latin American countries found themselves with piled-up "aski-mark" accounts in Germany which they could not liquidate except on the Nazis' terms.

In their desire both to ingratiate themselves with the Chilean Nation and to extend their position in the Chilean market, the Nazis have bought Chilean products which they did not urgently need, or did not need at all. For example, the Nazis have taken from Chile, on a compensation or barter basis, nitrate of soda in large quantities, although they produce at home more than enough fixed nitrogen and other substitutes for nitrate to cover their domestic requirements. At the same time Nazi Germany took pains to sell Chile, in return, special types of railway and electrical equipment with the object of insuring a continuing market for such supplies both for replacements and for extensions.

As a result of these methods, Nazi Germany almost doubled its share of imports by Chile and Peru between 1933 and 1937; it almost doubled its share of Mexico's imports between 1934 and 1938; and virtually trebled its share of Brazil's imports between 1932 and 1938. Nazi Germany's proportion of imports by all Latin American countries increased from 9 percent in 1932 to 16 percent in 1938, a greater proportionate gain than that of any other major country trading in Latin America during this period.

Nazi trade gains during this period were made more at the expense of weaker competitors rather than of the United States. But these methods will undoubtedly be intensified against us if and when the Nazis are able to devote their full energies to Latin America. Indeed, Nazi concerns began last spring to solicit machinery orders for delivery in October 1940 in expectation of quick victory against Great Britain, and offered large quantities of armaments virtually free of charge.

I hope and pray that the brave British people may hurl back the Nazi onslaught on the British Isles. But if victory should come to Nazi arms, the Nazis will not only establish political control over Europe, but will also be in an immensely stronger bargaining position in other parts of the world. They will absolutely control the manufacturing facilities and the markets of all western Europe, and they will undoubtedly use these facilities and markets as political and economic weapons. They will be monopoly buyers and sellers for this vast market. If the American nations fall into the trap of cutthroat competition for Nazi-controlled markets the situation will be sad indeed for the Americas. The Nazis will know exactly how to exploit such a situation for their own purposes, using as a trump card against us the cheap manufactured goods produced by an enslaved population.

In his speech at Koenigsberg on August 11, 1940, Dr. Funk, Nazi minister of economics, warned the world that the poor would become rich, and the rich poor. "Barter is the hope of the world," said Funk, and he went on to warn the American nations that unless they could deal with Nazi Germany on these terms, their piled-up surpluses would have to be burned or thrown into the sea.

Already Nazi spokesmen have begun to threaten the Americas with economic and military reprisals if their economic policies do not suit the Reich. Thus, the June issue of the official magazine Berlin-Rome-Tokio says that "this Europe"—that is, Nazi-controlled Europe—"is fighting in order that it shall never again be cut off from the economic centers of the world by British arbitrariness. It can, therefore, feel itself forced to secure and organize its vital requirements wherever they might be exposed to molestation from outside. To what extent such safeguarding action occurs depends upon whether one has to reckon with a friendly or malevolent America."

These thinly veiled threats were made at the very time when Hitler was disclaiming all aggressive intentions toward the Western Hemisphere. The passage of this bill will help protect American nations against the economic pressure and blackmail foreshadowed in the threats of Nazi spokesmen and in existing Nazi overseas policies. I propose to develop these policies in some detail because of the view still entertained in some quarters that we should not concern ourselves with what is happening in Europe, since the dictators have "no interest" in the Americas.

Around the world, Nazi banks and shipping lines have become instruments of Nazi foreign policy. They are in fact directly under the orders of the Nazi foreign office. Nazi branch firms abroad—chemical, electrical, mining—have likewise been made agents of the Nazi putsch. They have thrown out all non-Aryan and non-Nazi Germans. They have been known to transport arms and propaganda and furnish headquarters for Nazi organizations.

Nazi news services and radio stations carry propaganda all over the world. Through two important news agencies—Trans-Ocean and Central Europa—the Nazis send a flood of doctored news to Latin America. These are all facts. There is no speculation about this. This material is supplied free in Spanish or Portuguese to any newspaper desiring to make use of it, and a further inducement to do so is the pressure of big Nazi firms through their advertising. The news supplied by Trans-Ocean and Central Europa is well written and provides a wide coverage. It is cleverly distorted to discredit Great Britain, the United States, Jews, and democratic institutions in general. Reliable reports have come to us that as much as one-third of the entire edition of some Latin American papers consists of this poisoned news. I myself saw some of the papers.

In addition, the notorious Weltdienst, the agency which specializes in anti-Jewish slanders and forgeries, has pushed its operations into all corners of Latin America, and has succeeded in influencing some well-known Latin American authors.

The Trans-Ocean Agency furthermore operates many powerful short-wave broadcasting stations. Buenos Aires, Mexico City, Lima, Santiago, and many other cities have such stations. These stations carry Nazi propaganda to the remotest corners of Latin America. And we have done little to offset any of that type of propaganda.

From all these sources the people of Latin America are told about the "bloody relief riots" in the American Midwest at the same time as they are reminded of the "disappearance" of unemployment in Nazi Germany. Democratic countries are represented as being old, rich, decadent, dependent upon gold rather than upon honest labor, and using their gold to keep backward countries enslaved. The picture of Nazi Germany is drawn in glowing colors. In the new Reich, work and discipline are given their "true" value. The spirit of Nazi Germany is the spirit of youth, say the Nazis, and they wax lyrical over the rapid progress of Nazi Germany in science, education, art, and health.

Indicative of the methods contemplated by the Nazis is the following excerpt from the general instructions issued by the Nazi Propaganda Ministry to its agents, as revealed to the Argentine Congress in a recent exposé:

> As a general rule, whenever it might be intended to exert by material means any influence upon particular personalities, it will be necessary to erase every track which might be left behind. It will thus be necessary that payments be made strictly in cash, in private, from person to person. Such payments should never be made in draft * * *.

These instructions continue with comments on the importance of enlisting foreign students in the Nazi cause, and particularly emphasize the desirability of obtaining the favor of university professors who are said to be "generally favorable to favors of a material sort."

Persistent efforts have been made by the Nazis to spread anti-Semitic feeling throughout Latin America. Millions of anti-Semitic pamphlets have been distributed. Newspapers have been pressed into publishing Jew-baiting articles.

Nazi army missions have long been used to gain a foothold in the armed forces of the smaller powers, and many South American army officers and students have studied in Nazi military schools.

In Latin America the Nazis—and by that term I mean all those of various racial stocks, including native-born, who subscribe to the Nazi philosophy—have won a dominant economic and social position over large areas. By virtue of their generally superior training and resources, they have become a privileged group, powerfully entrenched in industry, finance, trade, agriculture, and the professions. They have established cohesive local Nazi organizations of all kinds. For example, in 1938 the single Brazilian Province of Rio Grande do Sul had 60 Nazi organizations affiliated with parent organizations in Nazi Germany. Some of the Nazi groups in Latin America are controlled directly or indirectly by the foreign political office in Berlin, directed by the well-known Alfred Rosenberg, leader of the Nazi expansionist movement for many years. Others are directed by the Gestapo and by the Reich ministry of education. Most of these local Nazi organizations have been utilized as instruments of Nazi foreign policy.

Among these local organizations is the Nazi Party itself, which has been active throughout Latin America. The V. D. A. —National League for Germanism in Foreign Countries—which is the supreme central organization in Berlin for the spread of Nazi doctrine abroad, has branches throughout Latin America. In Argentina, one such branch is the German National Socialist Marine Union, another is the German Argentine Union, strong in the interior of Argentina; still another is the Imperial Federation for Physical Culture, which promotes Nazi ideas of race, blood, and sports. The Volks Bund für Argentinien supports Nazi social and recreation clubs, supplies Nazi films, books, and newspapers. Much of the propaganda material distributed by these organizations is supplied by the notorious Fichte Bund of Hamburg, devoted to the cause of Nazi expansion abroad. This organization is in fact a branch of the Nazi Foreign Office.

Experience with strong Nazi minorities in other countries since 1933—in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Rumania, Austria—has shown how they can be mobilized to carry out the most desperate tasks in fanatical loyalty to the Nazi Party. Such groups have systematically been used to disrupt the political life of nations intended as victims of Nazi expansion. In view of the wealth and influence of these Nazis, and the record of their activities, they must be considered a dangerous element in Latin America.

The situation in Latin America is in no way comparable to that obtaining in our own country, and, of course, I intend not the slightest reflection on the patriotism of Americans of German or other foreign racial stock. They came to our shores in search of freedom and opportunity, and have contributed their full share toward the growth and advancement of their adopted land and our common heritage. Their devotion and loyalty to American institutions cannot be shaken or obscured by the actions of a very few imbued with Nazi doctrines. Their distinctive culture and skills have become part of the great melting pot which is America. They can protect themselves, and our Government can help defend them, against any insidious foreign pressure or influence. The problem in the Latin American countries is entirely different, because of the existing closely knit, strongly intrenched Nazi groups, fully supported economically and politically by powerful Nazi economic and industrial interests and Nazi agents and organizations all controlled from abroad.

The subversive activities of the Nazis in Latin America finally led to a great wave of protest from the people of these Republics. During 1937 and 1938, Nazi activities were exposed in a documented report to the Argentine Congress by Deputy Dickman. Detailed evidence of Nazi penetration and intrigue was submitted by Congressman Barrenechia in Chile, Dr. Filho in Brazil, and Congressman Frugoni in Uruguay. Public officials gave testimony about the brazen methods employed by Nazi foreign agents and local organizations. Many democratic groups joined in a movement to curb these intrigues. In May 1938, an attempted Nazi revolt in Brazil was put down and measures were taken to put a stop to Nazi expansion. Many other Latin American states at the same time imposed various restrictions on the Nazis.

Especially since the war began in Europe, many people in the United States have thought that the Nazi leaders would be too busy in Europe to push their activities in Latin America. This must have been in the mind of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] when he wrote in the minority report on the bill:

> If there must be depression among South American producers, it is better to have it now when Germany is fully occupied in Europe, rather than several years from now when German attention may be seriously directed toward the south.

To rely on policies or hopes of this kind is simply to disrupt pan-American solidarity and to run away from the facts about continuing Nazi penetration methods. Since the war broke out, the Nazis have worked more quietly, but they have succeeded in getting around most of the restrictions placed on their operations in 1937 and 1938. Their "fifth column" activities were among the major concerns of the Latin-American republics in the deliberations at Habana.

On April 5, 1939, long after Deputy Dickman's exposé, the Buenos Aires police discovered five centers of Nazi espionage in the city. One was next door to the Nazi-German Embassy in the offices of the Banco Germanico. In the same building, the Nazi Party had its headquarters—still functioning openly.

On May 15, 1939, Herr Schmidt, of the propaganda bureau of the Nazi state railways, was arrested by Chilean police. It was proved that Herr Schmidt had printed more than 100,000 antisemitic pamphlets for distribution in Chile. Herr Schmidt was deported.

On May 25, 1939, the Brazilian police arrested a Nazi officer in the State of Santa Catarina. In his possession were documents outlining a plan for the extension of Nazi influence in that state through colonization and organization.

Nazi commercial aviation mileage in Latin America is exceeded only by that of Pan-American Airways. Heavily subsidized air lines, manned by Nazi military pilots, have been maintained in the face of continued commercial losses. Until a few months ago one of these lines was operated in Colombia, directly adjacent to the Panama Canal. This line has since been replaced by a new company jointly owned by Colombian and United States interests. In Ecuador, also, within close range of the Panama Canal, a Nazi-subsidized company still operates an air line manned by Nazi pilots.

Notorious propaganda activity by Nazi consular officers has compelled Latin American countries to pierce the veil of diplomatic immunity. Nazi diplomats recalled "on request" within recent weeks include Dr. Friedrich Ried, consul at Porto Alegre in Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, and Arthur Dietrich, press attaché in the legation in Mexico City.

In Uruguay, public hostility to the Nazis became so great in June of this year that police action against them appeared imminent. Accordingly, on June 14, 1940, the Nazi German Minister at Montevideo announced that the local Nazi party and the labor front had been dissolved and membership cards recalled. This move was, no doubt, intended to forestall the police. Observers on the spot took note of the fact that Herr Langmann did not offer to dissolve the dozen lesser Nazi organizations. Almost at that very moment there was published in the press Hitler's famous interview with the journalist Von Wiegand, in which he emphatically denied all ambitions in the Americas. President Roosevelt's comment on Hitler's statement speaks volumes: "That brings up recollections."

Less than 2 months after Hitler's assurances and Langmann's so-called dissolution of the Nazi organization in Uruguay, it was revealed that the Nazis were going ahead full speed with plans for a revolt in Uruguay. On August 11, 1940, Arnulf Fuhrman was arrested by Argentine police. At the same time Uruguayan police seized correspondence showing Fuhrman to be a leader of anti-Semitic propaganda in South America. He had drawn up complete plans for the seizure of Uruguay. Fuhrman and nine others had been arrested by Uruguayan police some weeks before, but under Nazi pressure, including threats of economic retaliation, all had been released. In announcing Fuhrman's arrest, the Argentine police also announced that he was on the pay roll of the Buenos Aires office of the Gestapo.

Concurrently with Fuhrman's arrest, just about 4 weeks ago, the Argentine police uncovered a series of formidable secret arsenals in the territory of Missiones. About 3,500 rifles, 50 machine guns, and large supplies of ammunition were found. Missiones Territory in northeast Argentina is adjacent to the Nazi stronghold of Rio Grande do Sul in southern Brazil. It lies between the Parana River and the Uruguay River, which give easy access to Paraguay, Uruguay, and Central Argentina. Thus the Nazi arsenals were so located that they could be conveniently used to support operations in any of these four countries. Military control over this small strategic area means control of the entire east coast of South America.

These are some of the unvarnished facts about Nazi Latin American activities at the very time Nazi Germany was engaged in a death grapple with France and Britain and was publicizing statements that it had no designs on Latin America. To what ends it might carry its activities once it secured complete dominion over the Old World one can readily surmise from the record it has already made. Indeed, the Nazi hierarchy has already laid the foundation for its future position. When our Secretary of State gave notice that we would not tolerate any transfer of sovereignty over New World possessions to another non-American power the Nazi Foreign Minister, Von Ribbentrop, openly declared in a note dated July 1:

> The interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine implicit in the communication of the Government of the United States would amount to conferring upon some European countries the right to possess territories in the Western Hemisphere and not to other European countries. * * * It is obvious that such an interpretation would be untenable.

That is clear notice in advance of a refusal to accept the Monroe Doctrine or the even more inclusive declaration of the American republics at Habana.

Mr. President, there is a stern lesson in these facts for every American who values the security of his country. The minority report on this bill asks us to do nothing now about the economic hardship in Latin America because ultimately we would have to "let nature take its course." If the evidence I have marshaled proves anything, it proves that Nazi Germany has not allowed nature to take its course. Here or elsewhere, whenever its ambitions directed its course, all its propaganda, its nationals, its trade, and its funds have been concentrated in a united drive with a single purpose—political and economic control over the destiny of helpless peoples.

The minority report flatly takes the position that "the furnishing of economic aid to South America is not an advisable foreign policy." For my part, I believe the overwhelming majority of the American people stand with Secretary of State Hull in his statement on this bill:

> The 21 American republics have agreed on a practical program of defensive action, of which economic defense is an indispensable part. The enactment of this legislation will enable the United States to make its appropriate economic contribution to the carrying out of that program which is necessary to the safeguarding of the vital interests of the United States in a situation of unprecedented seriousness and danger.

This policy is essential for America, regardless of one's views on the European war—whether one believes in isolation, intervention, or some form of aid to the democracies. I call special attention to the fact that the recent report of the Committee on Economic Defense of the American Council of Public Affairs, recommending a Latin-American program far more sweeping than is here proposed, is endorsed by Prof. Charles A. Beard, a leading isolationist, in these terms:

> This manifesto sets forth an economic program which is as vital to national defense as material weapons of war and is absolutely necessary to protect national security against economic and ideological confusion imported from Europe and fostered by special interests at home. Its details may be criticized but its central policy cannot be challenged by any citizen who is concerned with the preservation of American civilization against the forces of brutality and destruction.

Mr. President, the United States seeks peace with all the world, but the day is long since past when we can maintain that peace with a complacent policy of business as usual. In a world where only strength guarantees peace, if we cannot safeguard our position in this hemisphere, we are on the road either to appeasement or to war. In these times we must either have the complete security befitting a great power or we cannot hope to be a great power at all. Effective results can never be obtained without acting. Leadership in this hemisphere cannot be maintained without the assumption of responsibility.

We have the economic sinews, and we have the sympathies of the democratic peoples of the New World. If we fail to act with resolution and with courage, we may some day find ourselves isolated and exposed to attack from our weakest side. We should take this reasonable measure of preparedness now, for ourselves and our American neighbors, against the uncertain future of a war-torn world.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bailey	Brown	Byrnes
Andrews	Barbour	Bulow	Capper
Ashurst	Barkley	Burke	Caraway
Austin	Bilbo	Byrd	Clark, Idaho
Clark, Mo.	Hatch	Miller	Stewart
Connally	Hayden	Minton	Taft
Danaher	Herring	Murray	Thomas, Idaho
Davis	Hill	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Hughes	Norris	Thomas, Utah
Ellender	Johnson, Calif.	Nye	Townsend
George	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Gerry	King	Overton	Vandenberg
Gibson	La Follette	Pittman	Van Nuys
Gillette	Lee	Radcliffe	Wagner
Green	Lodge	Reed	Walsh
Guffey	McCarran	Russell	Wheeler
Gurney	McKellar	Schwartz	White
Hale	Maloney	Schwellenbach	Wiley
Harrison	Mead	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from New York, I should like to invite his attention to one or two phases of his remarks. I understood the Senator from New York to say, "If the evidence I have offered proves anything it proves you cannot let nature take its course." I think I correctly quote him; I certainly paraphrase what he said. He delivered a very substantial address, and, from time to time, told the Senate "Now these are facts." I should like to ask the Senator from New York if any of the so-called facts to which he referred in his address were adduced before the Banking and Currency Committee when it conducted hearings on this bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator have reference to the Nazi activities in South America?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. No; I do not recall there was evidence on that point, but when I spoke of "facts" I gave dates and quoted from documents which I have. I stated the facts.

Mr. DANAHER. I have no question that the Senator from New York was stating "facts" as he understands them. I simply want to make it perfectly clear to the other Members of the Senate that what he was telling us as "facts" were not brought out in the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee conducting the hearings on this bill. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct; I do not recall whether there was any discussion there; but we have had discussion covering several months on the floor of the Senate of the activities of the Nazis in South America as well as other countries, penetrating not only for economic advantages but carrying with them their own philosophy of political control. I thought it was appropriate to mention that on the floor. I hope the Senator does not regard that any of us are restricted to discussing only matters that were developed at the hearings.

Mr. DANAHER. I fully understand the position of the Senator from New York. I simply wish to call to his attention that when he said, "If the evidence I have offered proves anything it proves that you cannot let nature take its course," he made that statement at a time when he was discussing the minority report, and I am certain that if he will examine the RECORD tomorrow he will discover that the context would make it appear that the facts to which he referred and the argument which he offered in essence had appeared before the committee in its hearings, when that definitely was not so, and, consequently, the minority report did in no way take into account the argument offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. Of course, I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. If the opportunity which has been afforded has enabled a different light to be cast on the facts which persuaded the Senator, he, of course, is at liberty to modify his minority views on the bill in conformity with the statement made by me.

Mr. DANAHER. It well may be that the Senator from New York would be able to induce me to modify my views if he would tell us and tell the Senate now whether or not there is any plan for the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economy, and the orderly marketing of the products of the Western Hemisphere. If there is any plan, I wish the Senator would outline it, for Mr. Jones before the committee gave us information as to no such plan and said there was none. Is there one now?

Mr. WAGNER. I have no information as to a definite plan. The Export-Import Bank will continue to operate as it has heretofore, with certain restrictions removed. But I think it was generally agreed in the committee, even if we were not aware of the specific activities to which I referred, that the Nazi government may gain in Latin America if we are not alert in at least aiding those countries where aid is needed and, at the same time, building up a market for ourselves. In other words, it is a program of a mutual aid which will maintain that hemisphere solidarity for which we are all striving. This program is fully justified as an economic proposition, but we have the additional object of aiding those countries so that we can preserve a complete solidarity and unity among the republics of the Western Hemisphere.

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wish to suggest that the members of the Finance Committee are trying to expedite a report on the tax bill. Of course, we cannot do it unless we can secure the attendance of the members of the committee. We understood that there was to be a vote taken on the so-called conscription bill. May I ask the Senator from New York if there is anything he can do to facilitate a vote on that measure, so that we may return to the committee to consider the tax bill?

Mr. WAGNER. So far as I am concerned, I am agreeable to whatever program the Senate may want to follow. If it is important to have a vote upon the conscription bill, if it is ready, I presume that is more important than the consideration, at the moment, of the pending bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question will arise on the motion the Senator from Texas plans to make to disagree to the amendment of the House on the so-called conscription bill, agree to the request for a conference on the part of the House, and to appoint conferees.

It has been suggested that a motion would be made to concur in one part of the House amendment. It was contemplated that there would be a vote on that motion, and there ought to be a vote on it as soon as possible in order that the bill may go to conference. Of course, the Senator from Texas does not wish to take any Senator off his feet, but it is a matter of privilege, and, I repeat, is a matter which ought to be determined without delay.

Mr. WAGNER. I certainly want to do everything in my power to expedite the consideration and disposition of the so-called selective draft bill, and I am quite willing, if it is desired now to vote upon that matter, to ask that the pending business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wonder if the Senator from Connecticut would be willing to yield in order that the Senator from Texas may bring that matter up?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that there has been never an instance during my membership in the Senate when I failed to find the most complete courtesy from him, and I am most happy to yield to him now. I know that whatever the Senator from Texas wishes to go forward with will meet with my complete approval.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training, and also the message from the House of Representatives requesting a conference with the Senate thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A motion to instruct the conferees is in order after the conference is agreed to and before the conferees are appointed, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have been very much impressed with the argument of the necessity for prompt action. While I have not agreed with the theory underlying the conscription bill, the Senate having acted, the House having acted, and the pressure being as great as it is, there is one way in which we can expedite the matter and save any other trouble, and that is to concur in the House amendment. I therefore move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House, which is a preferential motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean to concur in all the House amendments?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. I understand from the Senator from Texas that it is not optional with us to separate them. I understand that what the House did was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and merely offer the House bill as a single amendment. That is the reason which makes it necessary to move to concur in all that was done by the House. If it were possible to separate the various items, in my own view there are some very desirable amendments. On the whole, I think the House bill is better than the Senate bill. The House had the advantage of an extended discussion in the Senate, and I think they gave rather careful consideration to the amendments; and as between the two bills I think the House bill is preferable.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the plan for a conference report which has been announced over the radio and in the newspapers should eventuate, either the Senate bill or the House bill would be very much preferable to the bill that would be brought in by the conference committee according to that prognostication.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that one of the reasons which led me to make the motion was the fact that leading Members of the House have proceeded to announce in the newspapers what the conference committee would do; so it seemed to me it would be well for the Senate to decide what it wanted to do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator from Colorado has reference to a purported interview in the newspapers yesterday in which the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House was quoted as having said certain things with respect to what the Senate would do, and what the House would do, and what the conferees would do. I am authorized by Chairman MAY to state that he made no such statement; that he was entirely misquoted; that what he stated was that the matters of difference, including the age limit of 21 to 45 years, and the 60-day postponement, and other matters, would be in conference between the two Houses, and that he under no circumstances attempted to commit either the Senate conferees or the House conferees as to what would take place relative to the differences.

I feel that in justice to the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs I ought to make that statement, which I am making at his request.

Mr. ADAMS. I am very glad to hear the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, because I was very much disturbed by the published interview. It evidently was a piece of very detailed imagination on the part of someone, because the statement was that there would be a trade; that this would be accepted and that would be rejected; and that on the whole the conferees would work out a bill to suit a majority of the members of the conference committee rather than a majority of the Members of the two bodies. I am very glad that Representative MAY was not responsible for the statement, for I have very high regard for him.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, if the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, who happens to be from my own State, had made the statement attributed to him in the press, I should myself join the Senator from Colorado in characterizing it as a gross impropriety on the part of the chairman or any other Member of the House to have made any such statement attempting to forecast what the conferees of the two Houses would do.

In addition to what I have said, Representative MAY has stated to me that under no circumstances has he ever attempted or would he attempt to state in advance what the conferees of the two Houses would do, or to make any other statement other than that they would be free in conference to act upon the differences between the two Houses.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to enable me to ask a question of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Kentucky will agree that whoever misquoted the Representative from Kentucky made a pretty good stagger at what the plan is; will he not?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I will not agree to that, because I have no idea what the plan is, and I do not know of any plan.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is no plan.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator from Texas will join in my statement and take his full share of the responsibility for it, that until the conferees meet nobody knows what the plan will be, or whether there is any plan; and there cannot be any plan until the conferees agree and bring back to their respective Houses a conference report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is no plan of any kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of California and Mr. HILL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield first to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the motion made by the Senator from Colorado shall be adopted, where, then, will the bill be, so far as the Senate is concerned?

Mr. ADAMS. It will be on its way to the White House as soon as it is signed by the Presiding Officers of the two Houses and enrolled.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is the Senator from Colorado entirely satisfied of that?

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator ask whether I am satisfied with that, or of that?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of that.

Mr. ADAMS. I am reasonably well satisfied, yes; because, if we concur in the House amendment, that puts a conclusion to the legislative processes and sends the bill to the President after it has been regularly enrolled and signed by the Presiding Officers. I am not a legislative expert, but I think that is the fact.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is undoubtedly the fact.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, there is no question that, if the Senate agrees to the House amendment, that ends the matter so far as the two Houses are concerned. As soon as the bill is signed by the Presiding Officers of the two Houses it goes to the White House, and is signed as the House passed it.

Mr. ADAMS. That would obviate any further delay in the defense program.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no desire to bring up the unfortunate reference which has been appearing in the press. All of us at times are misrepresented by the press. They cannot help it and we cannot help it, and so we have to bear it. Considering all the surrounding details that have been published with respect to this matter, I was wondering whether the Senator from Colorado is perfectly satisfied that his motion would take the bill into the White House just as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. ADAMS. I am; but I do not want the Senator from California to think that I would be entirely satisfied with the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, no.

Mr. ADAMS. I am endeavoring to make a virtue of my necessities.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. None of us is satisfied with the bill. It is the most sinister bill that ever was passed during my long service as a United States Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. But I am inclined to think that the bill as it came from the House is a better bill than the bill which would come out of conference, and I say that with implicit confidence in the conferees. I know the processes back and forth, however. There are some things in the bill which are highly desirable. There is one particular provision which failed by only two votes of a majority in this body, and which received a majority of the votes of the other body, and at least some of the newspapermen think that portion of the bill would be eliminated in conference. Of course, that is purely speculation, without any foundation in fact.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is it speculation with the newspapermen, or with the Members of Congress?

Mr. ADAMS. In this particular instance it is my own speculation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. With reference to the statement the Senator from Kentucky made on authority of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], the chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, I desire to say that I am reliably informed that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] made the same statement for himself on the floor of the House of Representatives this afternoon.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. AUSTIN. What would be the difference between a vote disagreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Colorado and the customary agreement by the Senate to disagree to the amendment of the House and appoint conferees? What is the difference, if any?

Mr. ADAMS. One hundred percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senate should agree to the motion of the Senator from Colorado, the legislative process would be completed.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; my motion assumes a negative vote on his motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the matter would still be open on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to send the bill to conference.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would it be necessary for such a motion to be made in order to appoint conferees?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It certainly would be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion has already been made, but the motion of the Senator from Colorado has precedence over the motion made by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. AUSTIN. In practical effect, I cannot see the difference between a vote negativing the motion now pending and an affirmative vote agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. ADAMS. Then the Senator should have no hesitation in voting for my motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the difference is that if the motion of the Senator from Colorado to concur in the House amendment should be agreed to, there would be no conference, and the motion of the Senator from Texas, of course, would automatically fall. If the motion of the Senator from Colorado should be rejected, we still should have to vote on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to send the bill to conference and appoint conferees.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, of course my inquiry was founded on the supposition of a negative vote on the motion made by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that under the parliamentary situation, if we vote to adopt the motion of the Senator from Colorado, we are denying the Senate any choice as between the different features of the House bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. My answer to that question would be "Yes."

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, we have to swallow it all or none. On the other hand, if we vote down the motion of the Senator from Colorado and send the bill to conference, the Senate then is in a position to express itself from time to time, either by instructions to the conferees or by their reporting back for instructions, as to any one of the several amendments which the House adopted—to adopt such of those as we please and to reject the others. So a vote for the motion of the Senator from Colorado is a vote to cut off the Senate from weighing any of the amendments and expressing our preferences, but to take it all at one gulp. Is not that true?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, Mr. President; I agree that is true, but I have in mind this situation: If the Senate should act upon the motion made by the Senator from Colorado in the negative, the next step in parliamentary procedure would be the appointment of conferees.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Texas a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am delighted.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator says that if my motion should be agreed to the Senate would have to take the bill as a lump, say either yes or no. If it goes to conference and a conference report comes back, we will have the same option of taking it as a lump or rejecting it. There is no way at this time by which we can vote on the separate items.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator explain how?

Mr. CONNALLY. We can vote down the Senator's motion, and then take up the motion of the Senator from Missouri to instruct the conferees. The instructions would not have to cover the whole bill. We could instruct the Senate conferees to agree to a certain portion of the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Would the Senator be willing to support that motion?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Colorado is not asking for information. He knows the Senator from Texas does not favor that, of course, any more than the Senator from Colorado is opposed to the House amendment. Certainly not. But under the Senator's motion, I repeat, the Senate would be denied any course except of swallowing the whole thing at one gulp. If the bill goes to conference, we will not lose jurisdiction. I am supposing that the conferees will do their duty. The Senator from Colorado assumes that they will not.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; I am simply assuming that the conferees of the Senate will support the Senate bill. I think the House amendment is preferable to the Senate provisions.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor, because the Senator from Colorado asked him to take the floor and answer a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will recall that within the last 2 hours the Senate, by a 2 to 1 vote, decided that conferees can do anything they please. Therefore, when he says he assumes they will do their duty, he means they will do anything they please, according to the ruling of the Senate itself earlier in the day.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that he need not shake his gory locks at me. [Laughter.] My withers are unwrung. I knew that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I realize that the Senator did.

Mr. CONNALLY. I followed the Senator from Missouri to ignominous and overwhelming defeat, but I do not wish to follow him that way again. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator must accept the result of the vote of the Senate, as I do, to the effect that conferees can do anything on the face of the earth they please to do, still without doing their duty, and we will still have to vote the conference report up or down.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think that ruling was wrong; but we will meet this other question when we get to it. I still insist that if we adopt the motion of the Senator from Colorado, the matter will be at an end, and the Senate will have no further choice, but if we send the bill to conference, until both Houses finally adopt the conference report we will have at least some degree of control over what we shall do.

The Senator from Texas is not opposed to the age limit of 45 years. He would be very well satisfied.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator can get in under that.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is for it whether he gets in or not, I will say to the Senator from Colorado. On the other hand, the Senator from Texas is opposed to postponing the effective operation of the draft for 60 days in order to try to high pressure and highjack willing and courageous and impulsive and chivalric young men of rush into the Army and perform the service, and perhaps do the fighting, for a lot of others who could not be dragged in except by a draft law. That is what you are preparing to do. Why do you want them to volunteer at 18? It is not proposed that they be drafted until they are 21, but you fix the age limit at 18 for volunteering. Some impulsive boy will volunteer when things are not going very well at home, and so forth and so on, when someone makes a speech, and the war drums roll, and there is the cry "come on, now," and those who are urging the adoption of the 60-day postponement will be particeps criminis.

They are advocating that. They are standing for that sort of a doctrine—"Drum up the 18-year-old boys and get them to volunteer, so that the boys 24 years old will not have to go, so that they can stay at home."

Where are the records of volunteering we had here the other day? They revealed the story of the conditions in certain sections of the Republic. Where wages are high and where industrial populations reside, the boys have not volunteered in the past year, and they will not volunteer in the next year. That means that someone else in some other section of the country will have to do the fighting and the serving and the suffering and the sweating for the folks who stay at home.

I am not for that. I shall not vote to postpone the draft a day. If I had my way, I would provide that every man should be subject to the draft just the same as every other man in the same or similar circumstances. This thing of volunteering is not fair; it is not equitably distributed geographically, and it is not equitably distributed economically, because the fellow who has a good income and a good salary has twice as much temptation to stay at home and not serve as the fellow out yonder who is barely getting along on a small livelihood, perhaps on the plains of Oklahoma or west Texas, or some other State; barely getting along economically. Then it is said, "Come on in and we will double the pay. We will make it $30 a month instead of $15," so that they will volunteer more quickly. That is the theory of a mercenary army, that is the theory of the armies under which the totalitarian governments of centuries in the distant past maintained their establishments. But the theory of our country is that all the people have the same duty to protect their country and to serve their country and to sacrifice for their country, and that is wholly at variance with the idea that I have a right to stay at home, and urge someone else to volunteer, to say, "Come on, boys, volunteer; go and serve so that these fellows over here will not have to go and serve."

That is the reason why I am opposed to the motion of the Senator from Colorado. I have no disposition to evade the issue. That is exactly where the Senator from Texas stands, and that is why he is opposed to adopting a motion to swallow the bill whole, to close our eyes, like the boy whose mother gives him a large and copious dose of castor oil, and who is told, "Close your eyes, son, and take it down at one gulp." I am not in favor of doing it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement. I cannot forego expressing some surprise at the Senator from Colorado, who voted a few days ago against registering anyone, and against the registration of Americans between the ages of 21 and 31, but who now is anxious for us to adopt in toto a House amendment which raises the age from 21 to 45.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has somewhat misunderstood my vote. I have never been opposed to the registration of citizens of any age. I have never been opposed to military instruction of citizens of any age. I have been opposed to enforced military service superimposed upon military training, when I felt that military training for a reasonable time was what was needed.

I voted against the bill for another reason, namely, that I was unwilling that the boys who were drawn from their usual vocations should be subject not only to military service as distinguished from military training, but should be subject to be sent into foreign lands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado was consistently opposed to the bill, and I did not during the debate in the Senate, and do not now question his sincerity, and, of course, I accept the reasons which he assigns for his opposition to the bill. But it would be a stupid performance on the part of Congress to require men, even from 21 to 31 years of age, to register, unless we intended to do something about it after they had registered. So, when the Senator voted against the bill he voted not only against taking citizens by order of the Government and by selection, but he voted against registration. I am satisfied that if a bill were brought in merely requiring men between 21 and 31, or at any other age, to register, and do nothing except register, and then go home, and the Government could not do anything about it, it would be difficult to imagine a more futile performance on the part of the Congress of the United States.

I am opposed to the Senator's motion, and I shall oppose any motion to separate any of the House items and take any part of the House amendment and instruct the Senate conferees how they shall act upon it.

There are a good many differences between the two bills. One outstanding difference is the raising of the age limit to 45, and another is the provision for postponement until after the election, so that no one can claim that somebody will not be brought into the service until after the election. It seems to me there never has been proposed a more unjustifiable evasion of duty. If we need this legislation, if we need to call these men into service, we need it now, and we need it more now than we needed it a week ago, if we are to take any account of what is going on in the world.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator must be familiar with the statement of General Shedd, Assistant Chief of Staff, before the House committee, that it would be impossible to call these men before January, anyway, claiming that 4 days of debate which took place in the Senate had made it impossible to call the men before January.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, General Shedd did not say that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This motion would put the draft law upon the statute books right away.

Mr. BARKLEY. General Shedd did not make that statement, and, as was stated when the bill was being debated in the Senate, he was grossly misquoted in the attempt to repeat what he did say. What he said was that they intended to begin drawing the men so that they would have the 400,000 by January 1, and would be ready to put them into training, and not wait until January 1 before they began drawing them in.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I may suggest the thought that if the time was postponed for enlisting or enrolling the men, another process would nevertheless take place, which would have the effect of coercion upon a small group of men, which would be a discrimination and, in my opinion very unfair, because from the twenty-fourth to the twenty-ninth day after the approval of such an act, the lots would already have been drawn by means of which hundreds of thousands of boys would know that they were within the first 10 numbers in their local boards.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Thereupon they would feel bound to rush in and volunteer. That type of coercion would be quite as effective as any which could be imposed by any measure the Congress may enact. It would not be nearly so fair as having all stand upon the same footing, and all having the same opportunity to enlist or to come under the conscription or draft feature of the bill.

If we accept this postponement of the draft provision we are sure to create a class of boys who are in the early numbers—we will say from 1 to 10 of the local boards—who will in fact be conscripted and drafted by that coercion which comes from their election not to wait for 60 days, and, of course, that will destroy the morale of the others, and cast a reflection upon those who do not even have a chance to volunteer for enrollment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from Vermont for that very accurate statement.

The amendment of the House contemplates that in the next 60 days an enormous campaign of ballyhoo shall be inaugurated in every community in the United States in order to try to get 400,000 men in 60 days, when we have been unable to get 100,000 men in 90 days to fill up the authorized Regular Army. We are still seventy-five or eighty thousand men short of the number we have authorized for the Regular Army.

In addition to that there will be brass bands and speeches before every courthouse, and lovely pictures will be shown, to entice men into the Army as volunteers. Men will also go about urging those who are out of work to enlist and saying to them, "Why do you not come into the Army? You are unemployed. You are not making anything. You will receive $30 a month in the Army." The result will be that if the 400,000 men are raised within 60 days, they will be raised largely from the unemployed classes, from among men who are out of work, which will give rise again to the saying that "It is a rich man's war and a poor man's fight." I do not want such a situation to be created in this country. I want the son of the millionaire, the son of the banker, the son of the merchant, the son of the railroad president, and the son of the railroad conductor to be under the same obligations to join the Army as the men walking the streets in search of work. I want the men to be selected, instead of the men selecting themselves.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will not the men subject to draft, within the specified age limits, be urged to volunteer by those who would say, "You had better volunteer. If you do not, they will draft you anyway"?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and that would be true even though the local boards had had no opportunity to exempt or defer such men from enlistment. I can think of no more unjust thing. I cannot think of creating an army under more grossly unjust circumstances than to secure enlistment under such circumstances.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the House amendment were to be adopted, and postponement were to be had for 60 days, and under the voluntary enlistment method we should fail to get a sufficient number, what would be the psychological effect upon the people of the United States as well as abroad?

Mr. BARKLEY. The psychological effect upon the people abroad as well as upon the people in the United States would be unfavorable. It would be felt that there were not enough patriots in the United States willing to fight to defend the American Nation and our institutions, as well as to carry out the obligation we have undertaken to defend the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Kentucky has said that we would start out with a ballyhoo campaign, which would inevitably be the result of the retention in the bill of the Fish amendment providing for a period of 60 days in which only voluntary enlistments should be had. The result would be that all kinds of men would enlist, and there is nothing whatever in the Fish amendment which would prevent men who have a great number of dependents from enlisting.

For example, some man who today is out of a job, who has a wife and three or four children, may volunteer, and when he is accepted the Government has the responsibility of making some provision for his dependents, for we know that $30 a month, which would be the pay of volunteers who come into the Army, is not sufficient to take care of a wife and several children. We would not only have that responsibility but we would be piling up all kinds of burdens for the future in the way of dependents' compensation, pensions, and matters of that kind. That would be the most unbusinesslike, undesirable, and unscientific method to pursue.

Another thing must be taken into consideration, if the Senator from Kentucky will yield further. There is no compulsion more cruel than the compulsion of the ballyhoo campaign, under which every man within the age limits of 21 to 35 immediately becomes suspect, immediately falls under suspicion, unless he rushes to the first recruiting office and there enlists in the Army. It may be that a young man has dependents. It may be that he is not in good health. It may be that he is occupying an important position in some pivotal industry, engaged on a workbench or in a workshop, and yet he cannot explain that fact as he walks down the street. He cannot explain that to the different people he meets or who see him. They immediately will put him under the suspicion that he is not doing his part, that he is not stepping up and enlisting as he should. That is the cruelest form of compulsion.

Mr. President, even though it is desired to agree to the 60-day amendment, yet it ought to have the careful thought and attention of the conferees. As I read the amendment I am not at all sure that it properly takes care of the matter of the quota. Under the amendment it may be found that the enlistments in one county far exceed what its quota would be under the selective draft. Some other county may provide nothing like its quota. Why should some counties or some sections of the country go far over their quotas, without any compulsion being provided to make other counties or sections come up to their quotas? Yet under the language of the 60-day amendment that is exactly what would result. There will be that injustice, that unfairness in the matter of quotas, as between counties, and very likely as between sections.

I should like to mention another thing. The Senator from Kentucky has had opportunity to read the RECORD, I am sure. Amendments were placed in the bill by the House which perhaps the Senate wishes to retain in the bill, but perhaps the language of the amendments should be clarified or should be rewritten. Time and again, as the Senator from Kentucky knows, for he has served on conference committees, it has been absolutely necessary for conferees to clarify amendments in order to make clear the intent of Congress. I cannot think of a more deplorable action than for the Senate today to do, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] says, simply gulp this whole thing down without sending it to conference, without having an opportunity to work out the existing differences and work out the best possible bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from Alabama. Undoubtedly what he says is correct.

Mr. President, I do not know of any amendment that was ever added to a bill sent over to the other body by the Senate which was more appropriately named than at least a part of the House amendment—the Fish amendment. [Laughter.] It does not propose to fish for soldiers, because no one believes 400,000 men can be recruited by voluntary enlistment in the next 60 days. What it really does is to fish for votes in November, instead of soldiers in September, October, November, or any other month. The bill contains various amendments. It contains different language dealing with the same subject. The conferees ought to be allowed to meet and work the matter out. No doubt both Houses will have to yield something. Neither House ever gets all it wants in conference. And often it is necessary, when the report is brought back, if it is brought back by agreement, to vote it up or down as we did today in connection with the transportation measure. That is what is done in connection with all legislation.

I do not agree with the statement made by the Senator from Missouri that what the Senate did today in overruling his point of order was to give to conferees the right to do as they please. The point of order made against the report, which was acted on today, was based on two propositions, and the Senate voted that those propositions did not come within the rule which prohibits conferees from injecting new matter or eliminating matter on which there was an agreement.

The Senate did not agree that the Senator's point of order applied in that particular case. The Senate is not bound in any other case that comes before it to vote the same way, if it is convinced that the conference committee in fact violated the rule.

It seems to me we should have confidence in our conferees on this measure, who will be headed, I presume, by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who has worked so long and assiduously in behalf of the proposed legislation. Members of the Senate who will be on the conference committee should go into the conference on terms of equality with the House conferees, without their hands being tied and without being obligated in advance as to how they shall act on a particular part of a complete amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I think the Senator is quite correct. As the Senator knows, I was among the minority who opposed the entire conscription measure. I am still convinced that, from the long-range standpoint, the minority was correct. However, be that as it may, the amendment which was added in the House, called the Fish amendment, is actually neither fish nor flesh.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is very foul. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I think those of the majority who have undertaken to vote for conscription should have the responsibility of conscription. I think they should have it now. The Senator is perfectly correct when he says that we cannot raise 400,000 men in 60 days. We should be lucky if we were able to raise 100,000 men, with the pressure which would be involved in trying to ballyhoo the thing. So, at the end of 60 days, we should have accomplished nothing and should be open to the charge of having delayed conscription 60 days. All who voted against conscription would be open to the charge that we were mistaken, because we would not be able to obtain the volunteers. First, we would be charged with delaying conscription 60 days; and, second, we would be charged with being mistaken in the statement that the volunteer system would work.

I think the amendment is intrinsically dishonest. By that I do not mean to say that the motives of those who voted for the amendment are dishonest, but intrinsically it is wrong. I, for one, of the so-called isolationist or noninterventionist group, propose to oppose the amendment. If we are to have conscription, I think we should have it now; and then we shall see who is right and who is wrong from the long-range standpoint.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from Idaho for his really constructive suggestion; and I congratulate him on his sincerity, not only originally but now.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say. I hope the motion of the Senator from Colorado will be defeated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I apologize for taking any more time, but I have two letters which I shall ask to have read. The first is a letter in behalf of the volunteer system. It is one of the strongest arguments I have heard in behalf of the volunteer system. I ask that the letter be read at the desk, without the name of the writer being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

AUSTIN, TEX., August 5, 1940.

The Honorable TOM CONNALLY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Bill for conscription.

DEAR SIR: I am 21, a junior in the University of Texas, and (I believe) a fairly typical college student on the matter of conscription.

I very definitely do not want to serve a year in the Army.

To do so would entail loss of my job by which I am going to school, postponement of my graduation, and postponement of marriage for at least a year. Of course, it's purely selfish with me; I just don't want to throw away that year of my life. And I can name you scores of my friends who feel the same way.

I can, therefore, assure of at least 10 votes that you will not get next election if you vote for the compulsory military service bill; those of myself and my family (total of six) and those of my fiancée and her family (total of four).

And I'll bet there are other people who fail to see the wisdom of taking college men and college graduates and sticking them in the Army.

Very respectfully yours,

———.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, that is an eloquent appeal in behalf of the volunteer system. We can understand this young man's viewpoint. It does not suit him to serve. Therefore, the volunteers—provided there are volunteers—ought to serve. It does not suit him to serve.

I have another letter which I ask to have read. This letter is in favor of the selective service view. I think it is of equal eloquence on that side to the one which has just been read. I ask that the letter be read without reading the name of the writer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

JULY 30, 1940.

Senator TOM CONNALLY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It is a wonderful thing for a person to live in a free country and choose the mode of livelihood he chooses. I am 22 years of age, in good health, and will enter my second year at Baylor University's law school this fall.

I am an only son of a family of modest means, but by God's blessings I have not known hunger, sickness, war, or any of the other damnations upon humanity. The Government of my country has given my parents security and has enabled them to provide for me thus far in life. It would be very ungrateful for me not to be willing to offer my services to my country for a year, in that I, too, might have a better claim upon a secure future. You might quote me, a representative of American youth, favoring any compulsory military training law that Congress might enact. This is no time for political bickering, it is a time for a united front against facts which are vital to our country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask Members of the Senate to contrast the two attitudes. One young man is 21 years old, and is a junior in college. He does not want to go. He is able-bodied and well, and has all the advantages and protections which the other young man has. Under the volunteer system he would not go, because he does not want to go.

On the other hand, the other young man is 22 years old. He is a junior in law school. He gives an estimate of what American citizenship means. The protection which his family has received has enabled it, though of modest means, to give him a livelihood, bring him up, and give him an education. He says he has not suffered any of the disadvantages or hardships of life. He is happy to live under a country which guarantees the advantages and protections which he has enjoyed; and he is willing, if necessary, to fight for it.

Mr. President, I shall not vote to send that young man into training, or perhaps into war, under the volunteer system, and leave behind the other young fellow, who does not want to go. I am willing to let them both go. Both have enjoyed the same advantages and should have the same obligations. They ought to respond, and they ought to be side by side if the local board should call them. I do not think the young fellow who does not want to go has any right to expect the other young fellow to go and serve in his stead and sacrifice for him.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Earlier in the day the Senator made an observation in a question to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] about the effect on the country and on the world if we now back off and do not pass the selective draft bill. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I should like to read a paragraph from an article by Mr. Raymond Clapper, the well-known columnist, along those lines. Mr. Clapper says:

Second, since the conscription issue has been raised, it becomes almost a matter of national self-respect to follow through with it.

The votes are there to pass conscription in principle. But to hedge and crawl by adopting the trick delay until after election would be a demoralizing confession that our nerve failed us in the pinch, a tip-off that we didn't have the determination to do the thing we admit ought to be done.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know with what organization Mr. Clapper served in the war; but the Senator from Alabama, who was a soldier in the last war, will recall that even after the Conscription Act was passed, voluntary enlistments were permitted for several weeks—in fact, for 2 or 3 months—and several hundred thousand troops were actually raised. I served in a regiment every man in which enlisted after the declaration of war; and I do not think there should be any reflection on anybody because he saw fit to volunteer after war was declared.

I am not aware how much Mr. Clapper knows about the subject, or what his military experience has been.

Mr. HILL. I do not think the Senator's observation is at all germane to what Mr. Clapper says.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator think——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall later take the floor in my own right.

Mr. HILL. The question today is whether or not, having started to pass a selective-draft act, we shall go through with it, or whether, ar Mr. Clapper expresses it, our nerve will fail, and we shall become weak, back off, and fail to do the job.

It is true that at the time of the World War, after the Selective Service Act was passed, there were a great many volunteers; but the history of that time shows that even when we passed the Selective Service Act we ourselves did not realize that we should have to raise the great army which we raised. We did not even then realize that we were to send men to France; so those in executive authority thought it was wise to continue to obtain men by the volunteer system. However, the fact that at that time we continued to obtain men by the volunteer system was not a sign of weakness or failure to go forward and do what we ought to do. To fail to pass a selective-service act at this time would be such a failure.

Mr. Clapper goes on to say:

For Congress to flinch thus would be a revelation of weakness that would not be good for us as a nation. Democracy is suffering somewhat from an inferiority complex at the moment. British morale under the gun is beginning to revive the self-respect of democracy. A clean-cut follow-through now by Congress would truly invigorate us. Nothing could be more enervating than for Congress, in this pinch, to reach for the soft decision. The hard decisions are the ones that make us strong.

I want the Senate this afternoon to take the hard decision, and I believe that is the one the American people want the Senate to take, because they know that the great danger to America does not lie from without but it lies from growing weak, from failing to meet our responsibility, from flinching in this matter. I hope the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] will be voted down.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I must say that during my service in the Senate I have never heard a poorer argument for reversing the traditional policy of the United States than for a Senator—a distinguished Senator, who himself has been a gallant soldier and has himself been chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of another body—to rise in his place on this floor and forsooth, as the reason why the Congress should take a particular action, quote that great military authority, Ray Clapper, as saying that Congress would be showing weakness and cowardice if it does not do this, and do it at a particular time specified by "General" Clapper. Why would Congress be showing weakness if it should say that it would afford an opportunity for men to volunteer if they want to volunteer? When before—not only in time of peace—but when before in any war has it ever been said——

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will yield in a moment. When before has it ever been said that we will not permit men to volunteer, but we will put the draft in effect before we give them a chance to volunteer? This is not a question involving the determination of Congress to raise all the men who may be necessary, but one involving a studied reflection upon men who choose to volunteer and wear the uniform of the United States, when it is considered a term of opprobrium that a man wants to be a volunteer. I resent that from Mr. Clapper or the Senator from Alabama or anyone else. I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say that he should have included in the list the great military experts Jay Franklin, Alsop, and Kintner, and others.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I mentioned only one expert because he was the one quoted by my friend from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to my friend from Alabama, although he declined to yield to me.

Mr. HILL. I merely wanted to ask the Senator a question before yielding. Neither Mr. Clapper nor the Senator from Alabama cast any opprobrium upon any man because he wants to volunteer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He suggested it would be a sign of weakness, if not a cancer on the body politic, to employ volunteers.

Mr. HILL. It would be a sign of weakness if now after it had voted to pass conscription the Senate should lose its nerve and back down and yield to the views of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to occupy the floor in my own time for a moment, so far as I am concerned, I voted against conscription, and I am glad I did. I would never vote to fasten the Prussian system of military conscription in time of peace on this country; but, even if it be admitted that the policy has been adopted of fastening the principal weapon of the totalitarian powers upon the United States in time of peace, that still does not make it a sign of weakness or a sign of cowardice, as the Senator from Alabama would imply, to wish to afford an opportunity to Americans who wish to volunteer, to wish to afford an opporunity to men who do not choose to be dragged by the draft system but want to volunteer.

As I have said, in the last war, Mr. President, whole regiments, many regiments, were raised, composed of men who voluntarily enlisted after the war was declared, and I dare the Senator from Alabama or his military mentor, Mr. Clapper, or anyone else to say that they were not as good regiments as ever marched, as good as draft troops or any other troops.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I decline to yield further. The Senator insisted on making a speech in my time the last time I yielded to him, and I decline to yield to him further.

I say that this studied reflection on the volunteer system and on anyone who wishes to volunteer does not do credit either to this country or anyone who is engaged in it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. If my recollection serves me correctly, the bill as passed by the Senate provided for volunteering.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I so understood it.

Mr. ADAMS. I did not know that the Senate had eliminated volunteering; I thought it made specific provisions for it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That will be done in conference.

Mr. BURKE obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has just said that the volunteering part of the Senate bill would be eliminated in conference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I said that was possibly the prospect. I do not know whether it will be or not.

Mr. HATCH. Does not the House bill also provide for volunteers?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Under the ruling today, for which the Senator himself voted, the conferees may strike out any provision to which both bodies agreed if the bill is sent to conference without instructions.

Mr. HATCH. I was merely asking for information about the House bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that the provisions of both the Senate and the House bills, under the ruling of the Senate today, may be stricken out by the conferees. I do not know whether that was included in the prognosis published in the newspapers and over the radio. I overlooked that point myself.

Mr. HATCH. Was any question ever raised about leaving volunteering out, or has there been any such question raised on the floor?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There was no question raised in the Senate when this bill was passed as to the ages of registration. The Senator from Alabama now comes along, on the authority of Field Marshal Clapper, and announces it is a sign of weakness and cancer in government and cowardice on the part of the Nation and the Congress for the United States to permit volunteering.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Of course, the Senator from Alabama has made no such announcement as the Senator from Missouri has attributed to him. The fact that one does not favor the volunteer system in the first instance means no reflection and no opprobrium upon the volunteer or the man who would volunteer; and the fact that the Senate put the volunteer system in the bill, in the first instance, shows that those of us who supported the bill favored the volunteer system to a limited degree—to a certain extent. The suggestion now made by the Senator from Alabama is that, having had the courage and the wisdom to go forward and pass the conscription bill, the Senate would be weak, would be losing its nerve, to turn right around and follow the Senator from Missouri and repudiate what it has done by agreeing to the House amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I called attention to the fact that when this identical proposition was before the Senate during the consideration of the bill it was defeated by a vote, as I recall, of only 43 to 41—I know it was defeated by only 2 votes. So, it would not show any great amount of weakening in the Senate if it should now be in favor of the provision which has been put in by the House. Neither Mr. Clapper nor anyone else could conclude more than 2 or 3 in the Senate had turned cowards overnight.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield, in that connection it might be stated that in the House of Representatives, a body of more than four times the number of the Senate, the House provision was put in by a vote of only seven, which, in proportion, is even smaller than the vote in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was put in twice.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was put in first by a teller vote and later on a roll-call vote, and on the roll-call vote it went in by only seven votes.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I rise merely to call attention to the obvious fact that the volunteer system is not involved at all in the motion offered by the Senator from Colorado, nor is the Fish amendment, which proposes to rely solely upon the volunteer system for 60 days, and then, if necessary, put the selective-service system in operation. They are not involved in the motion because if we proceed in the normal way to appoint conferees the matter will be back before this body in due time.

I agreed with the Senator from Missouri earlier in the day, so I know he will not disagree now when I say that I still have confidence in this deliberative body and that there will be opportunity for those who disagree with what the conferees may do with reference to the volunteer system or with reference to extending the selective system to be heard and to express their opinion.

There is only one thing involved in the motion offered by the Senator from Colorado, and that is whether we shall proceed in a most unwise way to legislate on an important question; and I am so impressed by that that I cannot bring myself to believe that the Senator from Colorado offers his motion seriously or really desires to have a vote in the Senate upon it.

Consider this fact, Mr. President: There are not only three important differences between the House bill and the Senate bill, but there are a great many other amendments. While some of them do not stand out as pronouncedly as these as being of great importance, yet to certain Members of this body and to certain people in the country they may be considered of very great importance.

As an illustration, the House made what I think is a very important change in the section relating to conscientious objectors. It may be that the House provision is better than that worked out by the Senate committee and adopted by the Senate. I do not know. I have assumed that after the appointment of conferees they would go into all these matters carefully, and eventually bring us back a better bill than either the one which left the Senate or the one which left the House. The Senator from Colorado, however, says no, we ought not to do that; we ought now to accept the House bill in toto. I think that would be most unwise.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield to my friend from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. There are two motions before the Senate. One by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is that we reject the House bill in toto. My motion was that we accept it in toto. I do not entirely distinguish in principle between the two. I will say to the Senator that I saw these unauthorized articles in the newspapers, and I considered that we had better take the House bill, imperfect as it is, but in my judgment preferable to the Senate bill; that we were being confronted with one or the other in toto, and I prefer to accept the House bill with its imperfections than the Senate bill with its imperfections, or the unauthorized newspaper bill.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator having now been made clear upon the point that they were unauthorized statements, may we not expect the Senator from Colorado to withdraw his motion and not press it further?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not think the Senator from Nebraska can quite expect that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska evidently overlooks the statement of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] on the floor a moment ago that the chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, despite his denial of this statement as unauthorized, had made the same statement on the floor of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the chairman of the House committee made the same statement that I made here for him. That is what the Senator from Alabama said.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. HILL. My beloved and distinguished friend from Missouri seems to be all wrong this afternoon. I said that the same statement which the Senator from Kentucky made on the floor this afternoon by authority of the chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee had been made this afternoon by the chairman of the House committee, the gentleman from Kentucky, speaking for himself on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That may have been what the Senator from Alabama intended to say, but it certainly is not what he said. He said that the chairman of the House committee made the same statement on the floor of the House, reference having just been made to the statement that was made over the radio.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I yielded for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that is what the Senator from Alabama intended to say, however, I certainly do not desire to dispute his intention.

Mr. HILL. Does not the Senator from Missouri agree with me on the matter?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am in agreement that I will accept the Senator's word for what he intended to say, but that is not what he said.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I desire to say just one word in reference to the statement made by the Senator from Colorado.

We have before us two motions. One of them is the motion made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to disagree with the House amendment in toto. The Senator from Colorado knows, of course, that that is the technical way of putting the matter in conference—that we disagree with the House amendment, and conferees are appointed, and the conferees get together. He knows that nothing more is involved in the motion of the Senator from Texas than merely the parliamentary procedure of having conferees appointed.

Mr. ADAMS. The other is also a technical motion; perhaps the most frequent motion on the floor of the Senate—a motion to concur in the House amendment in order that a conference may be avoided. The adoption of that motion in this instance would expedite the going into effect of the conscription bill. Notwithstanding the provisions of the so-called Fish amendment, men will go into the service sooner under the House bill than they will go into the service under the Senate bill, or at least as soon, according to my information.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Colorado is correct in stating that the motion he has made of course is a very frequent motion in the Senate when the House has made an amendment to a Senate bill. The only distinction we make is that that is the common motion to make when the matter is of trifling importance and the amendment is of no serious consequence. Then, to avoid a conference, a motion is made to concur in the House amendment, and we do it every day; but no one would contend that that principle ought to apply here.

Identical bills on this subject were introduced, it is true, in the Senate and in the House. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs spent day after day in hearings. They called before them all those who had knowledge and worth-while opinions upon the question of the necessary manpower and how to get it quickly, and they then rewrote the bill. In many important particulars the bill as it came from the Senate Committee on Military Affairs was a very different bill from that which I had the honor of introducing. Then on the floor of the Senate we debated the matter for, I believe, approximately 3 weeks. Many amendments were adopted, many changes were made in the bill, and that was the bill which left the Senate.

In the House they started in the same way with the identical bill, but their Military Affairs Committee also held extended public hearings, and they brought out a new bill of their own. They paid no direct attention to the Senate bill. They did not take the Senate bill at all, but used their own bill, and that measure in turn was debated for 5 days—in these days an almost unprecedented time to be allotted to a bill on the floor of the House—and many amendments were made in phraseology in many important matters and crucial points in the bill.

To say now that it would be ordinary legislative procedure for this body, after all the attention it has given to this matter and after it has come back in such changed form, to say, "Well, we will just accept in toto what the House has done," impresses me as being the most unwise method of procedure. Certainly no one needs to take that action because of any certain views he may have about the volunteer system, or about the advantages of the Fish amendment postponing the selective service for a time. All of that can be reached under due and normal procedure, and at the proper time, if the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, those who have deigned to pay any attention to my views know that I am opposed to conscription in peacetime. I said when the bill was before the Senate that a draft in peacetime would sow dragon's teeth, from which we would reap a terrible harvest. To draft men means to draft industry and draft labor. It is needless now—it is too late—to rehearse all those arguments.

I have been accustomed to follow the suggestions of the superb intellect of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. Any Senator may rely upon the sagacity and judgment of the Senator from Colorado; but in this case I perceive no reason why a Senator who opposes the draft should as a matter of consistency, principle, or otherwise, vote to swallow—if such a statement may be permitted—the House bill as it is.

Let us look at the logic of the situation; and if I am wrong, I ask some logician to correct me.

The conferees, if appointed, will have full power to do the very thing this motion proposes to do. Am I right? I am right. In other words, Mr. President, this is not the final appeal. The conferees will have full power to adopt all the suggestions of the House. That matter will be committed to their discretion. Having been defeated in this forum in my attempt—which was a feeble one, I admit—to prevent conscription in peacetime, I am anxious to secure the best possible bill. With due deference to another body of Congress, it appears to me that there are incongruities—and I hope I am not unparliamentary in saying this—in the House bill which I believe can be ironed out, and will be ironed out, by the conferees.

This is a most important bill. In most cases I would vote for a conference so that the conferees might have an opportunity to bring us back a better bill. Therefore, Mr. President, it is not inconsistent, it is not contrary to principle, to vote to send this bill to conference, and that is my reason for voting so to do. Even if it were inconsistent so to do, that would not trouble me in the slightest, as is well known to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to agree to the House amendment.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bailey	Brown	Byrnes
Andrews	Barbour	Bulow	Capper
Ashurst	Barkley	Burke	Caraway
Austin	Bilbo	Byrd	Clark, Idaho
Clark, Mo.	Hatch	Miller	Stewart
Connally	Hayden	Minton	Taft
Danaher	Herring	Murray	Thomas, Idaho
Davis	Hill	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Hughes	Norris	Thomas, Utah
Ellender	Johnson, Calif.	Nye	Townsend
George	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Gerry	King	Overton	Vandenberg
Gibson	La Follette	Pittman	Van Nuys
Gillette	Lee	Radcliffe	Wagner
Green	Lodge	Reed	Walsh
Guffey	McCarran	Russell	Wheeler
Gurney	McKellar	Schwartz	White
Hale	Maloney	Schwellenbach	Wiley
Harrison	Mead	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will not the Chair state the motion upon which we are now about to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that the bill be sent to conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is that all the motion, just to send the bill to conference?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I understand, the motion of the Senator from Texas is to disagree to the House amendment and to agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is correct.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I offer a motion to instruct the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the motion.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Senate instructs the conferees on the part of the Senate upon Senate bill 4164: (1) Not to agree to any change in the provision of the bill as it passed the Senate fixing the ages of registration at 21 to 31, inclusive.

(2) To agree with the provision of the House bill known as the Fish amendment providing for a postponement of the registration for 60 days.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I have included in the motion to instruct the conferees only two of the items involved in the House amendment. One is the provision adopted by the House changing the provision unanimously agreed to by the Senate, and I understand agreed to by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs after considerable discussion, fixing the age limits for registration at 21 to 31. As I recall, the bill, as introduced by the Senator from Nebraska and as originally reported, or agreed to be reported, by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, contained different age limits, but out of respect for the almost universal feeling of the Senate upon the matter, the bill was recalled by the Senate committee on its own motion, and the age limits were fixed at 21 and 31.

It seems to me, in view of that fact, and in view of the unanimity with which those age limits were agreed upon in the Senate, that the Senate is entitled to assurance that those age limits will not be changed by the conferees without bringing the matter back to the Senate for further consideration and further instruction. Therefore I have offered this instruction for the purpose of assuring that the prognostications made over the radio and in the newspapers, erroneous as they may be, on behalf of the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, will not actually be translated into fact by a conference report adopting the House provision as to the age limits. I think the Senate is entitled to assurances that they will again have an opportunity to vote on this matter.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I think the Senator is substantially correct in his statement in reference to the procedure under which the age limits were fixed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If I am incorrect, I should be very glad to have the Senator set me right.

Mr. BURKE. There is one particular in which I think the Senator was not quite correct. The bill as introduced contained different age limits, namely, 18 to 65, and the matter was considered in the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. I did not understand that the committee had ever agreed on any other age limits. They did, at the suggestion of the War Department, change the age from 65 to 64, so as to conform with the general retirement provisions in the Army. Then, after the testimony was all in and the committee considered the matter, they eventually agreed on the 21-to-31 provision.

The Senator will recall that the matter was not discussed on the floor of the Senate, except in one particular. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], as I recall, offered an amendment to reduce the age limit, and to make the age range from 21 to 24, and there was some discussion as to what would be the proper age limit. At that time I stated that I thought the age limit should be 21 to 45, and I was considering the advisability of offering an amendment to that effect so that it might be discussed by the Senate in general, but for one reason or another that was never done, and the matter went through without any discussion.

The only point I questioned in the Senator's statement as not being quite correct was that the Senate is unanimously opposed to the House provision making the age limits 21 and 45.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not make that statement. I said that the provision making the age limit 21 to 31 was adopted with substantial unanimity in the Senate on the passage of the bill. I did not say that at the present time, if the matter were submitted to a vote, the Senate would be unanimously opposed to the range of 21 to 45, because, as the Senator from Nebraska said a moment ago, he stated during the debate that he preferred a different age limit. The Senator from Massachusetts, as I recall, stated that while he was offering an amendment to make the age limits 21 and 24, he preferred a reduction in the lower age limit to 18 years. I did not make the statement, nor do I believe, that the Senate would be unanimously opposed to the House provision making the age limit 21 to 45. I do say that the whole history of the bill in the Senate showed that an overwhelming majority of the Senate seemed to favor the age limit of 21 to 31, and I have offered this instruction for the purpose of seeing to it that the Senate conferees do not agree to the House provision, as the erroneous newspaper and radio reports indicated was already agreed upon, without bringing the matter back to the Senate for further action. If the chairman of the Senate conferees would be willing to agree not to include this age-limit matter and the other matter covered in my instruction in the conference report, I should be perfectly willing to have the bill go to conference; in other words, if the Senate should have an opportunity to vote on those two propositions as separate matters. I am offering the instruction at this time because it is the only opportunity the Senate will have to vote, except to vote a conference report up or down, or, as the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] so eloquently said a little while ago, swallow it at one gulp, no matter what the conferees might decide to force upon us.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. It would seem to me very much better that the Senate conferees should sit down around a table with the House conferees, so that they might have a free and open conference, and not go to the extent the Senate went earlier today in reference to the transportation bill; that they should not go into conference with the House conferees bound by any alleged statement made by the chairman of their conferees that they were going to do a certain thing, and with the Senate conferees pledged in advance along a certain line, but that they should meet together with the two bills, the Senate conferees, of course, giving full weight to all the provisions in the Senate bill and the House conferees to their own measure, and then bring back to the respective Houses the best possible bill. So I am very much opposed to the Senator's motion, to both parts of it, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, Mr. President, I knew the Senator from Nebraska would be opposed to both parts of the motion to instruct the conferees, or, indeed, to any motion of any sort to prevent the consummation of this putative conference report which has already been agreed upon by the newspapers and the radio commentators.

As to the Senator's theory of conferees just meeting in a beautiful open session with entirely open minds, without any outside pressure, or anything of that sort, that is a beautiful theory, but it does not work out in practice. A burnt child dreads the fire. I had the experience in this body once of having an amendment which I had offered to a tax bill adopted by a majority of more than 20, an amendment providing for the imposition of taxes upon what were at that time denominated "tax-exempt securities." What was my surprise to read in the newspapers the next day an announcement from the chairman of the Senate conferees, before the conference was ever held, that the Senate conferees would recede from the Senate amendment, and I was told by members of both the House and Senate conference committees afterward that, as a matter of fact, the Senate conferees receded from the Senate amendment before the House conferees ever had a chance to even suggest that they do so.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I remember the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] standing on the floor of the Senate and saying that after all this was not a selective-service bill; that that was a misnomer; that it really was a selective-training bill, under which it was simply proposed to train young men.

Of course, what will be done under the measure is to take young men between the ages of 25 and 45 into the service, but let those who are not taken into the service under this measure remember that as a result of it a club will be held over the heads of all workingmen in all communities in the United States of America. As a practical matter you know and I know what that will mean. It will mean for the laboring people that if they do not do as they are told to do they may be drafted into the Army. That is not theory. I can name community after community in which such a club was held over workingmen during the last war.

Much is said about the whole matter being conducted by local authorities. Yes; it will be conducted by local authorities. But who will compose the local boards in many communities, in industrial centers, which will have in charge the matter of selective service? Everyone knows what it will mean as a practical matter. Everyone knows it will mean that a club will be held over the heads of the workingmen. That is one reason why I have been against peacetime conscription. I saw such legislation in operation in certain communities in the United States during the World War, and I know how it operated in some of the industrial centers. I know the club that was held over workingmen in some of the communities of the country. Such a club will be held over the heads of workingmen in the United States in peacetime, under this legislation, and make no mistake about it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me I will tell him that I once had the opportunity, as a member of a committee of the Senate, to examine the so-called industrial-mobilization plan, which was at that time on file in the War and Navy Departments. I understand it has been changed since by the Stettinius plan, which is now a deep secret. The plan to which I first referred is the one which was in preparation 3 or 4 years ago. It was no secret. If one took the trouble to read between the lines, and to dig into it a little bit, he would find that under it the result would be precisely what the Senator from Montana said would be the result of the present plan. The document did not say in so many words that it was planned to conscript labor, but it was the intention, by use of the draft system, to exercise such a club over labor that, if it was desired, labor could be drafted into the military service, and the authorities could force any conditions on labor they pleased, just as was done in the last war in the case of members of a regiment who were engaged in the State of Washington to cut lumber for use in building airplanes, and who were reduced to a condition practically of peonage, as the Senator from Montana knows.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let no laboring man in the country fool himself as to what the real purpose of the legislation is, and what the result will be. It will result in a club being held over the laboring men of the country in every industrial center. I am not a prophet, but I venture the statement that very soon after the legislation goes into effect we shall find out what will take place under it.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. So far from the selective-service bill being a club over the heads of the workingmen of the country, it is one method by which the obligation to train for service and to be ready for service can be imposed equally upon those from all walks of life in the country. There are those who may delude themselves into saying that we can increase the pay in the Army to a slight degree, and offer that inducement to those who are unfortunate enough not to hold good positions, or who are out of work altogether, and thus bring them into the military service in that way, which would not appeal at all, apparently, to the kind of people the Senator from Montana would like to reach——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Nebraska, as I understand, proposed to pay them $5 a month.

Mr. BURKE. The provision in the original bill that was introduced, if we must go over that again——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, the Senator from Nebraska brought up that subject. That is what the Senator himself proposed.

Mr. BURKE. Very well, we will stop right there, if the Senator will yield further, to explain once more that that provision in the bill was simply a nominal provision, which was put in it in order to make it conform to the amount received by the C. C. C. boys after their allotments to their families are made, with the understanding, and with the theory in mind, that Congress would take the necessary action, if any persons were dependent on those who came into the Army, to see that under separate legislation provision was made for them. I do not, however, propose to be diverted by the Senator's remark from the point I was discussing. I do not know that I was asking a question, but the Senator had graciously yielded to me to permit me to make a statement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the Senator, but I hope he will not make a speech.

Mr. BURKE. I do not desire to make a speech.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator can obtain the floor at any time.

Mr. BURKE. I wish to say that the only proposal adopted in connection with this proposed legislation which might have any bearing upon the point made by the Senator from Montana, was the Russell-Overton amendment, which I supported, and which proposed, under certain circumstances, to permit the drafting of industrial plants. The objection made to that by certain Senators was that it might involve the drafting of labor. It did not seem to me that that would necessarily follow, and therefore I supported the amendment.

I am opposed, as I hope every other Senator is, to anything resembling the drafting of labor. I want labor to be bargained for freely. But I see no merit whatever in bringing in now, at this stage of the debate, the contention that this is a measure which will bear heavily upon the workingmen of the country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am sorry the Senator from Nebraska does not approve the suggestion of the Senator from Montana. Of course, that is a difference of opinion.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the Senator from Nebraska does not want to debate that matter. I do not blame him for not wanting to debate the proposal which was made in connection with the bill which he brought in, which was drafted by great patriots from New York, that it contain a provision for $5 a month for the men who were to be taken into the service. Then, of course, it was the idea that Congress, in its generosity, would appropriate money to take care of the man's wife and children who were left behind. The idea was to make them dependent upon charity from the Government of the United States, and that we would put the men in the Army at $5 a month.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The same crowd who drew up the bill—that is, the Military Training Camps Association—have been perhaps the most bitter opponents of adjusted compensation for service men, or for providing aid to widows and orphans of service men, or any soldier's benefits of that sort, and may safely be depended upon, if they once again force this system on the country, after we shall have fought the war, again to be as bitter opponents of compensation for the veterans of the next war as they were of compensation for the veterans of the last war.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. To me it is amusing to see Senators stand on the floor of the Senate and talk about the cowardice of the people of this country—the United States of America—which is not at war, when our neighbor across the border, Canada, has put into effect a law which provides for training for a period of 30 days, with the provision that those called shall not be taken out of their own country against their wishes. Canada is at war. We are at peace. If we can believe the statements of both the candidates, the candidate on the Democratic and the candidate on the Republican ticket, we shall remain at peace and will not go to war. Yet there is in this country hysteria and fear.

The pending legislation is being passed because of fear. When legislation is enacted because of fear, we always do a bad job.

In my judgment, this is one of the worst pieces of legislation that has ever been perpetrated upon the people of the United States, and I want to make the prediction that within 6 months after it shall have been enacted, and the boys are placed in the camps, and it is found that no preparation has been made to take care of them, that there are not enough shoes or other equipment for them, we shall see that it will be one of the greatest breeders of radicalism in this country. The conservative businessmen, the Wall Street lawyers, may believe that they are doing this in the interest of suppressing radicalism—and that is what they are doing it for; let us be frank about it; let us be honest about it—but the result of the legislation will be to breed radicalism in the United States, because the American people cannot be oppressed by peacetime draft. Many people have been fooled into believing that this measure is simply to provide for training the boys. It is not for training American boys for war. It is not for giving them military training; but the result will be to hold a club over the heads of the men and the women of the United States in peacetime.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I cannot let go unchallenged the statement that this is other than primarily a bill for training our manpower for national defense; and as often as the statement is made on the floor that it is other than a training measure of that kind I propose, if I can be recognized, to deny it. Nothing was further from the thought of those who drafted the legislation or the Military Affairs Committee in working it out, or of the Senate, I am sure, in overwhelming majority, in passing it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that if this is only a training bill—if it was the intention of those who drafted it, of the Military Affairs Committee in reporting it, and of the Senate in passing it, that it was to be only a training bill—they had all better read the bill again, because it is a service bill. It is as much of a conscription bill as was the conscription bill which was passed after our entry into the last war. There is absolutely nothing in the bill to prevent the men who are taken away from their homes and drafted being sent to fight in Egypt, England, or any other place to which they may be ordered to go. It is not a training bill. It is a service bill.

Mr. BURKE. Certainly it will be a service bill if the national defense requires the men who are trained to take up arms to repel an invader.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is no such limitation. I offered such a limitation, and it was voted down by votes including the vote of the Senator from Nebraska. I offered the limitation that the men should not be sent to serve outside the United States and its possessions, but that amendmen was voted down by votes including that of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Certainly I voted against it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator talks about the men being used to repel an invader. I say that there is nothing in the bill to prevent the men from being sent to serve in England, Egypt, Africa, Asia, or any other place.

Mr. BURKE. If that is the way to carry forward the national defense to the highest extent, certainly they should be so sent. What I say is that this is certainly a training bill from start to finish; and the Senator comes back and says that if we become involved in war the men will have to carry muskets. Of course, they will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact it is not necessary for us to get into a war. If the President of the United States can dispose of one-seventh of the Navy of the United States without any authority from Congress, does the Senator believe he would hesitate to order the draftees to be sent abroad without any declaration of war, or any more authority from Congress, than he had to dispose of the destroyers?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. We have sent men into Nicaragua and Haiti without any declaration of war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The draftees could be sent in the same way.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the draftees could be sent to Haiti, South America, China, or anywhere in the world.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into a general discussion of the conscription bill. I have referred to the first proposed instruction which I offered, which had to do with the ages for registration. I now desire to refer very briefly to the other portion of my proposed instructions, which is an instruction to the Senate conferees that they they are to accept the provision inserted in the House bill which was known in the Senate as the Hayden amendment. That amendment was discussed in the Senate and was rejected in the Senate by a majority of only two votes. My proposal is simply to afford the Senate an opportunity again to pass on the validity of the Hayden amendment.

If we had any assurance that the conferees would bring back the Hayden amendment in disagreement, and afford the Senate an opportunity to vote on it, with the possibility that a change of two votes would enable the Senate to agree with the House, I should not offer the proposal to instruct the conferees. However, the amendment was of such merit and was so strongly supported in the Senate during the consideration of the original bill, that it seems to me the Senate is entitled to an opportunity again to pass upon it. I do not propose to discuss the merits of it. It was discussed at length when the matter was before the Senate. It was discussed in the House and adopted on two separate votes. I believe that if another vote could be had on it in the Senate, the amendment would be agreed to.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] undertook to be very facetious in referring to the so-called Fish amendment, and undertook to make a play on words—which I presume was supposed to be humorous—on the name "Fish." He did not refer to the amendment as the Hayden amendment, by which name it was known when it was considered in this body and defeated by only two votes.

I submit that there is nothing in this instruction which reflects in any way upon the Senate conferees; but in view of the rule that a conference report must be agreed to or rejected as a whole, this is the only opportunity the Senate will ever have to express its opinion upon these two very essential substantive propositions without having them confused with a number of other issues.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I voted against the proposal made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] because I believe that in the interest of good legislation the bill should go to conference. I intend to support the proposal made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], because I think the lower age limits should be adopted. I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to fix the age limits between 21 and 25, which would require the registration of 5,000,000 men, out of which 400,000 men would be obtained this year and another 400,000 next April. Certainly Congress should not go above an age limit of 31.

The text of the so-called Fish amendment as adopted in the House was identical with the amendment which I offered in the Senate and which was defeated in this body by 2 votes. I offered the amendment because in a democracy we should pay some respect to the opinions of the minority. No doubt the Gallup poll adequately reflects the views of the American people. Two-thirds of the American people are in favor of conscription. One-third are opposed to it. Among that third are a number of very stubborn persons who firmly believe in the volunteer system, and I was convinced that national unity would be promoted by offering an opportunity to demonstrate whether they are right or whether they are wrong. The amendment which I offered permitted this to be done without in any way interfering with obtaining men for the national defense. I still believe that it would be the part of wisdom to give the minority a chance to prove its contentions. There is and has been from the beginning of our Government a feeling among a substantial section of the American people that volunteering is a better way to proceed than by conscription. One sentence by David Lawrence in an editorial in the United States News of August 30, 1940, gives expression to a very widespread idea:

> However we may argue in favor of the principle of selective or universal service in theory—and it can be supported convincingly as the only satisfactory way to fight a war—there is something deep in the hearts of Americans which still believes in volition rather than compulsion as the chief power of a democracy.

It was to show a decent respect for the views of the minority that I proposed that volunteering be given a 60-day trial. I wish now to prove by the words of a witness better qualified than any other American, that the 60-day delay of conscription would cause no harm whatever. Gen. Hugh S. Johnson had immediate charge of the selective draft during the World War. On September 7, the day before the Fish amendment was finally voted upon in the House of Representatives, this is what General Johnson said in his column which is published in many newspapers:

> The Fish amendment to the Selective Service Act, tentatively adopted by the House, has been erroneously reported as a measure to postpone effectiveness of the selective-service law by 60 days. It has other gross faults, but it does not do that. As soon as the law passes, the Government can set up the machinery for registration and classification of manpower. It can proceed, when ready to register them and, rapidly as possible, to classify them in the order of their relative availability for military service with the least possible disturbance of domestic, industrial, or social relations.
> You can't have any actual taking of men into the Army under our system until the registration is complete to the last man. You can't have it until the classification has proceeded at least to the point of filling the quotas of each locality. "Filling the quotas" means the actual taking of men for whom the great lottery in Washington has determined that their turn has come and of whom committees of their neighbors have decided that there is less reason for them to remain in the civil occupations than exists for other men.
> Starting from scratch, this machinery could not possibly be set up, oiled and put in efficient operation to produce 400,000 or even 100,000 men in less than 60 days. All that the Fish amendment provides is that while the machinery may be created as quickly as possible, it can't actually take a single man for 60 days. Thus, on the cold hard facts, there will be no real delay on this score.

While most anyone is as well qualified to pass judgment upon the motives of other men, no one could be a better witness than General Johnson to testify that 60 days of volunteering would not in any manner prevent obtaining men for the Army and the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask if I correctly understood the Senator to say that General Johnson had charge of the Draft Act in 1917–18.

Mr. HAYDEN. He had active charge of the actual administration of that act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder had absolute control of the Draft Act. I happened to be a member of the Military Affairs Committee at the time, and I know absolutely that General Crowder controlled it all the way through.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, both Senators are right. I am surprised that that is true, but they are both right. General Crowder technically, of course, as Provost Marshal General and Judge Advocate General, was in charge of the draft; and General Johnson, who was then a major—made a lieutenant colonel but only a major—was General Crowder's executive officer, and as such had immediate charge of all the details regarding the draft. I remember that that is where I first met him.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, since this subject has been mentioned, I desire to quote from another one of General Johnson's columns in which he states the high importance of providing in the pending bill for complete civilian control of the draft boards. I am going to put this article of General Johnson's in the RECORD; and I hope, now that the bill has gone to conference, that the Senate conferees will be sure to follow out the suggestion made by the general that there must be no centralized or bureaucratic interference whatsoever; that the civilian draft boards shall be entirely made up of a man's friends and neighbors in the community in which he resides.

As to who is responsible for the Selective Draft Act, in this article General Johnson, after stating why the Civil War Draft Acts of both the Union and Confederate governments were as fiasco, says:

> When General Crowder detailed me to draw up a plan for the 1917 draft, his only instructions were, "Reverse every one of those errors."

The claim has often been made that General Crowder was the author of the Selective Draft Act; but I read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on May 31, 1918, a true statement of the facts. I did it because I had read in Collier's Weekly a comment by Mark Sullivan in which he attributed the establishment of local civilian boards in the Selective Draft Act to President Wilson, and then I saw an article by Mr. Taft in the Philadelphia Public Ledger in which it was stated that Gen. Enoch Crowder was entirely responsible for the idea of setting up local and district boards to determine who should be inducted into the Army.

I happened to know of my own knowledge that the man who conceived the idea of setting up civilian draft boards was a former Governor of Nebraska, then a Member of the House of Representatives, Mr. A. C. Shallenberger. Therefore, I took the trouble to read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the hearings before the House Committee on Military Affairs, at which the Secretray of War was present on two different days, when Mr. Shallenberger questioned him in regard to how the draft was to be carried into effect. The record clearly shows that the War Department had no plan. I distinctly remember being told that when General Crowder was first called upon for the text of a conscription act, he brought up to the committee the old Civil War Draft Act in a slightly modified form and there was not one word in what he presented about local civilian draft boards. Mr. Shallenberger and the other members of the House Committee on Military Affairs were solely responsible for the establishment of such boards.

In order that this matter may be again made of record, so that there can be no further dispute about it, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD General Johnson's recent newspaper column and then certain extracts from the proceedings in the House of Representatives on May 31, 1918. After I had made my statement Mr. Kahn, of California, who had charge of the draft bill, because he favored conscription and the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs did not, made some very complimentary remarks in regard to General Crowder; but he did not then claim, because as a member of the House Committee on Military Affairs he knew it was not true, that General Crowder was the author of the plan for the creation of local and district civilian draft boards.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ONE MAN'S OPINION

(By Hugh S. Johnson)

The strength of the World War selective service was that it followed the essential of the American system of local self-government to the last letter. Gen. Enoch Crowder used to require of every officer detailed or assigned to the Judge Advocate General's department a study of the errors of conscription that had made it a stench in the nostrils of Englishmen and Americans. The trouble had been the very errors of government that had brought the American Revolution—distant and almost tyrannical bureaucracy invading the local affairs of an independent people with cast-iron rules for their conduct and with no regard for local problems.

That was what made the draft in the War between the States in both the Federal and Confederate Governments a fiasco. When General Crowder detailed me to draw up a plan for the 1917 draft, his only instructions were, "Reverse every one of those errors."

The essence of that reversal will be found in section 4 of the 1917 Selective Service Act. It took every power for the classification, taking, or deferment of men for military service out of the hands of any centralized official or bureaucracy and lodged it solely, exclusively, or finally in the local or district boards of appeal.

It is impossible to overemphasize the necessity and the healthy effect of that. The printer's ink was not dry on the paper of the law before every Congressman and political official in Washington was deluged with demands from constituents to do this or that for the son of Mrs. A., Mrs. B., and so on throughout the alphabet. A painstaking letter was prepared, explaining that there was no authority in Washington or elsewhere, except in these neighborhood committees, who had the slightest power to prefer any man either through fear or favor.

Tens of thousands of copies of that letter were reproduced at the request of harried Congressmen. It relieved them from the most hateful responsibility that a legislator has—attempts by his constituents to extract unjust special privileges in return for possible votes.

I was told that the system would fail because the local selective-service boards with so much power would be even more subject to local influence. The record in millions of cases will bear me out that no such thing happened—or could happen. We avoided that by the device of the great Washington lottery which established the "order numbers."

The job was done in a goldfish bowl. If Mrs. Smith's son's name came up as next for service, the eyes of every other mother of a son with a later order number were on the selection board. If the first boy got off unjustly, their sons were that much nearer to the gun. For that reason, our difficulty turned out to be not that the exemptions were too liberally or unfairly applied. They were applied too strictly in almost every one of more than 4,000 local boards.

The present legislation in Congress overlooks this absolutely vital point entirely. The jurisdiction and powers of the boards are not fixed by the statute but left to a political discretion in Washington. It is an indication of the hasty way in which the bill was prepared—by a group of New York lawyers, without enough experience in the draft.

The War Department had been studying the 1917 selective-service system for 23 years, hearing all veteran criticism and advice and preserving all principles that had proved to be correct. The Department bill was largely short-circuited.

This is no trivial detail. It is a basic fault in the Burke-Wadsworth bill that must be remedied before it passes.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 31, 1918]

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I desire to address the committee for a few moments in the interest of historical accuracy. It is now universally recognized that the success of the Selective Draft Act has been primarily due to the fact that its administration has been placed in the hands of the State and local civilian authorities. Mark Sullivan, of Collier's Weekly, was among the first to give wide publicity to this supreme virtue of the draft law. On June 23, 1917, in his Comments on Congress, he said:

MARK SULLIVAN'S EDITORIAL IN COLLIER'S

"Anyone who will read the draft bill closely or will search his recollection of the details of registration and draft which we are just passing through will discover this fact, a fact of the most fundamental importance, although utterly inconspicuous: At no point does a soldier come to a citizen and say "Come"; at no point does a military authority say to a civilian, "Come, you; take orders from me." This is conscription in the odious sense, and this is the thing which doesn't happen in our case. The administration wrote the bill and laid out the process so that at no place does the Army take a man from civil life; it is always civilians sending a man to the Army. What happens is that a group of civilians say to a man, 'We have examined the circumstances of all the persons in our community, and we designate you as one best fitted to go and serve us; that is, to serve the civil population as a soldier.' The board of civilians who make this designation are the local civil authorities, who have been elected to the offices they hold by the very voters whom they now survey and designate—the neighbors of the men drafted. And if the drafted man does not agree that his designation was a proper one or believes that he should be exempted, he has a chance to lay his reasons before the fellow civilians who have designated him. Finally, if the local board still insists on his designation, he has an appeal again to civilians. At all points it is civilians choosing a man from among themselves and sending him to serve them in the Army; at no point is it a case of soldiers taking a man. The subordination of the Army to the civil population is maintained. A loose or careless or hurried handling of our emergency by a man intent on quickness and expediency might have lost us a good deal."

Thus far Mr. Sullivan is absolutely correct in his appreciation of the merits of civilian tribunals, but he then goes on to attribute this most wise plan to the President—

"The writer of this paragraph does not happen to know whether or not Mr. Wilson personally wrote or dictated the conscription bill. But it is certain that this feature of the fundamental structure of the bill is an emanation from Mr. Wilson's mind, a mind so well grounded in the principles of democratic society that it just naturally works right without being conscious of it. The bigness of this it is hardly possible to exaggerate, yet it passes merely as part of the day's work."

In the Philadelphia Public Ledger of May 16, 1918, there appeared an article entitled "How a Great Democracy Created Its Army," by William H. Taft, which gives credit for this legislative masterpiece to another individual. In discussing the origin of the Selective Draft Act, Mr. Taft says:

PRESIDENT TAFT'S COMMENTS

"Without abating in the slightest the credit of those who put through the bill, it is not too much to say that the real inventor of the system, the man who has done more than any other one person in the Government practically to carry it out, is Maj. Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, the Judge Advocate General of the United States * * *.

"When we declared war and the question of the proper method of raising an Army was before the War Department, the General Staff was consulted and so was the Judge Advocate General. They both submitted plans and General Crowder's was adopted; and the action of the administration in adopting it has been triumphantly vindicated by the result * * *.

"In devising the mechanism needed, General Crowder showed his broad vision and complete confidence in the self-governing capacity of the American people. He called for the voluntary action of State, county, and city officials, and for the formation of committees of unofficial persons to execute the law. Through these agents, in a marvelously short time, nearly ten millions of men, between 21 and 31, were registered. Exemption boards, 4,500 in number, and district boards, 200 in number, with the duty of selection and examination, were created, and the amount of free and valuable service rendered by them speaks volumes for the patriotic spirit of their members * * *."

Now, I not only respect but sincerely admire the greatest of our living ex-Presidents. From the day he left the White House to this hour he has deserved the high esteem in which he is held by his fellow citizens everywhere. Since the declaration of war he has given to the limit of his time, his strength, and his great ability in the cause of victory for our arms. Under his persuasive leadership the most far-reaching compact in the history of American industry has been made. For the duration of the war the leaders of organized labor have agreed to abandon the right to strike, and the leaders of organized capital have recognized the justice and expediency of collective bargaining. Always constructive in his statesmanship, not one word of fault finding or unfair criticism has escaped from his lips. Both during the war and long after its close our people will mention with pride the patriotic service of William Howard Taft, a true American. [Applause.]

I know that Mr. Taft would be the last man to bestow credit where credit is not due. It is easy to imagine how he fell into this error, particularly when praising one with whom he served in the Philippine Government. But now let us see who it was that is really responsible for the use of local civil tribunals to determine the men to be selected to do the actual fighting in this war.

HISTORY OF THE LEGISLATION

Early in April 1917, the Secretary of War sent to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs the original draft of the Selective Draft Act which, Mr. Taft says, was prepared by General Crowder. Nowhere in this proposed bill is any mention made of tribunals or boards whose duty it would be to enforce the provisions of the law. The President is authorized to utilize all Federal or State officers, but beyond that no intimation is given of how citizens are to be selected for military service. On April 9, 1918, the Secretary of War made a statement before the Committee on Military Affairs in support of this bill and the record shows that he was accompanied by the Judge Advocate General. Beginning on page 61 of the hearings the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Shallenberger, made this statement and inquiry:

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Referring to the third section of this bill, which, as the chairman said, was discussed the other day, you have referred several times, and I think it is a very essential point, to the manner of the selection of those men. As I remember it, you stated that it was contemplated that something like 48 percent, at least, or a large proportion of them, would be exempted for one reason or another. Now, in the application of that exemption there would have to be a tribunal to determine the questions that will arise in the administration of the law. Has the Department determined whether this tribunal shall be a civil tribunal or a military tribunal?

"Secretary BAKER. That has not yet been determined.

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. You understand, of course, that some nations—Germany, for instance—have a military tribunal, while England has a civil tribunal to administer the law. Furthermore, you know, no doubt, that in Argentina, and, perhaps, in some other countries, there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction about the fairness of the administration of the law in making the selections. The matter presents difficulties that will make for a great deal of dissatisfaction, and I did not know whether or not you had determined that vital point.

"Secretary BAKER. I have heard of the criticism of the Argentine administration of the law. This bill places at the disposal of the Department or the Government all the administrative and executive agencies of every State, including, doubtless, the smallest administrative units in the State. Undoubtedly some system will have to be devised for a fair and public determination of those matters.

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But that has not yet been determined by the Department?

"Secretary BAKER. No.

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think we will be asked about that on the floor and that the matter will be very fully discussed. If the Department has determined upon its policy——

"Secretary BAKER (interposing). We have determined our policy, but not how it will be administered. Those details have not been worked out yet."

On April 11 the Secretary of War and the Judge Advocate General were again before the committee. I read from page 117 of the hearings:

"The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything further to suggest, Mr. Secretary?

"Secretary BAKER. There is only one other thing. There has been some question raised as to just what was done in Great Britain on the subject of conscription, and General Crowder has kindly found for me the Military Service Act of the British Government, and I would like to read perhaps just enough of it to make the question clear.

"Mr. CALDWELL. How much of it is there?

"Secretary BAKER. It is not very long; only two or three pages.

"Mr. KAHN. I think we would like to hear it.

"Mr. CALDWELL. The only thing I had in mind was whether or not it would not be well to put the entire act in the record.

"Secretary BAKER. I understood that to be the purport of your question.

"Mr. GORDON. Is that the latest act which they have passed? The first act was passed in January 1916 and the last act was enacted in May.

"Secretary BAKER. My impression is that this is the act of January 1916.

"General CROWDER. This is the act which set in force the conscription in 1916. It is the first of the acts. We have not the series of acts here.

"Secretary BAKER. On the back of the act appears the endorsement, 'Ordered by the House of Commons to be drawn on the 6th day of January 1916.'

"Mr. GORDON. That was the original act.

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And it has been considerably amended since then.

"Secretary BAKER (reading):

"'Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

"'1. (1) Every male British subject who—

"'(a) On the 15th day of August 1915, was ordinarily resident in Great Britain and had attained the age of 18 years and had not attained the age of 41 years; and

"'(b) On the 2d day of November 1915 was unmarried or was a widower without any child dependent upon him—

"'shall, unless he either is within the exceptions set out in the first schedule of this act or has attained the age of 41 years before the appointed date, be deemed as from the appointed date to have been duly enlisted in His Majesty's regular forces for general service with the colors or in the reserve for the period of the war and to have been forthwith transferred to the reserve.'"

* * * * * * *

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The second schedule, Mr. Secretary, shows the constitution of the tribunal in which this is administered, and that is the question I asked you about.

"Secretary BAKER. Shall I read the second schedule?

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the one I asked you about yesterday.

"Secretary BAKER. I will give you the substance of it, and will ask you, Governor, to follow me and see if I leave out anything that ought to be in:

"'There shall be a military-service tribunal for each local registration district under the National Registration Act of 1915 in Great Britain, or for any division of any such district which may be adopted for the purpose by the registration authority of the district, consisting of such persons, not less than 5 and not exceeding 25 in number, as may be appointed for the purpose by that authority.

"'2. There shall be appeal tribunals, acting within such areas as His Majesty may appoint, consisting of such persons as may be appointed for the purpose by His Majesty.

" '3. Tribunals may act through committees appointed by them, consisting wholly or partly of members of the tribunal.'

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The act I have before me says there shall be a local tribunal. It does not say a military tribunal at all.

"Secretary BAKER. It says a military-service tribunal in the act I have. There are two other provisions:

" 'There shall be a central tribunal for Great Birtain consisting of such persons as may be appointed for the purpose by His Majesty.

" '5. His Majesty may, by order in council, make regulations with respect to the constitution, functions, and procedure of the military-service tribunals, the appeal tribunals, and the central tribunals; and, so far as provision is not made for procedure by those regulations, the procedure of the tribunal shall be such as may be determined by the tribunal.'

"Then there are two brief sentences on the subject of appeal:

" '1. Any person aggrieved by the decision of the military-service tribunal and any person generally or specially authorized to appeal from the decision of that tribunal by the army council may appeal against the decision of the military-service tribunal to the appeal tribunal of the area.

" '2. Any person aggrieved by the decision of an appeal tribunal, and any person generally or specially authorized to appeal from the decision of that tribunal by the army council, may, by leave of the appeal tribunal, appeal to the central tribunal.'

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the copy I have before me in every case where you have read 'military-service tribunal' this says 'local tribunal.'

"Mr. GORDON. Mr. Secretary, did you read all the subsequent acts to the act of January 1916?

"Secretary BAKER. That is the only one I have, Mr. Gordon.

"Mr. GORDON. There have been two subsequent acts—one of January 27, 1916, and then one enacted in May.

"The CHAIRMAN. Suppose we put both of them in the record.

"Secretary BAKER. Governor Shallenberger has copies of both of them, and I will ask him to submit them for the record, because this is the only copy the War Department has, so far as I know.

"The papers referred to follow:

" 'GREAT BRITAIN

" 'Military Service Acts, 1916 (5 and 6 George 5, ch. 104)

" 'An act to make provision with respect to military service in connection with the present war. [January 27, 1916]'

" 'Be it enacted, etc., as follows:'

"I omit the first part of the act.

" 'SECOND SCHEDULE—CONSTITUTION OF TRIBUNALS

" '1. There shall be a local tribunal for each local registration district under the National Registration Act, 1915, in Great Britain, or for any division of any such district which may be adopted for the purpose by the registration authority of the district, consisting of such persons, not less than 5 and not exceeding 25 in number, as may be appointed for the purpose by that authority.

" '2. There shall be appeal tribunals, acting within such areas as His Majesty may appoint, consisting of such persons as may be appointed for the purpose by His Majesty.

" '3. Tribunals may act through committees appointed by them, consisting of members of the tribunal.

" '4. There shall be a central tribunal for Great Britain consisting of such persons as may be appointed for the purpose by His Majesty.

" '5. His Majesty may by order in council make regulations with respect to the constitution, functions, and procedure of the local tribunals, the appeal tribunals, and the central tribunal; and, so far as provision is not made for procedure by those regulations, the procedure of the tribunal shall be such as may be determined by the tribunal.

" 'Regulations made under this provision shall contain instructions to the local and appeal tribunals given with a view to securing uniformity of decision and practice amongst the several tribunals.

" 'Any order in council under this provision may be revoked or varied by any subsequent order in council, and any regulations made under any such order shall, as soon as may be, be presented to Parliament.

" '6. If any difficulty arises with respect to the constitution of local tribunals, or otherwise in relation to the operation of this act with respect to local tribunals, the local government board, or, as respects Scotland, the Secretary for Scotland may take any appointment and do anything which appears to them necessary or expedient for the establishment of those tribunals or for securing the full operation of this act with respect to those tribunals.

" 'APPEAL

" '1. Any person aggrieved by the decision of a local tribunal, and any person generally or specially authorized to appeal from the decision of that tribunal by the army council, may appeal against the decision of a local tribunal to the appeal tribunal of the area.

" '2. Any person aggrieved by the decision of an appeal tribunal, and any person generally or specifically authorized to appeal from the decision of that tribunal by the army council, may, by leave of the appeal tribunal, appeal to the central tribunal.' "

* * * * * * *

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Secretary, if it should develop, as it appeared from those two bills which you and I have submitted, that the British Government has rescinded its original declaration providing for a military tribunal and has changed it to a civil tribunal, would not that indicate that it is a matter of serious importance?

"Secretary BAKER. It might well be, and I have no objection to that character of tribunal. I am indifferent on that subject so long as it is a tribunal that can act with swiftness. Certainly and swiftness are what we desire.

"The Judge Advocate General will examine into that other question as soon as he gets the President's proclamation."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYDEN. All that I have quoted from the hearings demonstrates that neither the Secretary of War nor the Judge Advocate General had given any serious consideration to the question of how the draft tribunals were to be constituted. The gentleman from Nebraska, however, had devoted much thought and study to this question. He was quick to see the advantage of what Mark Sullivan calls "a fact of the most fundamental importance, the bigness of which it is hardly possible to exaggerate." Mr. Shallenberger offered an amendment to the bill as drafted by the War Department which the Military Committee was glad to accept, so that when H. R. 3545 was reported to the House it contained the following proviso, of which he is the author:

"Provided, That the President is authorized and empowered to constitute and establish throughout the United States tribunals for the purpose of enforcing and carrying into effect the terms and provisions of this act, together with such regulations as he shall prescribe and determine necessary for its administration. A majority of the members of each tribunal shall be citizens of the United States not connected with the Military Establishment."

When the selective-draft bill was under discussion in the House on April 28, 1918, this colloquy occurred:

"Mr. DEWALT. The only provision in the bill in reference to the selective mode is that which is contained on page 9, stating that the board shall be constituted and established by the President, and that a majority of the members of each board shall be citizens of the United States not connected with the Military Establishment.

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; and that amendment to the bill was put in on my motion. I asked the Secretary of War how these boards were to be constituted. I learned that there are 900 or more of these boards operating in England, and in my opinion, from the best information I could get, there will have to be several thousand boards operating in the United States. The Secretary of War could not assure me that these boards were to be civilian boards, and so I offered the provision that at least a majority of them should be civilians. I have since learned that in England every member of the local board is a civilian. In that country—a kingdom fighting for its life—the people are so insistent upon subordinating the military to the civil department of the Government that they have provided that every man who decides upon the right of a man to go to war or stay at home shall be a civilian. * * *

"Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Could we not rely upon Army officers to be more free from prejudice and favoritism than any other class?

"Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not think so; not upon a question of this sort. I think this plan will be accepted much more willingly by the country if the tribunal is a civil body."

HISTORY OF THE PROVISION IN THE SENATE

The War Department draft of the bill was likewise introduced in the Senate without any provision for the establishment of local and district boards, which corroborates the fact that no one in the Department realized, in the beginning, the importance of creating such boards. On May 28, a week after the House bill containing the Shallenberger amendment had been reported, the Senate agreed to an amendment to its bill which was offered by Senator Kellogg, of Minnesota. The Kellogg amendment is as follows:

"The President shall make rules and regulations to carry out the terms and provisions of this section and provide for the issuance of certificates of exemption or partial or limited exemption and for a system to exclude and discharge individuals from selective draft. There shall be created under the direction of the President local tribunals in the several States or subdivisions thereof, composed of the members of the local civil government, to decide all questions of exemption under this act, and also all questions arising under the draft for partial military service or for including or discharging individuals or classes of individuals from the selective draft, which shall be made under the rules and regulations aforesaid, and shall also provide for an appeal tribunal."

The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause in the House bill and inserted its bill as one amendment. The entire subject matter being in conference, it was possible for the conferees to work out the details of the law as we now know it.

In view of the approval given to the Shallenberger amendment by the House Committee on Military Affairs and because of the favorable action taken by the House and Senate, the War Department was, by that time, fully alive to the merits of his proposal. I have no doubt but that the Provost Marshal General assisted the conferees in working out the details of the last half of section 4 of the Selective Draft Act. But to say that any administrative officer conceived this plan is not correct, as I have demonstrated by the testimony taken when the War Department first presented this matter.

Far be it from me to detract in any way from the excellent record made by the executive branch of the Government in the administration of the draft law. The officials of every degree have performed wonders of work, but surely there is glory enough to go around without assigning credit for wise legislation where it does not belong. The country has a right to know, and history should record, that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives have not blindly accepted every departmental suggestion, but have acted with courage and intelligence on many notable occasions. If time would permit, I could mention numerous exhibitions of the same kind of statesmanship by other members of the committee, but in view of the wide publicity that has been given to claims of authorship for the local and district board provisions of the Selective Draft Act, I thought that it was due to the House that the credit for the origination of this legislation be given to one of its most able and distinguished Members, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Shallenberger]. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word. I think this bill ought to go to the conference committee with the Senate conferees as free as the House conferees. If we bind them on these two matters, we practically bind them on almost everything else that is in controversy in the bill.

We all know that when men go into conference between the two Houses on legislation, it is to the disadvantage of one set of conferees if they have already been tied hand and foot by instructions from the House from which they go and which they represent. It seems to me that our conferees on all the differences which exist between the two Houses on this legislation would be woefully handicapped if we should instruct them, no matter what the other differences are, that they cannot do anything on these two propositions unless they come back to the Senate and get further instructions.

For that reason it seems to me unwise to adopt the motion of the Senator from Missouri, and I hope it will be rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, we have heard a great deal in the discussion of the conscription bill about volunteer enlistments. I now find that the Civilian Conservation Corps is offering a good deal of competition to enlistments in the Army. I should like to read to the Senate a clipping from a Denver newspaper of 10 days ago, as follows:

C. C. C. OFFERS JOBS TO YOUTHS—NEEDN'T BE ON RELIEF TO ENROLL NOW

The Denver Bureau of Public Welfare is again accepting applications for the Civilian Conservation Corps, Miss Bernice Reed, director of the bureau, announced yesterday.

Miss Reed pointed out that regulations concerning applicants have been changed, and it is no longer necessary that enrollees come from families on relief. Youths between 17 and 23½ years of age will be accepted immediately, she said.

"As far as I now know, the Denver quota is unlimited, and the C. C. C. is seeking as many young men as possible," Miss Reed said.

"Seeking as many young men as possible."

"The youths will be trained in various occupations, including bridge building, automobile and radio repair and operation, photography, cooking and baking. Other training courses will be opened."

In addition to the age limitations, an applicant must be unmarried, a citizen of the United States, and in good physical health. The pay is $30 a month.

I do not know how we can get men in the Army with that kind of competition furnished by another department of the Government which was set up to take care of boys who are unemployed, and whose parents are in need of assistance.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MEAD in the chair). The Senator from Michigan will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The motion of the Senator from Missouri covers two separate and unrelated instructions. Is his motion divisible?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, under the rule, it is.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the motion be divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first instruction contained in the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may not the first instruction be stated by the clerk?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let us have a quorum first because it will have to be stated again.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Andrews	Davis	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lodge	Sheppard
Bailey	Gerry	McKellar	Stewart
Barkley	Gibson	Maloney	Taft
Bilbo	Gillette	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Green	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Gurney	Murray	Townsend
Byrd	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hatch	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Hayden	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Herring	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Overton	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may the first instruction be reported from the desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senate, the clerk will state the first instruction in the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The CHIEF CLERK. The first instruction reads as follows:

The Senate instructs the conferees on the part of the Senate upon Senate bill 4164—

(1) Not to agree to any change in the provision of the bill as it passed the Senate fixing the ages of registration at 21 to 31, inclusive.

Mr. LODGE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. Then there is but one proposition confronting the Senate at the present time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WHITE (when Mr. HALE's name was called). I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am informed that, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I am, therefore, at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are detained by illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. BARKLEY. My colleague the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] who I understand would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—23

Ashurst	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Bulow	Johnson, Calif.	Nye	Van Nuys
Capper	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	La Follette	Schwellenbach	Wheeler

Chandler	Holman	Pepper	Tobey
Chavez	Holt	Reed	Truman
Donahey	King	Reynolds	Tydings

So the first instruction in the motion of Mr. CLARK of Missouri was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the second instruction in the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the instruction be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the second instruction.

The CHIEF CLERK. The second instruction reads:

(2) To agree with the provision of the House bill known as the Fish amendment providing for a postponement of the registration for 60 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WHITE (when Mr. HALE's name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. If he were present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I am, therefore, permitted to vote and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are detained by illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily absent.

I also announce the following pair on this question:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. Announcing my general pair as on the previous vote, I am permitted to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], who would vote "yea"; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who would vote "nay."

I desire also to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—19

Adams	Gillette	Norris	Van Nuys
Ashurst	Hayden	Nye	Walsh

So the second instruction in the motion of Mr. CLARK of Missouri was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the order of the Senate, the Chair appoints the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment to Senate bill 4204 was adopted, be reconsidered, in order that I may offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I have no objection to that being done.

Mr. TAFT. I now offer the amendment, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 11 and 12 of the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the words "the stabilization of the economies, and the orderly marketing of products," and at the end of line 25 it is proposed to insert the words:

Such loans shall only be made for the purpose of assisting in the development of resources which are defined by the President as strategic and critical materials or of resources and materials which are not produced in the United States in appreciable quantities and which are required for use in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that that matter cannot be considered today. I suggest that we suspend at this time. The Senator does not want to proceed to discuss the matter today, does he?

Mr. TAFT. No. I should like to proceed the first thing tomorrow, if I may obtain the floor.

Mr. President, I ask that my amendment to the committee amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I am sure it will be recalled that earlier in the day I had the floor, and permitted myself to be displaced so that we might take up the business which has just been concluded. I will appreciate it if the privilege can be accorded me to be permitted to resume in the morning.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

Mr. TAFT. I have no objection.

REFERENCE OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS TO CONFEREES—AMENDMENT OF RULE XXVII

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 310) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That clause 2 of Rule XXVII of the Senate rules is hereby repealed.

Rule XXVII is hereby amended by adding a new clause as follows:

"Clause 2. All bills and joint resolutions shall be read twice and, without debate, referred to conferees."

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

THE FINANCIAL PROBLEM OF SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Many Members of this body and of the House during the past year have been interested in the financial problem of small business. It may be appropriate for me to announce now that the temporary National Economic Committee has been studying the problem for more than a year. The subject has been examined at the direction of the T. N. E. C. by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Hearings were held in numerous cities throughout the United States, in Portland, Oreg.; Seattle, Wash.; Denver, Colo.; Houston, Tex.; Detroit, Mich.; Scranton and Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; and Fall River, Mass. In each of those cities representatives of small business were invited to make their needs known, and the information secured through personal interviews with businessmen in each city has been used in the preparation of a report which has been just handed to the T. N. E. C. by the Investment Banking Section of the Securities and Exchange Commission. This report has been approved for printing. Unfortunately it will take the Government Printing Office several weeks to complete the publication of the report.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF FREE PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. President, I have before me a summary of that report which I should like to insert in the RECORD. This material, which has been compiled by the S. E. C., contains an apparently complete diagnosis of the problem of small business. Entitled by its authors, "The Financial Problem of Small Business," it might well have been called Decentralization of Business and the Encouragement of Free Private Enterprise.

It is clear from this study that the principal obstacle to the prosperous development of small business is the difficulty experienced by the small businessman in securing venture capital with which to finance his operations. Credit is also difficult to obtain for reasons that are analyzed in the report. Copies of the report will be available for examination at the office of the executive secretary of the T. N. E. C. in the Apex Building.

Two possibilities of meeting the need for credit and venture capital in a manner calculated to encourage both the establishment of new enterprises and the maintenance of old ones, are discussed in the report. Both of them, it is suggested, would have the effect of stimulating competition and of tending to reverse the trends which have resulted in a marked concentration of the business population.

The first is the suggestion that local banks which, under present conditions, find it difficult if not impossible to make the sort of loans small business needs, should be encouraged to do so by some legislation under which loans of this character might be placed upon an insured basis. This device would be designed to promote the extension of needed credit which cannot now be secured because the assets which small business can offer are not as marketable as necessary to justify the ordinary commercial bank in accepting them as the basis for loans.

The second possibility which is discussed from the point of view of providing a new source of venture capital is the establishment of regional finance corporations under legislation which would enable the Government to cooperate in the establishment of such institutions by the purchase of preferred stock while allowing private capital to supply, through the common stock, the real venture capital and to direct the management. This proposal, made some time ago by Chairman Frank, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, would, like the guaranty of loans, have the effect of providing Government aid in a field which is not now served, without imposing any degree of Government control upon the private enterprise to be fostered.

I have personally found the discussion of great interest because the whole study proceeds upon the theory that free, private enterprise should be stimulated and encouraged. Many States, including those of the West, which are now beyond the area of highly developed industry, would be among the first to benefit from the stimulation and decentralization of enterprise and there is much material in this report which will be of great interest to businessmen in such areas. The highly populated areas will also find it of interest because the continued prosperity of States in such a region depends upon the development of those other regions which are now being held back because small business is suffering a lack of capital and credit.

SMALL BUSINESS THE BASIS OF PROSPERITY

The statistical data which have been accumulated for this report indicate that there are now about 2,400,000 business units in the United States of which those which have assets of more than $5,000,000 each, though they constitute only about 1 percent of the business population, employ most of the Nation's workers. Of the 2,400,000 business units in the country, more than 90 percent have assets of less than $250,000 each. It is clear from the reading of this report that these small businesses constitute the most important segment of our national economy and that the thought of legislators and businessmen should be directed toward the solution of the problems of such enterprise.

This report has been prepared under the able direction of Mr. Peter R. Nehemkis, Jr., special counsel for the Securities and Exchange Commission, whose work has been particularly clear and effective. It consists of some 211 pages and is divided into 2 parts. Part 1 consists of a general analysis of the economic and financial aspects of small business. Part 2 consists of statistical data, field studies, and certain special studies dealing with some of the newer types of finance institutions which have been specializing in the financing of small business.

I have also arranged to have a copy placed in the Library of Congress, so that those who are interested may examine it pending the printing of the report by the Government Printing Office.

I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the summary of the report which I have prepared may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF REPORT

Formerly local wealthy individuals were almost the sole source of equity capital for local enterprise, but the report shows that today group efforts appear to be replacing individual efforts in the supply of venture money. The growing practice by individuals of placing their savings with savings banks, life-insurance companies, building and loan associations, or the purchase of stock in the great corporations, has tended to syphon off money which would otherwise be used for investment in local enterprise. The integration of a considerable part of local business into national organizations which themselves finance their various dealers, has made considerably more difficult the financing of the remaining independent local enterprises.

Investment banking appears to have played virtually no part in the financing of small business since the underwriting and marketing of securities—the traditional business of the investment bank—is geared almost exclusively to the requirements of large enterprise. The overwhelming preponderance of small business is unincorporated, consequently only a small sector at best can avail itself of investment-banking machinery.

While the investment trust presents important possibilities as a mechanism for providing equity capital to intermediate-sized business, it has seldom been used for that purpose. As now constituted the investment trust offers little promise as a financing medium to the small enterprise.

Traditionally, the commercial bank has been a major source of credit to local enterprise. The local bank was completely integrated into the life of its community; its management and ownership were in local hands; the business potentialities of its borrowers were known intimately. Frequently the directors and principal stockholders were also themselves financially interested in local ventures. But with the advent of the depression of the thirties and the resulting credit strain upon the local banking system, the procedures for extending credits broke down.

Much of the small business enterprise on which local commercial and individual activity depends is not in a position to meet the existing lending standards of commercial banks. Commercial banks which are under direct public supervision do not act without justification in restricting credit to small business. The position adopted by the commercial banker that the funds at his disposal belong not to him but to his depositors and therefore can be loaned only to individuals and enterprises whose assets and future prospects make repayment certain is fundamental to sound banking practice, the report states. Under this responsibility the business prospects of a considerable proportion of the smaller enterprises at any given time is not such as to warrant bank credit. The heart of the credit problem has been and continues to be that large group of small businessmen whose enterprises are not so firmly established and whose personal resources are not so great as to be able to satisfy the existing standards of commercial banking. The report traces the experience of the Federal Housing Administration, the Federal Reserve banks, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in endeavoring to fill up the void. It also deals with the newer financing agencies which have become the bankers for small business—the accounts finance companies, the factors, the personal-loan companies, and the trade creditor.

The report makes no specific recommendations. But evidence indicates that of the existing financial institutions, the investment trust or company appears to be the instrumentality the form of which is most suitable for providing equity capital to the incorporated sector of small business.

With respect to the provision of long- and short-term credit, the report points out that credit is being successfully extended to small business, witness the phenomenal and profitable growth of the "retailers" of credit—the accounts finance company, the factor, the personal-loan companies, etc. The successful experience of these lenders is due largely to their having developed such techniques and methods as "(a) pooling of risks; (b) routine procedures for appraisal, accounting, and servicing; and (c) establishment of schedules of charges appropriate to each class of risk as well as to individual risks. In other words, these 'retailers' of credit have been successful in financing small business because they have devised 'mortality tables' expressly designed for the financing of small business."

It is suggested that encouragement be given to the organization of additional finance and factoring companies "by encouraging the organization of additional finance and factoring companies of moderate size and a wider extension of the field of activity of the existing companies, coupled with some machinery for the coordination of their functions and activities in such a way as to reduce costs and to improve terms, the deficiency in credit facilities for small business might, in part, be remedied. Consideration should also be given to the desirability of providing insurance against losses sustained by such intermediary institutions either by an agency of government or by a corporation privately financed and expressly organized for that purpose."

While recognizing that the making of "capital" loans by commercial banks is open to serious question, the report states that "the practice, nevertheless, merits further thought in considering the entire problem of financing small business. If it is deemed advisable for the commercial bank to further extend its aid to small business in this direction, it must be recognized that facilities will have to be provided to protect the banks against the nonliquid and nonmarketable character of the assets which they will be required to hold, as well as against the added risks involved. Consideration should be given to the advisability, under suitable safeguards, for the Federal Reserve banks or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation assuming the role of guarantor on such loans. The basic principle for such an insurance arrangement has already been embodied in a legislative proposal."

The report reviews certain of the measures which have already been proposed to Congress for the provision of more adequate long-term and intermediate credits for small business, such as Senator MEAD'S bill, which provides for the creation of an industrial-loan corporation, which would utilize the existing machinery of the Federal Reserve System. Reference is also made to other proposals to overcome the deficiencies of the existing commercial bank system in supplying credits to small business, such as the creation of a capital-credit banking system as a supplement to the existing banking structure. Commenting on this proposal, the report states "those who have urged such proposals believe that such a banking system is required not only for small and intermediate size businesses but for business as a whole since only through such banks can equity financing be provided."

The report also contains a discussion of the recent proposal by Chairman Jerome N. Frank, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, for the establishment of a system of regional finance companies. In conclusion the report states that "it cannot, however, be emphasized too strongly that merely to reduce the cost of credit or to make its supply more abundant will not solve all of the small businessman's problem. Nor can we afford to overlook that, in addition to adequate capital and credit facilities, small business also requires that its operating efficiency and technical equipment be improved. Small business must, in order to survive, match the operating and developmental efficiencies which large business enjoys through its expert accounting, managerial, and operating techniques."

"Just as the credit and marketing problems of the farmer have been dealt with successfully because they have been delimited and special solutions developed for particular needs, so, too, the capital and credit problem of small business requires to be broken down into its component parts and special solutions found for its peculiar requirements."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I rise to pay high compliment to the distinguished chairman of the committee, who has just given us a résumé of a part of the report which will come from that committee when its work is completed. I wish to say to him and to the Senate that he has touched upon one of the major problems of our time. Adequate credit facilities to small business represent a basic, fundamental problem which must be solved if we are to reach a solution of the economic and social difficulties which beset our country.

Mr. President, for 5 years I have sponsored legislation which would make available in larger volume the idle funds which are now stored away in the Nation's banks. Studies made on this subject by various authorities, including the Russell Sage Foundation, Moody's Investors, and Filene's of Boston, indicate that the credit facilities of small business are rapidly approaching the vanishing point. Of course, there is no glamour or romance in a study of this nature or in a program such as has been recommended by the committee investigating this problem; but I wish to say to the Members of the Senate that before we reach a solution of our troublesome economic and social problems we shall have effected a solution of the problem which has just been presented by the Senator from Wyoming. I commend him and his associates on the committee for this splendid, constructive, and much-needed recommendation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, is it the wish of the majority leader to recess at this time or to continue in session?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think we should suspend at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it understood that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] is to have the floor tomorrow when the Senate convenes?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is entirely agreeable.

Mr. TAFT. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations in the Army, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nominations of several sanitary engineers for promotion in the Public Health Service.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

POSTMASTER GENERAL—FRANK C. WALKER

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on last Friday the Senate confirmed the nomination of Mr. Frank C. Walker as Postmaster General of the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified. The place is vacant, and Mr. Walker desires to take the oath.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, September 10, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Christ of God, we kneel before Thy cross for the world is steeped with sorrow as a flood of wrath is falling upon its bleeding heart. O God, beneath Thy guiding hand we pray that Thy word may be our law and Thy paths our chosen ways of peace. In the spirit and word of our President we wait at the altar of prayer in gratitude that throughout the years, as a republic, we have grown in numbers, wealth, and power. Almighty One, hold this Congress to the tremendous realization that democracy cannot breathe and survive on the ragged rocks of racial hate, in isolation, in the sands of a bigoted nationalism, or even behind the ramparts of steel. Forbid that our people should placidly rest on the retreating edges of an entangled spiritual wilderness and thus lose their way. Grant that we may harken to those sublime virtues which echo from Calvary—namely, honesty and purity, unselfishness and sacrifice—and weave them into the woof of our national life, guided by the Master's hand. We pray that in full and final renunciation, we may crucify all false notions, that the sin in us may be hated as we hate it in others. O Prince of Peace, the Ancient of Days, come to all humanity and ever be its ruler, guardian, and guide. In Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, September 7, 1940, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] at a recent convention of rural carriers held in St. Louis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by Mr. George W. Grupp appearing in the New York Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a newspaper article entitled "Where We Stand on Both the Army and Navy Equipment," written by a distinguished West Virginia journalist, Mack Johnson, the son of my colleague from West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, over a week ago I extended an invitation to the Republican presidential nominee, Mr. Willkie, to debate with me. I have offered him this opportunity to show to the Nation that he is a regular guy and will go out and do what he challenges others to do. What have I heard from Mr. Willkie? While the Nation waits I have heard nothing but silence.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I have the same authority from Mr. Willkie that I presume the gentleman has from the President and by that authority I am willing to meet him anywhere any time.

Mr. PATRICK. Sold. I gladly accept a go with the brilliant and capable Congressman from Ohio. The debate will now start at the proper time. He is no substitute but quite equal to the original. I thank the gentleman very kindly and I am glad to get the challenge over with and off my hands.

In one way or another the debate will soon start.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, if I do not misinterpret the press it states that the chairman of our Military Affairs Committee is perfectly willing and anxious to recede on the Fish amendment. I hope this is not authentic. I hope that I have probably misread the statement. It seems to me when our conferees have been appointed that they should not ahead of time say that they are willing to go against the thing that the House has voted. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is present and if I am mistaken I wish he would explain it. It seems to me that the House should have this information.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEYER of California. I yield. I want the gentleman to tell us.

Mr. MAY. I may say to the gentleman that that newspaper report is entirely inaccurate on that. I never make it a practice to say what the conferees will do before they meet.

Mr. GEYER of California. I thank the gentleman. I was quite sure the gentleman would not do that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. JENSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, today the treats are on Iowa, the bread-basket State of the Nation.

This noon the House restaurant, and the Republican and Democratic lunchrooms will serve you butter made at the Exira Creamery located in my home town of Exira, Iowa.

They were kind enough to send me a 20-pound tub of this fine butter, expressing the wish that I would dispose of it in this manner. This butter has won gold medals all over the country, due to the fact that the dairy farmers, the cream haulers, the creamery board, and all the employees cooperate with their able butter-maker, Mr. Jens P. Jensen, in the practice of every sanitary measure possible to insure that the finished product be sweet and tasty. I know you will like this good Iowa butter. [Applause.]

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, yesterday J. L. Garvin, called by the Washington Post the "dean of all British publicists," wrote the following in the London Observer:

The United States, when the Presidential election is over and the clouds of controversy cleared away, will become a mighty belligerent at the overwhelming demand of her people, irrespective of party.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Wendell L. Willkie said yesterday—

I shall never lead this country into another European war. And when I say that I mean it.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that fulfillment of this solemn promise of this great American is our only hope for peace as against the fulfillment of this solemn prophecy of this distinguished Britisher.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two items, one a letter that I have addressed to the United States attorney, northern district of New York, with reference to his failure to act in any way in reference to Fritz Kuhn, written by myself, and secondly, an item "What price conscription of wealth?" taken from the Southern California Business magazine issued by the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I am again interested in Mr. Wallace's statement that the Republicans are obstructing the defense program. I want to know from Mr. Wallace and also from Attorney General Jackson whether they are going to have enough intestinal fortitude to come out and deport Harry Bridges or prosecute him before the election, or whether they are afraid they may lose some of the "fifth columnist," Communist votes by their action in prosecuting Harry Bridges.

With the House vote at least 362 to 20 to sustain the rule and 332 to 42 against Harry Bridges, I do not see why there should be this failure to act. Is it purely political? Are they going to consider the welfare of this Nation or are they going to consider a few "fifth columnist" votes? [Applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes in reply to the Attorney General's opinion sustaining the transfer of the overage destroyers.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the gentleman is going to discuss the legal aspect of the Attorney General's opinion in reference to the destroyers?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. I withdraw my reservation of objection, and hope everybody is here to hear it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on two subjects and to include therein some short quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

HOUSING IN CONNECTION WITH NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. COLMER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 594

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I again wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that petition No. 35 is on the Speaker's desk, and that it lacks 21 names of being filled. Each day we sit here with our hands folded we are responsible for the killing of 8 men in the coal mines of the United States and the making of 6 widows and 15 orphans, and every day after we adjourn, if we do, the same process will go on.

As a humanitarian matter, I appeal to the Members of the House who have not so far signed that petition to come forward and do so. Let us take a fair and free vote on that subject. Let us see if we cannot protect the men who are doing the work in this country in all our tremendous number of coal mines all over the United States. There is every economic reason why we should do so, and certainly no possible doubt about its being in the interest of humanity and the men, women, and children of America. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS] today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests. First, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Andrew C. McLaughlin, head of the Department of History, of the University of Chicago, and Claude H. Van Tyne, head of the Department of History of the University of Michigan, entitled "A History of the United States for Schools."

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice the gentleman received permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD last week, and then when the RECORD came out there were five or six extensions, parts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6. The gentleman does something indirectly which the rules of the House do not permit him to do directly. I have no objection to the gentleman extending his own remarks, but I believe he should comply with the rules of the House when he gets permission to extend his remarks and not break his remarks up into five or six parts so that he will be going beyond the rule, which requires him to bring in an estimate and then get permission if he has over two and one-half pages. I am not going to object, but I believe the gentleman should stay within the rules.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if the gentleman makes a request for an insertion in the RECORD and it does not run over two and one-half pages he has a right, as long as the House gives him unanimous consent, to make the request as often as he chooses. May I say here that it is not the gentleman from Montana any more than other Members of the House who is responsible for the fact that we are piling up at this session of Congress one of the largest CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS we have ever had in all the history of this Nation. It is a shame, too, not because of the gentleman from Montana, but because all the Members of the House are making many insertions in the RECORD.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. SABATH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on two different subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

NAVAL RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10406) to authorize the appointment of graduates of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps to the line of the Regular Navy, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most forward steps with reference to the officer personnel that has been proposed to this House in the 25 years I have been a member of this committee. The bill simply permits students who have finished in the 26 colleges the R. O. T. C. course to be eligible after serving 1 year on active duty to get a regular commission in the line of the United States Navy. This simply means another method by which officers will be brought into the Navy.

Mr. RICH and Mr. MAAS rose.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the gentleman on permitting these graduates of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps to get commissions, but I am wondering how they are going to be permitted to go into the line of officers.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. He has a perfect right or opportunity to become an admiral of the United States Navy by passing the usual examinations, and every opportunity will be accorded him that is accorded an ensign from the Naval Academy.

Mr. RICH. Then I congratulate the gentleman on this bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAAS. This bill does exactly what we did for the Army under the Thomason Act several years ago and it simply brings the Navy in line with the policy of the Army in this regard.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, the bill has the unanimous support of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As far as I know there is no objection to the bill. It is recommended by the Department and it is a forward step in giving the poor boy an opportunity to become an officer in the United States Navy and is the best bill to accomplish that purpose that has ever been presented to the Congress.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. That is what I wanted to ask a question about. This bill will give, will it not, the rank and file of poor boys an opportunity to go into the United States Navy and will also give the sons of the rank and file of the people who do not have political pull an opportunity to become officers in the Navy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right exactly. There will be some 7,200 boys that will be in these 26 universities and it gives each one of those boys an opportunity and a square deal in getting a commission in the United States Navy as a line officer. The only way today you can get a commission is through the Naval Academy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question in this way? I think it was in the last session that our friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] made a presentation here one day with reference to promotion of officers in the line of the Navy. Has the situation changed around to where it is no longer necessary to retire these men around the ages of 41 to 45?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We have a provision written in the law that as long as a limited emergency exists no fit officer can be retired.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. As I gather it, this is purely for the boys in the colleges?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. KELLER. Will not that prevent the boys on the ships from getting up?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, no.

Mr. KELLER. Why not?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The boy on a ship has another way of going up. He has a right to go to the Naval Academy every year from the line of the Navy as common seaman to the Naval Academy, if he can qualify. Unfortunately, only five qualified last year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That officers of the Naval Reserve commissioned therein upon graduation from the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps shall be eligible for appointment to commissioned rank in the line of the Regular Navy in such numbers as the President may deem necessary. Officers so appointed shall, upon appointment, occupy the same grade, with the same precedence, occupied by them in the Naval Reserve.

SEC. 2. All appointees authorized by section 1 of this act shall, on June 30 of the calendar year in which appointed, be less than 26 years of age, shall, on the same date, have completed at least 1 year of continuous active duty on board ships of the Navy, and shall, before appointment, establish their moral, physical, mental, and professional qualifications in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

SEC. 3. Each officer appointed pursuant to the foregoing sections to the grade of ensign and each officer so appointed to a grade above that of ensign shall, respectively, become eligible for promotion, or for consideration by a line selection board as of the date the line officer next junior to him becomes so eligible: Provided, That the qualification of sea service prescribed in section 11 (c) of the act of June 23, 1938 (52 Stat. 948), shall not apply to such officers while in the grade to which originally appointed.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2 after line 16, insert:

"SEC. 4. Any officer of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve may, with his own consent, be employed on active duty other than training duty in time of peace for such periods as the Secretary of the Navy may determine: Provided, That pay and allowances of officers employed on active duty pursuant to this section shall be paid from appropriations for 'Pay, subsistence, and transportation of Naval Personnel' and 'Pay, Marine Corps,' as the case may be."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT AS MIDSHIPMEN AT UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 10438) to extend the age limits for applicants for appointment as midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill concerning the age limits?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman from Michigan is correct, and I will merely state this. Under the law today the age limit is from 16 to 20 years. Under this proposal we are providing a new age limit from 17 to 21. The age limit for the Academy at West Point is 17 to 22, and we are making the age limit from 17 to 21 in the Navy. This does not apply to the boys appointed this year where the age limit is from 16 to 20, but from now on we hope the age limit will be from 17 to 21.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Why should we not have exactly the same age limit for West Point and the Naval Academy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is due to the fact we have a different system for officers reaching a certain rank at certain ages which does not exist in the Army.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand the bill, this change this year applies to the maximum, but not to the minimum age.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; it does not interfere at all this year. It stands just like it is this year.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. If I have a vacancy at Annapolis for next year, of course I have until a certain date to fill it, but as I understand this bill if it becomes a law and I want to nominate a boy over 20, I can nominate him?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It provides that for entrance in the year 1941, the minimum age shall not be less than 16. That is the minimum age.

Mr. COCHRAN. How about the maximum?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The maximum age will be 21, if this bill becomes law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy must be not less than 17 years of age nor more than 21 years of age on April 1 of the calendar year in which they enter the academy.

SEC. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, following the word "academy", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That for entrance in the year 1941, the minimum age shall not be less than 16 years."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF GRAVING DRYDOCK IN NEW YORK HARBOR

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4165) to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is the drydock bill carrying a $23,000,000 appropriation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman appeared before the Rules Committee this morning and a rule was granted. The report of the Rules Committee was unanimous. The gentleman is now attempting to take it up without the intervention of the rule?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly. Mr. Speaker, I went before the Rules Committee to ask for a rule on account of the amount of money involved. This is an authorization. No appropriation will be made until the 1942 Budget, but the Navy Department desires to incorporate it in its budget just as soon as the authorization has been granted.

As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has said, I appeared before the Rules Committee and have a unanimous report from that committee. If I am unable to get unanimous consent for this, then one day during the week the Rules Committee will present the rule. But I trust that the rule will not be necessary, and that the House will consent to the consideration of this bill under unanimous consent.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I congratulate the gentleman from Georgia, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, on the two bills that we have just passed. Now, let us get a little information with reference to this bill. This is to take effect in 1942. How many vessels will you have and what size vessels will they be that will be necessary to be reconditioned in this drydock?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me say to the gentleman and the House that this morning at 11 o'clock the Navy Department let a contract for 198 ships, the very tonnage that has been authorized by the increase act of 70 percent. So immediately they will start building those ships. Already they are building some 45,000-ton battleships in the New York Navy Yard and in the Philadelphia Navy Yard. When these ships are finished we do not have a navy-yard dock large enough to complete them, because they are being built on ways. This drydock must go hand in hand with those ships. It is highly necessary for this drydock in the New York Harbor, somewhere in that area. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] will not object, because the Budget will carry this item in the next Congress, after this authorization goes into effect.

Mr. RICH. I am not going to object, but I would like to get this information: How many of these 45,000-ton ships are you laying down at the present time?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We have appropriated for and are building nine right today. In the contract let at 11 o'clock today seven more were contracted for. Some of them go to New York. Some go to Philadelphia, because there are only certain yards in the country that can build them.

Mr. RICH. These drydocks will be sufficient for the ships of other sizes, as well as these large ones, so that they will not have to have a drydock for the 45,000-ton ships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. You have to have drydocks to meet these ships when they are built. This drydock will do that. Otherwise you have to tow those ships to Boston Navy Yard, which is several hundred miles away, with no steam and no control, which is a very hazardous thing to do.

Mr. RICH. What is it going to cost to build this drydock at New York to take care of these 45,000-ton ships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not to exceed $10,000,000, and I am advised by Mayor LaGuardia that in all probability the city of New York will give the land.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This proposed drydock is going to cost $10,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not exceeding $10,000,000, including the land.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman knows that the Navy Department built one of these big ships at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, and, after it was completed, it was found that it was bottled up. They could not get it to the sea unless they spent several million dollars to deepen the channel. Are you certain that after we spend $10,000,000 for this drydock we may not find that it is built so that big ships cannot get up to the drydock?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am hoping that will not confront the Navy.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. That did happen in Philadelphia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, the Navy spends millions of dollars each year keeping the Delaware River open so that the naval ships can go in.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But they built a large battleship at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, and after the ship was built it could not get out to sea until several million dollars was expended to deepen the river.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not recall the circumstance the gentleman refers to. There is nothing like that in the record.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I hope they do not do that with the funds authorized in this bill.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. How long does it take to build one of these ships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will take approximately 4 years.

Mr. REED of New York. And how long does it take to build the drydock?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If money is made available for this drydock in the year 1942 it will take 2 or 2½ years to build, so the drydock will be finished about the same time the ships are finished.

Mr. REED of New York. If the gentleman will yield for another question, how long does it take to build these cruisers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. About 4 years.

Mr. REED of New York. How many shipbuilding plants have we available to build cruisers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will tell the gentleman something of how contracts for these ships are allocated. We are trying to use certain industrial yards for the type of ships to which they are best suited. We are trying to concentrate construction of certain types at certain yards. We have plans for the cruisers to be built in certain yards, and the submarines in certain other yards.

Mr. REED of New York. I should like to get the information. I assume there are many shipyards available now for building cruisers.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I cannot give the gentleman accurate information on how many yards are available for building cruisers.

Mr. REED of New York. About how many are there?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. There are about six navy yards and seven industrial yards, but we do not give them all cruiser contracts. We give some battleship contracts, some airplane-carrier contracts. For instance, the Newport News Yard is concentrating on airplane carriers. The Philadelphia Navy Yard is concentrating on battleships, and the Boston yard on destroyers—and other yards. We are trying to work it out in the most efficient way possible.

Mr. REED of New York. How many cruisers are now on the ways being built?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I think about 50 contracts were made for cruisers just a short while ago.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to ask a brief question, is it not possible to step up the construction program beyond what the gentleman suggested a moment ago? It does not seem to me that we are entirely without ability to speed up our production of naval vessels.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me say in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Michigan, which is a very important one, that nothing retards the speed-up program more than lack of skilled labor. If we had today sufficient trained personnel in all the yards there would probably be a faster output. Unfortunately thousands if not hundreds of thousands of men have got to be trained to meet the demands of industry and of the yards. Just as far as that training program goes forward the finished product, the ships, will be turned out faster. If we had at the navy yards or in the country sufficient trained shipbuilders of all trades then you could speed up the program, but you cannot build ships any faster than you can get skilled people to do the work.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it is my belief that if the administration will expedite the checking of the availability of trained people throughout the United States, the naval program can and no doubt will be very greatly speeded up. I think it is a very important thing.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me call to the gentleman's attention the fact that $15,000,000 has already been appropriated to open up schools throughout the United States, and no doubt money will be asked for to train civilians to become qualified as shipbuilders and trained to become qualified in the various industries to accomplish what the gentleman asks.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. May I suggest at this point that throughout this country we have many shipyards, we have many men trained in the building of ships. It would seem that some action should be taken at this time to enlist the services of these trained men, men who are trained and ready.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I assure the gentleman that already everything humanly possible is being done.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is contemplated, I believe, that a great many of these large ships will be used in the Pacific.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is contemplated to have a large fleet in the Atlantic and a large fleet in the Pacific. We are driving at a total defense of this country.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is there any drydock facility on the Pacific coast sufficient to take these large battleships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; the Pacific coast is very fortunate in having plenty of drydock facilities.

Mr. HINSHAW. For the 45,000-ton ships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. The dry yards at Honolulu and Hunters Point certainly could take care of them, and also the drydock at Bremerton. They will be able to take any ship we are building.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this item for the improvement of the South Boston drydock?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The item of $6,180,000 is to put that great drydock in condition so it can cooperate in the major overhaul repair of all of the largest ships that will be in the Navy. This is in addition to the drydock that it is contemplated to build at New York.

Mr. TABER. That means machine shops?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It means machine shops, it means whatever is necessary. We have that drydock there now.

Mr. TABER. It means practically a duplication of the set-up of the Boston Navy Yard.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. The Boston Navy Yard cannot and has not facilities now to take care of anything but small craft. This is the largest drydock on the Atlantic coast, built by the State of Massachusetts, and given to the United States Government on some kind of terms. It has been lying idle for years. We propose now to utilize it so that they can take care of these ships that are built before the new drydock in New York is built.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, admitting that we are short of mechanics, could we not get them much quicker and secure better men if we would permit industry to take on apprentices, and save the Government a lot of money?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Industry is doing its very best. At the Newport News Yard they have an apprentice school of over a thousand apprentices right now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman made one comment that interests me very much and on which I am not well informed. That is with reference to the $15,000,000 appropriation, I believe it is, for the purpose of training men.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman give us a little information on that—where are these training schools, under whose direction are they operating, and what is the general approach to the problem?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I cannot go into that now, but I know through the N. Y. A. people who are certified are going into the high schools and into the machine shops. The Government pays them $30 a month while they are training these people. In my particular city, Macon, Ga., there are some 76 being trained, and this is going on all over the United States today. It is a most constructive and beneficial thing. When the $15,000,000 runs out it is hoped that the Congress will appropriate more money, because that is where we are going to get these men.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it not true also that the navy yards are taking on a great many apprentices?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider such proposals as may be made by the Port of New York Authority to provide an adequate site in New York Harbor or its vicinity and to construct or cause to be constructed thereon a graving drydock and facilities appurtenant thereto, under the powers and jurisdiction conferred upon said authority by the compact of April 30, 1921, between the State of New York and the State of New Jersey (42 Stat. 174), consented to by the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States (42 Stat. 174) to purchase, construct, lease, and/or operate a drydock in the port of New York district and under the powers conferred on said authority by the comprehensive plan for the development of the port of New York, adopted under and pursuant to the aforesaid compact by the States of New York and New Jersey, which comprehensive plan was consented to by the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States (42 Stat. 822), and, in the event that a proposal satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy is received, to submit, subject to approval of the President, to the Congress, an estimate for an appropriation of an amount equal to one-half the cost of said drydock and facilities appurtenant thereto, including the cost of any land acquired therefor, but in any event not to exceed $7,000,000, which shall be available for the purposes and subject to the limitations hereinafter stated.

SEC. 2. The location of the proposed drydock and its appurtenances shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 3. Any amount appropriated under the authority contained in this act shall be available only for the construction of a graving drydock with dimensions and structural strength sufficient, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, to accommodate the largest naval or merchant vessel built or building, together with an adequate site therefor, and shop, transportation, weight-handling, and other incidental appurtenances and facilities, according to designs and general plans and specifications to be submitted with said proposal by the Port of New York Authority (hereinafter called "the port authority") as a part thereof.

SEC. 4. (a) Any amount appropriated under the authority contained in this act shall be available for payments on account of a contract to be negotiated and entered into between the Secretary of the Navy and the port authority for the purposes herein stated.

(b) The contract so negotiated shall require the port authority to construct or cause to be constructed the graving drydock and to provide the appurtenances and facilities contemplated by the accepted proposal, to be completed and ready for use within such a time as may be specified in said contract by the Secretary of the Navy, without risk or expense to the United States, except as herein provided, and in accordance with plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy or at his direction by the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

(c) From and after the time said graving drydock and drydock facilities are ready for use, priority service shall be given in the drydock, or by means of other drydock facilities of the operator thereof acceptable to the Secretary of the Navy, to naval and other public vessels of the United States and to commercial vessels owned by the United States or by any corporation of which the majority of the stock is owned by the United States. The charges for docking such vessels shall be the actual direct operating costs, plus a predetermined allowance for profit and overhead charges, which overhead charges shall not include any interest or amortization upon the amount appropriated by the United States under this act and paid to the port authority on account of the contract to be negotiated and entered into between the Secretary of the Navy and the port authority as aforesaid.

(d) In time of war or national emergency, as declared by the President of the United States, the United States shall have exclusive priority for the use of said graving drydock and appurtenances.

(e) The said graving drydock and appurtenances shall be owned by the port authority, but may be leased to such private operator or operators as may, in the judgment of the commissioners of the port authority, be best suited to operate and maintain said drydock. The drydock shall be maintained continuously to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 5. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

SEC. 6. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent and in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended during the period in which such provisions of this act are in effect to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to proceed with the construction of the following public-work projects at a cost not to exceed the amount stated after each item enumerated:

"Third naval district: Graving drydock and accessory construction in New York Harbor, including acquisition of site, $10,000,000.

"Caribbean area: Graving drydock and accessory construction, including acquisition of site, $7,500,000.

"First naval district: Improvements to South Boston drydock, $6,180,000.

"SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] to preside over the House tomorrow.

DESIGNATION OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES, DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR TO ADMINISTER OATHS

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2627) to empower and authorize special agents and such other employees of the Division of Investigations, Department of the Interior, as are designated by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, to administer oaths in the performance of their official duties, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which bill is that?

Mr. DEROUEN. This is a Senate bill. The House amended the bill and the Senate has asked for a conference. It has appointed conferees and now I am asking to insist on the House amendments and for the appointment of conferees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN]?

There was no objection, and the Chair appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. DEROUEN, ROBINSON of Utah, and ENGLEBRIGHT.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, we have listened during the last week to various references to President Hoover's failures. It is true that he failed in a lot of things. He failed to draw his salary of $75,000 per year while he was President of the United States, leaving it in the Federal Treasury. His sons failed to form an insurance company for the insurance of Government property. He had built his own fishpond and never used battleships for fishing parties. His sons never rushed into the divorce courts. He never sold himself into political slavery to a labor organization for $500,000. He gave his collection of war stuff to the Government and built a museum for it which he paid for himself. He never packed the Supreme Court. He never killed pigs and then imported meat. Mrs. Hoover attended to her duties as a housewife and did not gallivant over the country writing about herself and selling it to the newspapers, nor did she ever sell soap over the radio. She never hob-nobbed with the anti-Americans or invited Communists to the White House. Hoover would have done a lot of constructive things if he would have had the support of a Republican Congress and Senate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an article by K. K. Kawakami and one by John Gunther, both appearing in the magazine Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the untimely death of Senator Lundeen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein an article appearing in a recent issue of the American Bar Association Journal by Maj. Claude B. Mickelwait on the legal basis for conscription.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein tables pertaining to the appropriations of the Congress and the preparedness program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is District of Columbia day. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY].

REORGANIZATION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 9525) to provide for the reorganization of the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole; and pending that request, I ask unanimous consent that time for debate be limited to one-half hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by myself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I am asking this action after conferring with the distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], who has cooperated in every way with the special subcommittee of which I have the honor to be chairman. Mr. RANDOLPH phoned me from Pittsburgh, Pa., this morning informing me he was taking a plane and hoped to be here before the bill is completed.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is this the so-called District of Columbia government reorganization bill which will give the bureaucrats the right to fire every employee under section 215, which provides for consolidations.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. No; this is simply a departmental reorganization bill, and it has no such provision in it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. H. R. 9525.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I think I am right. I object to limiting debate to a half hour. I believe we need about 2 days to debate this bill. Therefore, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin object to the bill's being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. No; but I certainly object to having only one-half hour of debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maryland have another request to submit?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I am asking for a limitation of debate. I am perfectly willing to enter into any agreement to fix the time that may be in accordance with the desires of the gentleman from Wisconsin. It is my understanding, however, that about 15 minutes is required by the gentlemen on the other side, and our side will require only about 15 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman mean to tell us that on a bill which will radically change the whole District government structure and will give the bureaucrats the right to fire every employee if they so desire we should be allowed only 15 minutes of debate?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I am sure that if the gentleman will read the bill he will find that quite the contrary is the fact, because this bill creates for the first time in the District government a civil-service bureau that protects all employees, who are not protected now.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Listen to this language in section 215 on page 10:

> Whenever the Commissioners deem it to be in the interest of the public good, efficiency, or economy, they may abolish or create any bureau or division within any department; consolidate such bureaus or divisions; reduce the number of employees; transfer, assign, or regroup any of the functions—

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Read further in that same section.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin (continuing):

> of any bureau or division; and may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, transfer employees and appropriations between departments, bureaus, and divisions.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The gentleman fails to read further on line 22, which is the important part of the section. He stops there.

Mr. SHAFER of Wisconsin. I have not had time. I have to get a breath now and then. I intend to read the other line:

> No department, board, or commission shall be created or abolished without the specific authority of Congress.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Two hundred and sixty-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

REORGANIZATION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the bill—H. R. 9525—is now being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole and, of course, under the regular rules, it would be read under the 5-minute rule. However, I have a tentative agreement with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] to fix some time for debate, and I am perfectly willing to see if we cannot reach an agreement, and I would suggest that debate be limited to not exceeding 1 hour, half of that time to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] to use some of his time now.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is necessary to exhaust the entire time allotted for discussion of this bill, for many reasons. In the first place, it has had long and careful preparation in the committee. I have been a member of the District Committee for 8 years and this whole question of reorganization has been recurring from year to year and this particular matter has received sustained attention and study all through the present Congress.

May I say a word of commendation in behalf of my good friend, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY], who has given so much attention to this matter. I think it would be a fine testimony to his diligence and sustained efforts if this bill could be passed today. He will leave us in this session of Congress and I think it will stand as somewhat of a monument to his efforts and devotion to the cause of reorganizing the government of the District of Columbia on lines that are efficient, and that will develop a maximum of efficiency for the money that is expended.

The District of Columbia government grew somewhat like Topsy. There was a basic pattern established about 60 years ago. Ever since that time we have been adding a little here, setting up a new board occasionally, prescribing new functions, and setting up new instrumentalities for articulating those functions, until now it presents somewhat of a patchwork, and it becomes absolutely essential and necessary that something be done about departmentalizing the functions of the District of Columbia and giving it a streamlined effect whereby the utmost of efficiency may be effected. All this work is contained in the bill that is before you at the present time.

The gist of the bill, of course, you will find in title II, which sets up 11 departments, describes the functions of those departments and also the directors who are to preside over the destiny of the various departments. We are providing for the management of a budget for the District of Columbia on an independent basis in the light of recent action of the Federal Bureau of the Budget.

We provide also for civil service and personnel direction. Heretofore, the District of Columbia has been operated on a sort of understanding or agreement basis with the Federal civil service whereby the same rules and regulations obtain, and they try to follow them insofar as possible, but there is no independent civil service commission operating for the District of Columbia at the present time.

We have sought to consolidate the municipal court and the police court so as to get a maximum of efficiency and, finally, to enlarge and particularize some of the powers that are necessary in the management of the District of Columbia so that it is not constantly necessary for the Commissioners to be coming to the Congress as suppliants asking for authority to change the name of a street or to grant a license for a conduit to run under some road or some other purely ministerial purpose.

A bill is before you today, therefore, to give efficiency, to streamline the operations of the government, to develop a higher degree of accountability, and to invest expanded managerial power in the Commissioners.

The bill sets up also an administrative assistant to the Commissioners whose duty it shall be to carry on studies constantly in the hope of improving that efficiency.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I understand the committee has reported the bill favorably.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They have; yes.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Including Members on both sides of the aisle?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. GILCHRIST. What group or interest is against the bill—any?

Mr. DIRKSEN. My good friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] raised a few questions, and he raised a very proper question, I would say.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I asked that in good faith in order to get both sides of the question, so I would know how to vote.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I do not want the RECORD to show that I raised a question that was not to the point.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, no.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This bill proposes to revamp and reorganize the entire government of the District of Columbia and give the bureaucrats wide authority to do so. Do you not believe that there should be a reasonable amount of time for consideration so that the Members of Congress may have an explanation of the measure, particularly in view of the fact we have had to devote so much of our time to highly important and controversial defense measures?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the gentleman is eminently correct, and may I say in response to his observation that this bill has been before the Congress for some time. It has been reported from the committee since May 1940. So that in the very nature of things it raises the presumption that the Members should be somewhat fortified as to the contents of the bill.

But, secondly, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] raised a very interesting question relative to the possible dismissal of employees under the bill, because there is a provision that in the interest of economy and efficiency the Commissioners may consolidate, may revise, and may streamline various agencies. That question was thoroughly discussed in the committee and I believe it was at my instance that a provision was written into the bill to the effect that no department, board, or commission shall be abolished unless the matter is first affirmatively passed upon by the Congress of the United States.

Secondly, with further respect to the matter of suspending and dismissing employees, there is now a civil-service provision in this bill whereby they can be suspended, dismissed, demoted, promoted only within the provisions of the bill itself and the civil-service title of this bill. So it was a very proper question raised and the committee dealt with it at considerable length.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is it not true that this bill provides better protection for the employees of the District than they now have?

Mr. DIRKSEN. As a matter of fact, the employees of the District of Columbia have no protection today, and could be very arbitrarily dismissed if there was any disposition to do so.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have the set-up here, and I notice that under the proposed consolidation there are a great number of independent boards. Is there any valid reason why these whisky snooper and sniffer duties should not be transferred to the Police Department? We now have a liquor monopoly in the District of Columbia, and the gentleman knows it, under the present set-up. Would it not be a good idea to let the Board make the regulations and let another agency, a law-enforcement agency, take care of enforcing the regulations?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In the first place, the gentleman does not know that there is a monopoly existing in the District of Columbia, and, in the second place, I deem it necessary to have the Alcohol Beverage Control Board, because the whole task of issuing permits, holding hearings, going into questions of rather meticulous regulation would throw an unjust and onerous burden upon the Police Department and would seriously hamper the affairs of the Police Department, because many of these are judicial in nature rather than of a policing character. So that Board is necessary today. The huge annual revenues from this source indicate the amount of work being done.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. After the gentleman's explanation, I will agree with the first part of it. I, however, reiterate my statement that the gentleman from Wisconsin knows there is a liquor monopoly in the District of Columbia, and I am speaking from facts and as the result of a comprehensive investigation. At a later date it will be clearly demonstrated that there is a liquor monopoly operating in the District of Columbia, and a vicious one, too, and it is just about as bad as the vicious milk monopoly which has a stranglehold in the Nation's Capital. Will the milk monopoly be curbed and the milk consumers in the District of Columbia be protected in any manner under this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. You cannot curb a milk monopoly, if you assume there is one, unless this Congress first authorizes the necessary legislation and investigation power whereby to do it. If the gentleman has any intimate information peculiarly within his own knowledge as to the extent of a liquor monopoly, I am sure that he ought to take an hour some day and give the House the information.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It would take about a day. If you will get me a day, I will take a day and show that we now have a most vicious liquor monopoly in the District of Columbia, as well as a most vicious milk monopoly, preying on the liquor and dairy-product consumers in the Nation's Capital.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall go to the Speaker with the gentleman any day and respectfully supplicate the Speaker to give him all the necessary time to develop that question.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEFAN. I am interested in the finances of the District of Columbia. I wonder in your study and discussion of this reorganization bill if you have come to any conclusion that through this reorganization there will be some economies reached, or whether or not through this reorganization we will be able at some time along the line to determine just exactly how much money really is necessary to operate the District of Columbia and the participation of the Federal Government?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I wish I might give the gentleman a very prophetic answer as to whether or not economies will be effected. I served on a special committee of the House of Representatives dealing with the reorganization of the executive branch of the whole Federal Government and devoted considerable study and attention to the problems that were raised by the reorganization bills and plans that came before this body. It was hoped at the time that substantial economies would be effected, and yet, very shortly after the first reorganization bill went into effect, the public pay roll went up approximately 55,000 people. To be sure, many of those went on the defense rolls, but there were a great many who had a purely civil status. So while we hoped against hope that some economies might be effected, it became cluttered up, of course, with defense considerations, and it is difficult to say where the line must be drawn and whether or not they could be and would be effected. It is pretty much to hope, I should say, in these days of growing Government functions, whether they are local or Nation-wide. While we believe that some economies will be effected, if they are not, at least this bill returns a greater value for the dollars expended for the District of Columbia than is now received for its tax dollars.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. What is the purpose of reorganization if you are not going to reach any economies? Is it for more efficiency—to get more work out of employees, or what?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say to the gentleman the avowed purpose is efficiency and economy.

Mr. STEFAN. But the gentleman says you are not going to have any economy, as far as you know.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As the gentleman indicates, that is a highly speculative question, but we feel there should and may be economies. Certainly the District of Columbia has no immediate relationship to the defense program, but I am sincere in expressing the hope that there will be some economies. Let us wait and pass judgment on it after the bill goes into effect. The District of Columbia government has been streamlined. We can then see whether or not any economies have been effected.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I share with the gentleman in believing that this reorganization bill comes to us with considerable to commend it because it comes from the hand of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY]. [Applause.] The gentleman has already pointed out that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY] worked hard on this bill. In my opinion, the gentleman from Maryland has real ability for reorganization. I served on the Committee on Claims under his chairmanship and found there that he was very effective in reorganizing the work of the Claims Committee. At one time, I am told, all claim bills were regarded with suspicion, and it was very difficult for just claims to receive consideration. The gentleman from Maryland established standards for the consideration of claims and put the work upon an entirely different basis. Then he adapted the omnibus rule, under which the bills which aroused objections could be set aside and not stymie consideration of the unquestioned bills. It was a revolution in House procedure, for which every Member should be grateful.

With reference to the bill before us, however, I desire some information growing out of membership on the District of Columbia subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations.

In the first place, what considerations led the committee to recommend a separate budget bureau, so to speak, for the District of Columbia, taking out of the hands of the regular Budget Bureau the power or opportunity to pass upon the estimates?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There were two considerations, and may I say to the gentleman I am speaking from a rather rusty memory, because I have not refreshed myself for some time on some of these provisions, and I must necessarily plunk into the pools of memory in the hope it will not mislead me. I think, however, it was the desire of the Federal Budget Bureau to get out from under the burden of handling the District budget with all the time and detail involved.

Secondly, it is quite apart from the Federal Budget itself and in the interest of the people's desire for a great many years for a separate budget. Whether or not it will work out as we hope remains to be seen, but at least we do two things if it does work out: We relieve the Federal Budget Bureau of the burden, and, secondly, we satisfy the District of Columbia and still retain, of course, the ultimate approving and appropriating power in the Congress itself.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I recognize that that is true, but it has always seemed to me that the theory of setting up the Budget Bureau was to have an agency pass upon estimates which was independent of the agency for which the estimates were sought. In this instance it seems to me we are going back on that principle by setting up a budget officer who is the creature of the agency, the District of Columbia, which is seeking the appropriation.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to my friends from Massachusetts and South Dakota that I think the answer to that, of course, is that the best you can expect is a perfunctory consideration from the Budget Bureau, especially with respect to problems that involve streets, schools, salaries of members of the fire department and police department, the opening of highways, the filing of suits for taxes and assessments, and all that sort of thing which are purely local in character and which so affects the efficiency of the District of Columbia, in my judgment. I am impressed by the fact that they were rather restricted by the Budget Bureau, and it is doubtful whether the Budget Bureau, considering the extra burden of work that is on it at the present time, can give to the District that kind of consideration the local budget demands.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. May I ask, then, if the budget officer contemplated under this bill will be a Federal officer?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; he will not.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. He will be appointed by the Commissioners?

Mr. DIRKSEN. He will be a part of the District government, not of the Federal Government.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then he will not be an independent budget officer?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

There is one other consideration. By an Executive order of many years ago it was made necessary that before a single piece of legislation affecting the District could be submitted to the House District Committee or the Senate District Committee it had to secure Budget clearance. If they wanted to change the name of Missouri Avenue to Podunk Avenue, let us say, it had to go down to the Bureau of the Budget, had to be considered there, and then came back with a highly formal opinion that this measure was in conformity with the President's program. It seems to me this is wholly unnecessary. While that is a rather extreme example, it happens so often that there had to be some relief from that restriction, and we went all the way over in giving them an independent budget.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is not that in conformity with general practice in municipal financing in all large cities of the country?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think it is. We recognize, of course, the relationship between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, and also the fact that the Federal Government makes a contribution.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And the same relationship exists between cities of the country, capital cities, and the States in which they are located.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes, except that the capitals of the respective States do not contribute so generously in terms of dollars out of their treasury for the support of the cities where the capitals are located.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But when there is a difference between actual receipts and estimated receipts and expenditures the States are not in the same position with reference to their capital cities as the Federal Government is with reference to the District of Columbia. They are not called in to bridge the gap as the Federal Government is.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then there are two other questions: Is there a provision in the bill—there may be but I have not found it—is there a provision in the bill that will prevent lobbying by employees of the District government for appropriations?

Mr. DIRKSEN. For appropriations?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes, on behalf of appropriations.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We put a paragraph in the bill which is a kind of miniature Hatch Act, which is found on page 19. I will read it to the gentleman:

> No person in the service of the District government is for that reason under any obligation to contribute to any political fund, or to render any political services, and he shall not be removed or otherwise prejudiced for refusing to do so.

In section 306, on page 14, you will find a provision to prevent officers and employees of any department of the District government from requesting increases in items of appropriations and estimates unless requested to do so by a committee or subcommittee of Congress.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. We are so situated here that we are under the gun, so to speak, if there is a local movement on behalf of some special appropriation. The third question is, Why is authority of the General Accounting Office in relation to District expenditures limited specifically to making post audits as is proposed in paragraph 1 of section 310?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If it were otherwise, there would be such a hiatus between the time when the expenditure would have to be made and the time you could get clearance from the General Accounting Office that you might have many situations where they would become terribly restricted; so we have to depend in a large measure on the Finance Department of the District of Columbia in that manner and let it go for post audit to the General Accounting Office.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it still possible for the Commissioners or the District government to get an advance decision from the Comptroller General as to the legality of any expenditure?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think it is.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Going back to the matter of the Budget that has been under discussion, when the question of Federal subsidy to the District of Columbia comes up, does that have to go through the Federal Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; it will not go through the Federal Bureau of the Budget any more than it went through there before in the sense that all the Federal Bureau of the Budget did heretofore was to indicate to the Congress what disparity there might be between receipts and disbursements and indicating that something had to be done in order to fill that gap. The matter was then left up to the Congress whether or not to lift the limit on real-estate taxation rates, for instance, or whether to dip into the Federal Treasury, but this is a situation with which we must deal year after year. As we come to grips with the officials of the District of Columbia government from time to time, I will say that this probably will work out just as well, if not better. There is a little more flexibility and it may be that there can be a revamping of the tax structure here so that the amount required out of the Federal Treasury from year to year may diminish rather than increase; but the Congress always has the approving power. The power of the Congress is never lost.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Here is a section which troubles me, and this is not a facetious question. On page 32, section 702 reads as follows:

The power and authorities conferred by this title are to be construed as in addition to and not by way of limitation of the powers now vested by law in the Commissioners.

Then we go on on pages 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38 and grant these Commissioners more power. Here is a sample of it on page 33:

To make, adopt, and enforce regulations for the regulation, licensing, and revocation of licenses of operators of moving-picture machines.

We do the same thing with reference to undertakers, embalmers, morticians, and so forth. Does the gentleman construe this grant of additional power as an additional grant according to the first paragraph of 702 which would permit these Commissioners to make regulations having effect of law which might be contrary to specific laws now on the statute books?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It would not be contrary to specific law, but rather would enlarge some of the powers that are limited but which exist at the present time.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Would it not be a good idea to put a provision in section 702 limiting the Commissioners to power so that they cannot make regulations having effect of law which are in conflict with existing law? In other words, put a limitation on it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If it is in conflict with existing law, it becomes a nullity.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But does it? This would be the later law. If you give them this additional authority, which gives them the power to make law, such law would be the latest law and would supersede existing law unless you specifically put a brake in there to protect existing law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman will observe that on page 1, title I—general legislation—there is this recital:

All acts and the parts of acts now in force relating to the District of Columbia not inconsistent with the provisions of this act shall remain in full power and effect and all lawful regulations promulgated under said acts in force and effect shall also remain in full force and effect.

The implication is that if anything is inconsistent, then, of course, it goes out and is superseded by this act.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I grant that, but that refers to existing law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Still this new proposed law grants additional power to make regulations having the effect of law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Right.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Under this particular grant of power the Commissioners could promulgate regulations having the effect of law and, being the later enactment, would supersede any conflicting existing law?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am afraid I do not follow the gentleman, but let me make clear what we have in mind here.

Mr McGEHEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. McGEHEE. This provision on page 32 which the gentleman from Wisconsin is talking about is merely an enlargement of the powers of the Commissioners, so that they may not be compelled to come to the Congress asking the passage of an act in every regulatory matter. Take a certain undertaker, for instance: We passed a bill in the District of Columbia Committee not long ago to permit him to reconstruct his place of business. The power to do this should be vested in the Commissioners. The Commissioners did not have the power to turn on the lights on the streets the morning that Congressman CALDWELL's son was killed out here on Connecticut Avenue. After this most unfortunate accident the Commissioners were compelled to come to the Congress asking the passage of an act to correct this situation. It is such regulatory powers this bill would invest the District Commissioners with. It is really to give them those regulatory powers without their coming to the Congress and worrying the Congress for the passage of an act every time they want to do something like that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman let me explain very briefly. I notice the gentleman from Wisconsin is looking at the chart. If he will look at the right-hand side of the chart, he will see listed there a dozen or fifteen boards. First, the accountants came in. They thought there ought to be standards of examinations for accountants, and then some kind of licensing procedure, so we set up a separate licensing provision for the accountants of the District of Columbia. Later came the architects, so we went through that procedure over again and set up an architectural licensing board. Later came the veterinarians, and I do not believe there is over one veterinarian in the District of Columbia, unless they look after the welfare of dogs rather than horses and cows. Anyway, we have a licensing set-up here dealing with veterinarians, how they shall practice, how they shall take their examinations, and what is necessary before they can qualify and be licensed. The same is true of pharmacists and optometrists. The same is true for men who practice the profession of real estate. The same is true of plumbers. There was a bill pending dealing with embalmers and morticians, and it never got through this House, although it was reported out of the committee. We did get one through dealing with beauticians and cosmetologists and beauty-parlor operators. So that as far as motion-picture operators and embalmers and a few other agencies are concerned, including heating and air-conditioning engineers, this bill simply confers on the District Commissioners the authority to set certain standards and to require certain fees which will go into the Treasury and make it unnecessary for those individual pieces of legislation to march constantly across the floor of Congress and engross the attention of this body.

With respect to the general provision there that they shall be in addition to and not by way of limitation upon present powers, we probably have 15 or 20 individual licenses out now for running conduits under streets and alleys and running wires over public highways, and this merely confers upon the Commissioners blanket authority to do that. It does not negative the specific authority we have already given in specific cases.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Otherwise, they would have to go to the Congress in order to have these regulations enacted?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman believe that the facts which justify this bill clearly indicate that the real solution of the problem is to give the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote and to run their own local government, so that Congress can devote its time and effort to national problems?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman will find quite a few people who will agree with that opinion. When this bill first came before the Committee on the District of Columbia it contained a suffrage provision. My own notion was that the two ought to be considered separately. If we are going to have reorganization, let us consider that. If we are going to deal with suffrage, let us consider that, because it is an entirely separate substantive matter. The House Committee on the Judiciary, of which my good friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], sitting back there is a member, has been dealing with that problem, as has the Committee on the District of Columbia. This bill, however, relates solely to the question of streamlining and reorganizing the District set-up in the interest of efficiency and economy. We did not want to inject the highly controversial subject of suffrage because it is very doubtful whether the question of reorganization in that case could ever get through this House without stirring up a whole wealth of controversy. We are essentially interested for the moment in getting this one job done and letting the second job come after it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. But if we say that complete suffrage for the District, so that the people of the District can run their own local government, should be in a separate bill, and if we enact this reorganization bill, are we not putting the buggy before the horse? If we are going to give the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote and run their own local government, they should have the right to set up the government instead of having to take this set-up which Congress is going to choke down their throats.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will simply conclude by saying to the gentleman from Wisconsin that there is a sharp divergence of opinion on this whole question of suffrage. If reorganization must be made contingent upon the disposal of that question, we may not have reorganization for a long time. It is infinitely better to take what bread you can get if you cannot get the whole loaf. [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time on this side, but I shall be very glad to yield myself 10 minutes for the purpose of answering any questions that I may be able to answer.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In the additional powers that are granted to the Commissioners, I notice that in paragraph (a) they are authorized within their discretion to compromise and settle claims and suits which the District may now or hereafter have against any person, firm, association, or corporation, and upon a report by the corporation counsel of the District, and so forth.

Then in paragraph (t) the Commissioners are empowered in their discretion, when they deem such action to be in the public interest, to effect settlements with owners of real estate authorized to be acquired by purchase or condemnation for District purposes, through such title company, and so forth.

I am wondering if the committee gave any consideration to requiring that such settlements should be subject to the approval of the District court.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. On that subject, the corporation counsel made that recommendation, and I may say to the gentleman from South Dakota that there were many cases pointed out to the committee where it was to the advantage of the District for the Commissioners to settle the case, but under existing law they were not authorized to make a settlement and had to go through with an expensive court procedure and in the end probably make a less advantageous settlement for the people of the District. This simply broadens that power to give them the right to settle claims that may be settled to the better advantage of the people of the District.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I recognize that there are cases of that kind, but there are two different types of procedure that I have in mind. One would be the kind of a case where settlement would be readily approved, but it still would not be necessary for them to go through the court procedure of condemnation. In such a case should not the final approval of the settlement be subject to a court's review?

I have in mind the fact that in an ordinary bank liquidation, national banks, as well as State banks, the liquidating agent is required to submit his sales or his compromises to the district and the court itself passes upon the sufficiency of them. There is no necessity for a long-drawn-out proceeding. It is simply required that some independent party, not a party in interest, pass upon the sufficiency of the settlement.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Of course, I am not a lawyer, and I believe I am the only member of the committee who is not a lawyer, but the other members of the committee who are lawyers discussed that question with the corporation counsel and my recollection is that is the reason for writing this paragraph into the law.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say this particular item came up in discussion in connection with a recommendation that came before the District of Columbia appropriations subcommittee within the past year or two and some of the sentiment that was expressed by members of that committee at that time, as well as by some of the representatives of the District government, indicated they thought that might be a salutary provision to incorporate in the general law. I wonder if the gentleman would have any objection to the offering of an amendment to provide that these settlements of condemnation cases, and so forth, should be filed in a District court and subject to the approval of the District court.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I would have no objection, personally, and I would only want the gentleman to be careful not to amend it in a manner that would defeat the purpose of this particular paragraph, and that is to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make settlements in certain cases that would be to the advantage of the people of the District.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would not limit the power of the Commissioners to make a settlement that simply provides that it should be filed and approved by the District court.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I have no objection to such an amendment, but may I suggest that the gentleman talk to the minority Members and see if it is agreeable to them. I am sure they are more familiar with that particular section than I am.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. I understand the gentleman is chairman of the subcommittee that held hearings on this particular bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Yes; and I may say that this matter has been before the Congress for many years. About 4 years ago, I believe, there was an appropriation made of $50,000 to make a study of this question, and the so-called Jacobs report was submitted to the Congress, but no action was taken. As a member of the District Committee, having in mind the number of surveys previously made, including the Brookings Institution survey, the Roberts survey, the Prettyman survey, the citizen's survey, all surveys of the government of the District of Columbia, in an effort to bring about some good results, I had the Appropriations Committee appropriate $10,000 for the purpose of having a study made of these various surveys with the idea that we might bring before the Congress a bill that would establish a better structure for our local government here and cut out a lot of obsolete provisions with respect to the present set-up and provide more modern methods for running the municipality, and that is what we have before us today.

Our committee employed a group of experts who went into this matter and spent some 10 or 11 months studying the District government, and the committee itself gave many, many hours for many, many months to a study of the matter.

In addition to that, the Commissioners appointed a special committee of their own, composed of men such as the auditor, Mr. Donovan, Corporation Counsel Seal, members of the Public Service Commission, members of other local departments, and they, in turn, submitted their recommendations, and various committees of citizens studied the matter and they also submitted their recommendations, and this bill is the result of all that collaboration with reference to bringing in a measure that would carry out the purposes we have in mind.

Mr. PITTENGER. Were there public officials before the District of Columbia Committee?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Yes; many hours were spent on public hearings.

Mr. PITTENGER. And everybody had a right to be heard?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Everybody had a right to be heard and was heard over and over again in some instances.

Mr. PITTENGER. And this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. This is a unanimous report of the subcommittee and also the whole committee.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. BOLLES. Can the gentleman tell me when the District Committee reported on this—the entire committee?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. On May 8, 1940.

Mr. BOLLES. The entire District Committee?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Yes; all the members were present on that day.

Mr. BOLLES. I have no recollection of that, and I have asked several members of the committee, and they said they had never heard of such a report being made.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I am not surprised at members of the committee not knowing what is going on in the committee because they do not attend to the business of the committee in the first place.

Mr. BOLLES. I have been in active attendance at all of these hearings.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I know that and I am sure the gentleman was there when this matter was reported.

Mr. BOLLES. I have no recollection of it and I asked one of the distinguished Members on the majority side if he had ever heard that the District Committee ever passed on this as a body——

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It has been reported by the committee.

Mr. BOLLES. I have been trying to find a memorandum of that action and I cannot find it.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I have one in my hand here, dated May 8, 1940, and if the gentleman will request it he can get one for himself or can have mine.

Mr. BOLLES. Is that a memorandum of the action of the committee?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It is the report of the full committee. This matter has been before the committee over and over again.

Mr. BOLLES. I know it has been, and I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman referred to all these committees, including the Jacobs and other committees, which have studied the government of the District of Columbia.

Did any of these many committees recommend a real solution, that is, to give the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote and run their own municipal government? Did any of those committees make any such recommendation?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I do not recall the recommendation of the Jacobs committee in that respect, but I do believe some of the committees did so recommend.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has been a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia for many years. A moment ago he indicated that many members of the committee could not attend the committee meetings because of the multitude of other duties as Members of Congress. Do you not believe that the real, sound, constructive, decent, and proper solution of the problem is not to put the buggy before the horse, but to give the people of the District of Columbia the opportunity to vote and run their own municipal government and the right to operate the kind of a municipal government which they desire.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I do so believe.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the fact that it appears that this opportunity will not be given by this Congress, it is your opinion that in the meantime this bill should be enacted in the interest of reducing taxes and perfecting the efficiency of the government of the District of Columbia?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I do so believe.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And then, later on, when the people of the District of Columbia are given the right to vote, which they should have, they will have a more perfect form of local government to work upon which they can improve in compliance with the desires of the then sovereign voters of the Nation's Capital.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is correct.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Therefore I shall not take any more of your time, and I shall support and vote for the bill with a sincere hope that in the near future the people of the District of Columbia will be given an opportunity to vote and run their own municipal government so that Members of Congress can properly devote their entire time and efforts to national problems.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say, except to express my profound thanks to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] and others for the kind remarks they have made about me on the floor of the House today. Without their able assistance and complete cooperation I could not have brought this bill before you as it is today. I believe it is a bill that should be passed by this House. I believe it will effect substantial economies and will definitely increase the efficiency of the government of the District of Columbia.

To give you an idea of how I arrive at that conclusion, I appeared before the Subcommittee on Appropriations. I think the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] was a member of the committee at that time. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] asked us specifically where we could save some money. We mentioned the fire department. We thought that if an examination were made of that department money could be saved there. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], as chairman of the subcommittee, had inserted in the appropriation bill a direction to the Commissioners to make a survey of the fire department and report not later than January 1, 1940. We now have that report, and it shows a capital savings in the cost of the fire department of some $900,000, notwithstanding the fact that the recommendation also shows clearly the efficiency of the department will be improved upon and further annual savings made to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. It is my honest belief, after years of study of this measure, that we can increase the efficiency of the District government, and at the same time save several million dollars of the taxpayers' money, if this law is honestly and fairly administered.

Unless someone else wants to take some of my time, which I will be glad to extend to them, that concludes consideration which the committee desires for the bill with reference to general debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. ZIMMERMAN]. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

TITLE I—GENERAL LEGISLATION

SECTION 1. All acts and parts of acts now in force relating to the District of Columbia not inconsistent with the provisions of this act shall remain in full force and effect and all lawful regulations promulgated under said acts in force and effect shall also remain in full force and effect until modified or repealed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in accordance with law.

TITLE II—ADMINISTRATIVE DEPARTMENTS

SEC. 201. DEFINITIONS.—When used in this title—

The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The term "administrative assistant" means the administrative assistant to the Commissioners.

The term "department" means any department of the District government.

The term "position" means any job or position under the government of the District.

The term "comptroller" means the comptroller of the District.

SEC. 202. (a) There shall be, and are hereby, created the following administrative departments of the District, which shall be under the general control of the Commissioners:

(1) Department of Finance.
(2) Department of Law.
(3) Department of Engineering and Public Works.
(4) Department of Personnel.

(5) Police Department.
(6) Fire Department.
(7) Health Department.
(8) Department of Insurance.
(9) Department of Licenses.
(10) Department of Public Welfare.
(11) Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

(b) There shall be, and is hereby, created the position of administrative assistant to the Commissioners. The administrative assistant shall be appointed by the Commissioners and shall be directly responsible to them and shall perform such administrative duties as may be required by the Commissioners and by law.

(c) The administrative assistant, under the supervision of the Commissioners, shall, when so directed by the Commissioners, make detailed studies and investigations of all the departments for the purpose of enabling the Commissioners to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the public service) should be made in (1) the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of the departments; (2) the assignment of particular activities to particular services; or (3) the regrouping of services. The result of such studies shall be embodied in a report or reports to the Commissioners.

(d) The administrative assistant shall be a person with training equivalent to that represented by graduation from a college or university of recognized standing; understanding and experience in responsible supervisory positions; marked administrative ability; a thorough knowledge of the general laws of the District and the policies of administration; keen analytic ability; quick perception and appreciation of relative values; and judicial temperament.

(e) There shall be, and are hereby, created the following positions, which positions shall be in addition to any positions existing at the time of the approval of this act:

(1) Director of Finance.
(2) Director of Personnel.

The positions thus created shall be filled by appointment by the Commissioners.

SEC. 203. The functions of the Department of Finance shall comprise all administrative functions of the District with respect to the management and control of all financial operations, and shall by way of extension and not of limitation include the existing functions of the—

(a) Office of auditor;
(b) Collector of taxes;
(c) Budget officer;
(d) Purchasing officer;
(e) Disbursing officer;
(f) Office of assessor, except duties of superintendent of licenses.

The auditor shall hereafter be known as "comptroller." The director of finance shall be the head of the Department of Finance.

SEC. 204. The functions of the office of corporation counsel shall continue in accordance with law and Commissioners' regulations not inconsistent with law and shall be hereafter known as "the Department of Law," to be headed by the corporation counsel.

SEC. 205. The functions of the Department of Engineering and Public Works, except as may be otherwise expressly provided by this act, shall by way of extension and not of limitation consist of all the duties now performed by the present Engineer Department. The Engineer Commissioner of the District shall be the head of the Department of Engineering and Public Works.

SEC. 206. The functions of the Department of Personnel shall comprise all the administrative functions of the District in respect to the personnel of the District, subject to the policies established by law and Commissioners' orders. The Department of Personnel shall administer the civil service of the District as provided by title IV of this act; shall prepare and keep such personnel records as may be necessary to secure compliance with title IV of this act and with regulations adopted and promulgated by the Commissioners; and shall prepare, with the assistance of the United States Civil Service Commission, as provided for in title IV, examinations for positions in the District civil service; shall classify for salary purposes all positions in the government of the District other than those covered by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, officers, teachers, and librarians of the public schools, officers and members of the Metropolitan Police and Fire Departments; and shall provide standards of efficiency for employees of the District; shall rate employees of the District in accordance with said standards; shall certify eligibles for appointment and shall make recommendation to the Commissioners for the transfer, promotion, demotion, suspension, and dismissal of employees of the District.

SEC. 207. The functions of the Police Department shall continue in accordance with existing law and Commissioners' regulations not inconsistent with law, except as otherwise expressly provided by this section, and to that end there is hereby transferred to the Police Department—

(a) The office of the poundmaster;
(b) Department of Weights, Measures, and Markets.

SEC. 208. The functions of the Fire Department shall continue in accordance with existing law and Commissioners' regulations not inconsistent with law.

SEC. 209. The functions of the Health Department shall be continued in accordance with existing law and Commissioners' regulations not inconsistent with law. In selecting a health officer the Commissioners may request the President of the United States to designate an officer from among the medical officers of the United States Army Medical Corps, the United States Navy Medical Corps, or the United States Public Health Service Corps, and the President, in his discretion, may designate such an officer who shall, during the time specified by the President, be health officer of the District. The officer, if so designated, shall be under the general supervision and control of the Commissioners of the District and shall exercise all powers and authority vested in the health officer of the District.

If the pay and allowances of the officer so designated be less than the compensation of the health officer of the District, said officer shall be entitled to receive such compensation in addition to his pay and allowances received from the United States as will make his compensation equal to that paid the health officer of the District.

SEC. 210. The functions of the License Department, except as otherwise expressly provided herein, shall comprise, except as hereinafter provided, all functions appertaining to the issuance of licenses within the District, including the administration of all laws requiring tests of qualifications for the issuance of licenses, and to that end there are hereby transferred to and vested in said department all duties required by law of the following departments, boards, officers, or commissions, as the case may be:

(a) Board of Accountancy;
(b) Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects;
(c) Board of Dental Examiners;
(d) Board of Examiners of Veterinary Medicine;
(e) Board of Plumbing;
(f) Board of Steam and Other Operating Engineers;
(g) Board of Pharmacy;
(h) Board of Optometry;
(i) Nurses Examining Board;
(j) Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Arts;
(k) Alcoholic Beverage Control Board;
(l) Real Estate Commission;
(m) Boxing Commission;
(n) Superintendent of Licenses (now under the assessor's office);
(o) District of Columbia Board of Cosmetology;
(p) Board of Barber Examiners.

The Commissioners shall appoint licensing and examining boards. It shall be the duty of such boards, when appointed, to ascertain and determine, under such rules and regulations as may be recommended by the respective boards and adopted by the Commissioners, whether applications for licenses shall be granted or denied. Nothing in this act contained, however, shall give to the director of licenses any discretion in the issuance or refusal of licenses where issuance or denial is recommended by any such boards created for the purpose of licensing applicants.

The qualifications for membership on such licensing and examining boards shall be the same as are now provided by existing law.

The Commissioners are authorized to pay compensation to members of boards appointed in accordance with this section as they in their judgment and discretion may deem proper, and for this purpose appropriations are authorized to be made.

Enforcement of all regulations adopted by the Commissioners under this section shall be by the Police Department and the prosecution of violations thereof shall be by the corporation counsel or his assistants in the name of the District of Columbia.

Licenses, permits, certificate and registration fees shall be fixed by the Commissioners and shall be paid to the collector of taxes and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of District funds as now provided by law.

Nothing herein shall be construed as affecting any right of appeal from the action of any such board as provided by existing law.

The provisions of this section shall not become effective until July 1, 1941.

SEC. 211. The functions of the Department of Insurance shall continue in accordance with existing law and Commissioners' regulations not inconsistent with law.

SEC. 212. The functions of the Department of Public Welfare shall continue in accordance with existing law and Commissioners' regulations not inconsistent with law.

SEC. 213. The functions of the Department of Vehicles and Traffic shall continue in accordance with existing law and Commissioners' regulations not inconsistent with law.

SEC. 214. All the functions of the Department of Playgrounds of the District, now under the joint control of the Commissioners and the Board of Education, are hereby transferred to and shall, after the effective date of this act, be vested in the Board of Education.

SEC. 215. Whenever the Commissioners deem it to be in the interest of the public good, efficiency, or economy, they may abolish or create any bureau or division within any department, consolidate such bureaus or divisions; reduce the number of employees; transfer, assign, or regroup any or all of the functions of any bureau or division; and may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, transfer employees and appropriations between departments, bureaus, and divisions. No department, board, or commission shall be created or abolished without the specific authority of Congress.

TITLE III—THE BUDGET

SEC. 301. Definitions: When used in this title—

The term "the budget" means the budget required by this act to be transmitted to Congress.

The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The term "budget officer" means the budget officer of the District of Columbia.

The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

The term "departments" means any department, independent commission, board, bureau, officer, agency, or other establishment, including Federal agencies, functioning under authority of or supported by District funds.

SEC. 302. The budget officer shall prepare, under the general supervision of the Director of Finance and submit to the Commissioners for transmission directly to the Congress of the United States on the first day of each regular session, a budget which shall set forth in summary and in detail—

(a) Estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary in their judgment for the support of the District for the ensuing fiscal year;

(b) Their estimates of the receipts of the District during the ensuing fiscal year under (1) laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted and also (2) under the revenue proposals, if any, contained in the budget;

(c) The expenditures and receipts of the District during the last completed fiscal year;

(d) Estimates of the expenditures and receipts of the District during the fiscal year in progress;

(e) Balanced statements of (1) the condition of the finances of the District at the end of the last completed fiscal year, (2) the estimated condition of the finances of the District at the end of the fiscal year in progress, and (3) the estimated condition of the finances of the District at the end of the ensuing fiscal year if the financial proposals contained in the budget are adopted;

(f) Such other financial statements and data as in their opinion are necessary or desirable in order to make known in all practicable detail the financial condition of the District.

SEC. 303. (a) If the estimated receipts for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, on the basis of laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted, plus the estimated amounts in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District at the close of the fiscal year in progress, available for expenditure in the ensuing fiscal year, are less than the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, the Commissioners, in the budget, shall make recommendations to Congress for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the estimated deficiency.

(b) If the aggregate of such estimated receipts and such estimated amounts in the Treasury to the credit of the District is greater than such estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, they shall make such recommendations as in their opinion the public interests require.

SEC. 304. (a) The Commissioners from time to time may transmit to Congress supplemental or deficiency estimates for such appropriations or expenditures as in their judgment (1) are necessary on account of laws enacted after the transmission of the budget, or (2) are otherwise in the public interest. They shall accompany such estimates with a statement of the reasons therefor, including the reasons for their omission from the Budget.

(b) Whenever such supplemental or deficiency estimates reach an aggregate which, if they had been contained in the budget, would have required the Commissioners to make recommendations under subdivision (a) of section 303, they shall thereupon make such recommendations.

SEC. 305. Except as otherwise provided in this act, the contents, order, and arrangement of the estimates of appropriations and the statements of expenditures and estimated expenditures contained in the budget as transmitted under section 304, and the notes and other data submitted therewith, shall conform to the requirements of existing law.

SEC. 306. No estimate or request for an appropriation, and no request for an increase in an item of any such estimate or request, and no recommendation as to how the revenue needs of the District should be met, shall be transmitted to Congress or any committee thereof by any officer or employees of any department, unless at the request of either House of Congress, or any committee or subcommittee thereof.

SEC. 307. The budget officer shall, under the supervision of the Director of Finance, prepare for the Commissioners a codification of all laws or parts of laws relating to the preparation and transmission to Congress of statements of receipts and expenditures for the government and of estimates of appropriations.

SEC. 308. Under such regulations as the Commissioners may prescribe, (1) every department shall furnish to the Department of Finance such information as the budget officer may from time to time require; and (2) the budget officer, or any employee of the Department of Finance when duly authorized by such Department, shall for the purpose of securing such information have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department.

SEC. 309. The head of each department shall prepare departmental estimates, supplemental and deficiency estimates as may be required for its work, which shall be transmitted to the budget officer and which shall be transmitted in such form, manner, and detail as the Commissioners may prescribe.

SEC. 310. (1) The authority of the General Accounting Office in relation to the District is limited specifically to making independent post audits of disbursements made by the District from public funds and trust funds, to insure that such disbursements are made in accordance with law.

(2) The General Accounting Office shall make periodical reports of such audits to the Commissioners and the Director of Finance of the District. It shall be the duty of the Commissioners to make a critical review of all such reports and take such action in respect thereof as they may deem necessary and in the public interest.

(3) The Commissioners, the Director of Finance, the disbursing officer, and the comptroller shall have the right to obtain from the Comptroller General of the United States advance decisions involving matters relating to the disbursement of public and trust funds and the collection of revenue of the District, and it shall be the duty of the Comptroller General of the United States to furnish such advance decisions when requested so to do.

SEC. 311. The disbursing officers of the District shall give bond to the District in such sum as shall be approved by the Commissioners, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office in the disbursing and accounting, according to law, for all moneys of the District that may come into his hands.

TITLE IV—CIVIL SERVICE

SEC. 401. Definitions: When used in this title—

The term "position" means any position or job according to the context thereof.

The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The term "official" means the head of any department in the District government.

The term "employees of the District of Columbia" shall be construed to mean all persons whose compensation is paid from appropriations and other funds of the District other than those officers and employees of the public schools and library systems now subject to their respective merit systems (exclusive of clerical and custodial employees), Federal employees paid from District appropriations now subject to their respective merit systems, and persons appointed for definite terms in accordance with law other than the surveyor of the District: Provided, however, That the status of the register of wills, and the employees of that office, and the status of the probation officer of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and the employees of that office, shall remain as at present, under the jurisdiction and control of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

SEC. 402. There is hereby established a civil-service system for the District, which shall be separate and distinct from the United States civil service except for the administration of the laws relating to the retirement of District employees (act of Congress approved May 22, 1920, 41 Stat. 614, as amended) (5 U. S. C. Annotated 287) and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, as it relates to the employees of said District, which said retirement and classification laws shall continue to be administered as at the time of passage of this act and as may be amended by law.

SEC. 403. On and after July 1, 1941, the selection, appointment, transfer, promotion, demotion, suspension, and dismissal of employees of the District shall be in accordance with the provisions of this title, and with the rules and regulations adopted and promulgated by the Commissioners under and by virtue of the terms of this title.

SEC. 404. The following cardinal principles are hereby adopted, and compliance therewith is hereby directed, for the government and administration of the District of Columbia civil service:

(a) Open competitive examinations for testing the fitness of applicants for original entrance appointment in the District government. Such examinations shall be practical in character and, so far as may be practical, shall relate to those matters which will fairly test the relative capacity and fitness of persons examined to discharge the duties of the position into which they seek to be appointed.

(b) All original entrance appointments to positions in the District government, as hereinafter provided, shall be filled by selections according to grade, from among those graded highest as the result of such competitive examinations, and no such appointments shall become absolute until after a probationary period of at least 12 months.

(c) Vacancies in positions shall be filled, so far as practicable, by promotion from among persons holding positions in lower grades, in the department, office, or institution in which the vacancy exists. Promotion shall be based upon merit and upon the superior qualifications of the person promoted as shown by his previous service, due weight being given to seniority.

(d) In case of a vacancy in a position the entrance examination for which is different from that through which the employee considered for promotion entered the service, a noncompetitive examination may be given to determine the eligibility for promotion of the employee under consideration.

(e) In case of a vacancy in a position where peculiar and exceptional qualifications of a scientific, professional, or educational character, or exceptional training and experience are required, and upon evidence satisfactory to the Commissioners that for specified reasons competition in any such special case is impracticable and that the position can best be filled by selection of some designated person of high and recognized attainments in such qualities, the Commissioners may suspend the provisions of this title requiring competition in any such case, but no such suspension shall be general in its application to such position, and a record shall be made of each such case of suspension, together with the reasons therefor.

(f) No person in the service of the District government is for that reason under any obligation to contribute to any political fund, or to render any political services, and he shall not be removed or otherwise prejudiced for refusing to do so.

(g) Suitable and convenient rooms and accommodations shall be assigned or provided for the holding of examinations and said rooms and accommodations shall be furnished, heated, and lighted, and for this purpose the Commissioners are authorized to designate for use suitable rooms in any public-school building in the District for the holding of examinations at such times as will not interfere with the orderly conduct of school work or classes usually carried on in such school or in the rooms designated in any such school building.

(h) Records shall be prepared and kept of the persons holding the status of permanent employees of the District, as hereinafter provided, and of persons selected for appointment to vacancies in the District government, as hereinafter provided, from among those who have been examined, of the place of residence of such persons, of the rejection of any such person after probation, of transfers, resignations, and removals, and of the date thereof.

SEC. 405. The Commissioners are authorized and directed to adopt and promulgate such rules and regulations, not in conflict with this title, as may be necessary to carry this title into effect, and publish such notices as they may deem necessary.

SEC. 406. Incumbents of all positions in the District government who have been in the service of the District government for a period of 12 consecutive months or longer on the effective date of approval of this act, and who hold absolute appointments, are hereby covered into the civil service of the District and given the status of permanent employees of the District within the civil service of the District, and shall be entitled to all the benefits and privileges of the civil service of the District: Provided, That that part of the act approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1424), as amended, which provides for the appointment of the surveyor of the District for a term of 4 years, is hereby repealed, and the surveyor of the District shall be covered into, and shall have all the benefits and privileges of, the civil service of the District: Provided further, That this title shall not apply to any employees of the District other than the surveyor of the District who have been or may be appointed to office or positions in the District government for definite terms in accordance with law.

SEC. 407. No person in the civil service of the District shall be removed therefrom except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of said service and for reasons given in writing, and the person whose removal is sought shall have notice of the same and of any charges preferred against him, and be furnished with a copy thereof, and also be allowed a reasonable time for personally answering the same in writing; and may file affidavits in support thereof; but no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the Commissioners; and copies of charges, notice of hearing, answer, reasons for removal, and of the order of removal shall be made a part of the records of the District, as shall also the reasons for reduction in rank or compensation, and copies of the same shall be furnished to the person affected upon request: Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of employees of the District civil service not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike, or proposing to assist them in any strike, against the United States or the District, having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said District civil service, or the presenting by any such persons or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any member thereof, shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

SEC. 408. The United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed to perform, at cost, for the District, when requested by the Director of Personnel so to do, the work of assisting the Director of Personnel in preparing examinations for positions in the District civil service, and the work of holding and grading results of examinations of applicants for positions in the District civil service, the preparation and certification of registers of persons eligible for appointment in said service, as the result of making satisfactory grades on said examinations. The Commissioners shall include in their annual estimates of appropriations an amount sufficient to compensate the United States Civil Service Commission for the cost of such services rendered to the District in accordance with the terms of this title, and upon receipt of a certificate of the United States Civil Service Commission as to the actual cost of said work the said Commissioners shall pay the amount thereof to the United States Civil Service Commission from the said appropriation.

SEC. 409. From and after the passage of this act, only citizens of the United States, who for a period of 3 years or more immediately prior to the date of application for appointment (or for examination) have been actually bona fide residents of the District shall be eligible for appointment under the terms of this title to any position in the District government, except in cases where the Director of Personnel shall certify to the Commissioners that no applicant for appointment, resident of the District, has satisfactorily passed the examination provided for such position, in which case a person, irrespective of residence, who is qualified by education, training, and experience may be certified for appointment to such position: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to prevent the promotion or transfer to any position in the District civil service of any person covered into the District civil service under the terms of this title.

SEC. 410. The Commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to appoint a Board of Civil Service Appeals, to be composed of six members, three of whom shall be officials of the District and three from among the employees of the District other than subordinates of any of the appointed officials, who shall serve without extra compensation. The said board shall hear, investigate, and decide all complaints of employees of the District who may be aggrieved by any action or ruling of the Director of Personnel. The decision of said board on any such complaint shall be final, except in any case involving separation from the service, in which case recommendation shall be made to the Commissioners for final determination. The said board shall also from time to time make recommendations to the Commissioners for the improvement of personnel administration and efficiency of employees of the District, and shall consider and make recommendations to the Commissioners on such matters as may be referred to it by the Commissioners, or by the Director of Personnel. In passing upon appeals, said board shall be governed by the spirit and intent of the terms of this title.

SEC. 411. In the event charges have been filed against any employee of the District, the Commissioners may suspend such employee with or without compensation pending final determination of said charges and may withhold or restore said pay in their discretion for a period not to exceed 90 days.

TITLE V—COURT CONSOLIDATION

SEC. 501. The police court of the District of Columbia as established by the act of Congress, approved June 17, 1870 (16 Stat. 153), as amended, and the municipal court of the District of Columbia as established by the act of Congress approved February 17, 1909 (35 Stat. 623), as amended, are hereby consolidated and shall be known as the municipal court of the District of Columbia. The said court shall be composed of nine judges; the qualifications for appointment shall continue as now provided by existing law.

SEC. 502. The said court shall consist of two branches, a civil and criminal branch, and shall continue to exercise such jurisdiction as has heretofore been exercised by each of the said consolidated courts.

SEC. 503. The term of said judges shall each be for 6 years, and until a successor is duly appointed and qualified. The salary of said judges shall continue as now provided by existing law, except the presiding judge shall receive additional compensation of $500 per annum.

SEC. 504. The President of the United States shall appoint one of the said nine judges as presiding judge, whose duty it shall be to assign for such period or periods, as he may determine, judges for assignments in the various branches of the said court.

TITLE VI—MEDICAL EXAMINER

SEC. 601. Definitions: When used in this title—

The term "coroner" means the coroner of the District of Columbia.

The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 602. The office of coroner in the District shall be abolished within 60 days after the passage of this act, and all funds, property, records, books, papers, and documents within the control of the coroner and deputy coroners of the District shall be transferred and delivered to the office of the Commissioners.

SEC. 603. There is hereby established the office of medical examiner of the District, which shall be under the direction of a chief medical examiner, who shall be appointed by the Commissioners. He shall be a doctor of medicine and a skilled pathologist with not less than 2 years' actual experience as a pathologist. The office shall be kept open every day of the year, including Sundays and legal holidays, with a clerk in attendance at all times during the day and night.

SEC. 604. The Commissioners shall have authority to appoint two assistant medical examiners possessing qualifications similar to those required in the chief medical examiner, who shall assist the chief medical examiner in the performance of his duties. The Commissioners are also authorized to appoint, upon recommendation of the chief medical examiner, such assistants and other employees for which Congress may, from time to time, provide.

SEC. 605. The chief medical examiner and assistant medical examiners shall, before entering upon the performance of their duties, each give bond to the District with security to be approved by the Commissioners and deposited with the Commissioners or their designated agent, in the penalty of $3,000, with a condition that each will well and truly execute the duties of his office and will well and faithfully execute and return all writs or other process to each directed, and will also pay and deliver to the person or persons entitled to receive the same all sums of money and all goods and chattels levied upon, seized, or taken in conformity with the directions of the writ or process under which the same shall have been levied upon, seized, or taken, and shall also satisfy and pay all judgments which may be rendered against them in their official capacity.

SEC. 606. The chief medical examiner and assistant medical examiners herein provided for are hereby empowered to administer oaths or affirmations as to any matters within the jurisdiction of the office; and if any person to whom such oath or affirmation shall be administered shall willfully and falsely swear or affirm touching any matter or thing material to the point in question whereto he shall be examined, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to suffer imprisonment for not less than 1 year or more than 5 years.

SEC. 607. When, in the District, any person shall die from criminal violence, or by a casualty, or by suicide, or suddenly when in apparent health, or when unattended by a physician, or in any suspicious or unusual manner, the police shall immediately notify the office of the chief medical examiner of the known facts, giving the time, place, manner, and circumstances of such death. Immediately upon receipt of such notification, the chief medical examiner or an assistant medical examiner shall go to the dead body and take charge of the same. Such examiner shall fully investigate the essential facts concerning the circumstances of the death, taking the names and addresses of all witnesses thereto as it may be practical to obtain, and before leaving the premises shall reduce all such facts to writing and file the same in his office. He shall take possession of all property of value found on such person and such portable objects which in his opinion may be useful in establishing the cause of death, making an exact inventory thereof on his report, and deliver the same to the property clerk of the Police Department.

SEC. 608. Witnesses may be summoned and compelled by the chief medical examiner or assistant medical examiners to attend before them and give evidence. If any person, having been personally summoned, shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then and in that event the chief medical examiner or any assistant medical examiner may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice therefor hereby is empowered to compel obedience to said summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court.

SEC. 609. If the cause of such death shall be established beyond reasonable doubt, the medical examiner in charge shall so report to his office. If, however, in the opinion of such medical examiner an autopsy is necessary, the same shall be performed by the medical examiner. A detailed description of the findings written during the process of such autopsy and the conclusions drawn therefrom shall thereupon be filed in his office. Such findings shall be available only to the husband, wife, father, mother, and children or personal representative of the deceased or upon order of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia for cause shown satisfactory to said court.

SEC. 610. It shall be the duty of any citizen who may become aware of the death of any person from criminal violence, or by a casualty, or by suicide, or suddenly when in apparent health, or when unattended by a physician, or in any suspicious or unusual manner, to report the death forthwith to the office of the chief medical examiner or to the police. Any person who shall willfully neglect or refuse to report such death or who without an order from a medical examiner shall willfully with intent to destroy evidence touch, remove, or disturb the body of any such person, or willfully with intent to destroy evidence touch, remove, or disturb the clothing or any article of evidence upon or near such body shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years.

SEC. 611. It shall be the duty of the medical examiner to keep in his office full and complete records properly indexed, stating name, if known, of every dead person coming under his jurisdiction, place where the body was found, and the date of death. To the record of each case shall be attached the original report of the medical examiner and the detailed findings of the autopsy, if any. He shall promptly deliver to the United States district attorney for the District copies of all records relating to every death as to which there is, in the judgment of the medical examiner in charge, any indication of criminality, or such records as may be requested by the police or the district attorney.

SEC. 612. That as soon as the medical examiner appointed as aforesaid shall assume his office all the powers, rights, duties, and privileges heretofore lawful exercised by the coroner not inconsistent herewith shall be transferred to and vested in and imposed upon said medical examiner and his successors in office.

SEC. 613. The salaries of the appointees under the provisions of this title shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Commissioners are hereby authorized, with the advice of the chief medical examiner, to make rules and regulations governing the office hereby created and to fix a schedule of fees for the execution of death certificates and other documents desired by private individuals, firms, and corporations from the chief medical examiner or assistant medical examiners, which fees shall be collected and paid to the collector of taxes and by him deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District.

TITLE VII—ADDITIONAL POWERS

SEC. 701. Definitions: When used in this title—

The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The term "comptroller" means the comptroller of the District.

SEC. 702. The power and authorities conferred by this title are to be construed as in addition to and not by way of limitation of the powers now vested by law in the Commissioners. The Commissioners are authorized and empowered within their discretion—

(a) To compromise and settle claims and suits which the District may now or hereafter have against any person, firm, association, or corporation, upon a report by the director of law showing in detail the just and true amount and condition of any such claim or suit and the terms upon which the same may be compromised or settled, and stating that in his opinion a compromise of such claim or suit would be for the best interest of the District: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as modifying or changing existing law with reference to claims or suits relating to taxes or special assessments.

(b) After public hearing to name and change the name of any street, bridge, municipal building, highway, road, alley, or other public place in the District under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners.

(c) To secure and install mechanical parking meters or devices on the streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces in the District under the jurisdiction and control of the Commissioners, and to make and enforce rules and regulations for the control of parking of vehicles on such streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces, and, as an aid to such regulations and control of the parking of vehicles, the Commissioners may prescribe fees for the parking of vehicles where meters or devices are installed, and the fees collected shall be deposited by the collector of taxes in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District.

(d) To make, adopt, and enforce regulations requiring persons, firms, and corporations engaged within the District in electric lighting, electric heating, and electric-power construction, installation, and wiring business, other than utility companies, to furnish annual bonds guaranteeing the satisfactory performance in accordance with law and regulation of all such work undertaken by such persons, firms, and corporations.

(e) To make, adopt, and enforce regulations for the regulation, licensing, and revocation of licenses of operators of motion-picture machines of the type using nitrocellulose or other highly inflammable film within the District.

(f) To make, adopt, and enforce regulations for the regulation, licensing, and revocation of licenses of persons, firms, or corporations engaged within the District in business as embalmers, undertakers, or morticians.

(g) To rent available space for the establishment of cafeterias, restaurants, canteens, sutlers' shops, confectionery stands, or newsstands in any building or institution owned or under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, said letting to be made only upon bids: Provided, That nothing contained in this paragraph shall have the effect of changing in any manner Public Law No. 732, Seventy-fourth Congress, known as "An act to authorize the operation of stands in Federal buildings by blind persons, to enlarge the economic opportunities of the blind, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1936.

(h) To grant revocable permits upon such terms, conditions, bonds, and rentals as the Commissioners may impose for the construction of tunnels, and the laying of conduits and pipes in the alleys, streets, and avenues in the District under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners.

(i) All laws now in force and effect for the condemnation of streets as laid down on the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District shall be applicable to the condemnation of land for the extension, widening, and straightening of all streets within the District.

(j) To make, adopt, and enforce regulations requiring the proprietors of machines used for vending of merchandise in any form to pay an annual license fee to be prescribed by the Commissioners for each machine owned or operated by the proprietor of such machine.

(k) To erect, maintain, and operate such laboratories, testing plants, and manufacturing plants as in the discretion of the Commissioners are deemed desirable for the performance of essential municipal functions.

(l) To make, adopt, and enforce regulations restraining and punishing vagrants, mendicants, and street beggars.

(m) To make and adopt rules and regulations concerning the control and management of the fiscal and municipal affairs of the District and to prescribe and require the adoption and keeping of such books, records, accounts, and system or systems of accounting for the various departments, boards, commissions, heads of departments, officers, clerks, and employees as shall, in the opinion of the Commissioners, be necessary to the giving of a full and true account of the revenues and resources of the District, and of expenditures and disposal thereof, and to the giving of full, true, and informative statements and reports of such revenues and resources, and the expenditure thereof.

(n) To make and adopt rules and regulations concerning the control and management of all property, real and personal, belonging to the District.

(o) To grant pardons and respite for offenses against the laws of the District, or regulations promulgated by virtue of any such laws of the District.

(p) To exercise any power and perform any duties conferred hereby in the administration of this title through such officers, agents, or members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District as the Commissioners may designate.

(q) To make, adopt, and enforce regulations for the regulation, bonding, licensing, and revocation of licenses of persons, firms, and corporations engaged within the District in the business of heating and air-conditioning contracting.

(r) The Commissioners and other responsible officials, in expending appropriations provided for the expenses of the government of the District, may, in the discretion of the Commissioners and when they deem such action to be in the public interest, purchase material, supplies, including food supplies and equipment, when needed and funds are available, in accordance with the regulations and schedules of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department or from various services of the Government of the United States possessing materials, supplies, passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles, and equipment no longer required. Surplus articles purchased from the Government, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price, not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, at a reasonable price based upon length of usage. The various services of the Government of the United States are authorized to sell such surplus articles to the District under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to amend, alter, or repeal the Executive order of December 3, 1918, concerning the transfer of office materials, supplies, and equipment in the District falling into disuse because of the cessation of war activities.

(s) To issue permits for the removal from place to place, inter, disinter, or in any manner dispose of any dead body of any human being or any part of such body, and to prohibit the removal of any dead body of any human being or any part of such body without a permit granted under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioners.

(t) The Commissioners may, in their discretion and when they deem such action to be in the public interest, effect settlements with owners of real estate authorized to be acquired by purchase or condemnation for District purposes, through such title company or companies in the District as may be designated by the Commissioners, and to pay from appropriations available for the acquisition of such real estate reasonable fees to cover the cost of the services rendered by such title company or companies.

(u) To fix, assess, and collect fees for licenses, permits, and certificates issued by the District. Such fees to be paid to the collector of taxes and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of District funds as now provided by law.

(v) Where not otherwise specifically provided, to prescribe a penalty upon conviction of a violation of any section or paragraph of this title by a fine of not more than $500.

(w) No grant of power contained in this title shall be construed as affecting any right of appeal as now provided by existing law.

TITLE VIII—SEPARABILITY

SEC. 801. If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional or the applicability thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provisions to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 802. This act shall take effect at such time or times as the Commissioners may designate, not to exceed, however, 90 days from the approval of this act, except section 210 of title II, and title IV, which section and title, respectively, become effective as hereinbefore provided on July 1, 1941.

TITLE IX—APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED

SEC. 901. The necessary appropriations to carry out the provisions of this act are hereby authorized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 11, after the word "shall", strike out "when so directed by the Commissioners."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 5, line 5, after the word "Works", strike out "except as may be otherwise expressly provided by this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 4, after the word "Commissioners", strike out "of the District."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 15, after the word "comprise", strike out "except as hereinafter provided."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 13, line 6, after the word "year", strike out the word "they" and insert "the Commissioners."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 25, line 13, after the word "judges", strike out "the qualifications for appointment shall continue as now provided by existing law" and insert "no person shall be appointed as judge of the municipal court unless he has been a bona fide citizen and resident of the District for the continuous period of at least 5 years immediately preceding his appointment."

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SASSCER to the committee amendment: Page 25, line 16, strike out the words "bona fide citizen and resident" and insert "member of the bar."

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The committee is willing to accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 26, line 24, strike out the words "doctor of medicine" and insert "physician."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 32, line 16, strike out the words "director of law" and insert "corporation counsel of the District."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the same page.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 32, line 21, after the colon, insert "Provided further, That such settlements shall be submitted to and be approved by one of the justices of the district court for the District of Columbia."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this amendment has been submitted to the members of the committee, and is satisfactory to them and I understand the corporation counsel has said it is all right. I notice in hearing it read, however, that the word "further" is misplaced. I had expected to offer the amendment following the proviso now in the bill but changed the line to go ahead of it without changing the placing of the word "further." I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by eliminating the word "further", and following the semicolon to insert the word "further", after the next "Provided."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the modification will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the modified amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as folows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 38, line 2, strike out the period and insert: "Provided, That such settlement shall be submitted to and be approved by one of the justices of the District Court for the District of Columbia before payments are made thereunder."

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I may say for the information of the committee that the corporation council has approved this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BATES of Massachusetts: On page 6, line 14, strike out the words "Department of Weights, Measures, and Markets", and on page 8, after line 14, insert the words "Department of Weights and Measures and Markets."

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this amendment meets with the approval of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: Page 10, line 18, after the word "employees", insert "in compliance with the civil-service provisions of this act."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the members of the committee will accept this amendment. It is offered to insure that a political spoils system will not enter into the reorganization plan and result in a wholesale firing of faithful District employees. If any of the District employees are going to be discharged as surplus, I believe they should be discharged in compliance with the civil-service provisions applicable to the discharge of surplus employees who are under the civil service.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I believe the bill already provides for the very thing the gentleman from Wisconsin is endeavoring to do. I have no objection to reassuring him that the District employees will have civil-service protection. I am, therefore, very agreeable to accepting the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLMES: Page 6, line 20, after the word "law", strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the committee and the Members to the fact that the language of the bill as it now stands, section 209, refers to the Health Department of the city of Washington. I read:

SEC. 209. The functions of the Health Department shall be continued in accordance with existing law and Commissioners' regulations not inconsistent with law. In selecting a health officer the Commissioners may request the President of the United States to designate an officer from among the medical officers of the United States Army Medical Corps, the United States Navy Medical Corps, or the United States Public Health Service Corps, and the President, in his discretion, may designate such an officer who shall, during the time specified by the President, be health officer of the District. The officer, if so designated, shall be under the general supervision and control of the Commissioners and shall exercise all powers and authority vested in the health officer of the District.

The balance of this provision relates to an equalization of pay.

It seems ridiculous to me, and I have had 30 years' experience in municipal-government work, to make this change. The average medical officer in the Army or the Navy does not have an opportunity to gain experience and knowledge of municipal health laws and municipal sanitary laws and all the complications that are involved in protecting the health of the citizens of a municipality.

I say his training in the Army deals with camps and cantonments and the physical health of the officers and men within that area.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I may say to the gentleman for his information that I wholly agree with him, personally, but other members of the subcommittee thought differently.

Mr. HOLMES. The gentleman realizes, as well as I do, if he has had any municipal experience, that when you get a health officer to look after the interest of hundreds of thousands, even millions, of people within a community you want to get the best man that money can buy, the best man available, the man with the greatest knowledge of municipal sanitation, health, hospitals, and everything else. Of course, this is a proviso. It is a "may" clause. I do not believe that a municipality should be subjected to that kind of health regulation or control by a health officer who has been limited by his experience in the Medical Corps of the Army or Navy. If you are looking for the best interests and health of this community, you ought to strike that part of the section out.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES].

Mr. Speaker, may I say that this provision which my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, seeks to strike from the bill, after all follows a precedent that was established by the Congress a great many years ago. When it set down the qualifications for Commissioners it provided in existing law, and it is the law today, that one of the Commissioners shall be from the Engineer Corps of the United States Army. This has worked in a very satisfactory manner, it seems to me, in the District of Columbia. We have had lots of high-grade men fill that engineering office, like Colonel Sultan and Colonel McCoach, who is now discharging his responsibilities in a fine fashion.

After all, this is only a permissive clause. It says that the President may go into the Army or Navy Medical Corps or into the United States Public Health Service and find a health officer for the District of Columbia. In view of the fact that the United States Public Health Service is providing some of these sanitary regulations for numerous of the largest municipalities in the country, I am of the opinion that they have a very intimate, scientific knowledge of the requirements of a job like this, and I do not know of any training school anywhere that would provide a better type of health officer that a city like Washington would need than you would find there. Mr. Speaker, this is permissive. It is not obligatory on the President of the United States. He can go elsewhere and find a man, but I do believe that the field in which he can select a man and from which he can select a man ought not to be circumscribed by cutting out this permissive latitude.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. I can appreciate what the gentleman says when it comes to the question of public works and your Engineer Commissioner. I think Washington has been very fortunate in having excellent, high-grade men who know the problem. I think the present Engineer Commissioner has done a wonderful job. But when it comes to the question of health and hospitalization and all the wide ramifications, including restaurants, apartments, hotels, and sanitation as a whole, I do not believe you can get the proper type of man in the Army or Navy.

Mr. DIRKSEN. When a man reaches his majority or achieves a colonelcy in the Army, having devoted the most useful years of his life to the question of sanitation, I think he would be a good type of man for that job.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. There is nothing mandatory about this?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. It is wholly permissive.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And I may say this is the expression of the Commissioners themselves.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The gentleman knows that I somewhat share the views of the gentleman from Massachusetts; however, it was the opinion of the committee that it might be possible at some particular time or under some particular circumstances to have a man who might be available to render a very valuable service as Health Commissioner in the District. The only purpose of this bill is to have the best person obtainable to head the Health Department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right, and with all deference to my good friend from Massachusetts, I hope his amendment will not prevail.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOLMES); there were—ayes 7, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION TO MAKE LOANS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF DEPOSITS OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MINERALS

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9996) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals which in the opinion of the Corporation would be of value to the United States in time of war, and to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more adequate loans for mineral developmental purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK]?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, will the gentleman explain the purposes of the bill?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House is present and he very graciously asked me to call up this bill, since it is mine. That committee has unanimously reported the bill.

It is a bill over which there is no controversy, and at the same time it is a very important bill. It provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall grant loans on mining prospects and developments in the strategic minerals. The present law confines these class B loans to only three kinds of minerals, namely, gold, silver, and tin, and does not include the strategic and critical minerals such as manganese, tungsten, nickel, and the like.

At the present time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is permitted to loan $20,000 as a top limit on any one mine property. This bill extends their power, permitting them to loan up to $40,000, or an additional $20,000 after $20,000 has already been used, if the operators can show a good working to justify the additional loan. This is a measure largely for defense purposes and is very essential in our development of a home supply of the critical and strategic minerals.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman from Arizona is certainly to be congratulated on getting this bill before the House. He has done more for the small miner and prospector than almost anyone in the House. It is very important in our territory where we have deposits of minerals such as chromium and manganese, that these deposits be developed. In my State we have many valuable mineral deposits that should be developed, but owing to lack of capital it has not been done. The Committee on Banking and Currency is indeed also to be congratulated on reporting the bill out. I have talked frequently with the chairman of that committee about this bill and found him very sympathetic. I sincerely hope the bill will pass.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I feel that the latter statement is especially true. I may say that this bill has already passed the Senate, having been introduced by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I join in what the gentleman from Montana has said in congratulating the gentleman from Arizona on bringing this bill before the House. I hope that the term "strategic materials" embraces the entire field of strategic materials and includes tin as well as the minerals mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It does. I cannot offhand name all the strategic and critical minerals, but it does include tin, by all means. Tin is enumerated in the present law.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. As the gentleman well knows, in the Western States—the gentleman comes from Arizona, as I come from California—there are large deposits of manganese and other of these minerals. The present status of these holes in the ground is that not sufficient tonnage can be gotten out to satisfy the requirements of the Procurement Division. Can the gentleman assure us that the Procurement Division's specifications will be altered so that these minerals may be acceptable for the stock piles of the Government?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I trust so. I understand that a company in Montana is scheduled to furnish a large fraction of all the materials of this sort needed by the Army. I confidently hope that we may be able to supply the rest without depending on any foreign source. We have the ore. Our need for these minerals is imperative. All we need is new capital to carry on the production.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman knows that the quantities required by the Procurement Division in the last purchase of these materials were so great that no hole in the western country could supply them.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That is true at our present backward rate of development, but we will develop our American mines and facilities under this bill until we can supply our full needs both as to quantity and quality or character.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Washington. His State needs this legislation and will benefit by it. The gentleman's interest and energy in promoting mining is second only to his great interest in reclamation and empire building.

Mr. LEAVY. I understand that the entire Committee on Banking and Currency have reported this bill favorably. There was no adverse report.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It was a unanimous report.

Mr. LEAVY. I know that the gentleman from Arizona for months has been working on this matter, because I have had the privilege of working with him on it. I know what it means to the smaller operator in the mining industry. I know, too, what it means to the Government at this particular time. It is not a case of giving anything, it is a case of getting security for everything that the Government makes in the way of an advance or a loan. But this legislation does offer promise, a great promise, of the Government's protecting itself in this national-defense program insofar as critical and strategic minerals are concerned. Also, it does give opportunity to the small operator to carry on his highly important work with success, whereas heretofore he has been greatly handicapped. No Member has been more effective in working for the small operator, even the prospectors, than the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman is exactly correct in his statement concerning the bill, and I wish to thank him for the generous words.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have great respect for the able and diligent gentleman's knowledge of mining and mining problems, having served on another committee with him and having had the benefit of that knowledge. Is not this bill one which really is along the lines of good, solid Republican doctrine, of a protective tariff to protect the people in our country against the internationalists who want to bring things in from foreign countries and furnish employment in foreign lands but not in the United States of America?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Well, I would say it is drawn along good, patriotic American lines for the better security of our country. I may say that the mining industry as a whole has not been receiving a subsidy. We want private enterprise to enter into the mining field and develop these small mines so that they will become large mines. Every large mine in this country was at one time a small mine, and this measure will make more large mines out of small mines.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This bill, if enacted, will not only add to our national defense but will protect our American mining industry and the employees therein from cheap, chiseling competition from foreign countries and furnish jobs to many of our people who cannot now find a job.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. There is no doubt about the benefits of this bill, both as to national security and as to furnishing employment. It will do both, and I wish we might extend its provisions to all small operators with class C loans.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I think it should be passed, and I am glad the gentleman brought the bill on the floor for consideration. He has rendered an exceptional service to our country and our countrymen in doing this.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is this a protection measure? If it is, I am for it.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION LOANS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MINERALS AND THE RELATIONSHIP OF THESE MINERALS AND HYDROELECTRIC POWER TO OUR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to join my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] in support of this measure H. R. 9996 which is a companion bill of S. 4008, and I want to commend the gentleman for his efficient service in presenting the measure to the committee and to the Congress. The bill authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals which, in the opinion of the Corporation, would be of value to the United States in time of war, and to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more adequate loans for mineral development purposes. In connection with the purposes of this bill to finance these development operations, I want to call to the attention of the House the importance of these strategic and critical minerals and other materials in formulating our national-defense program. I also draw attention to the fact that the reduction and processing of these materials together with the later fabrication and utilization of them requires large quantities of low-cost continuous hydroelectric power. Fortunately, the larger deposits of these minerals lie in the western part of the United States and Alaska, and are in the areas contiguous to our greatest potential reservoir of hydroelectric power. A bottleneck in national defense is the inability to secure adequate supplies of strategic and critical materials which now come to us from abroad. To overcome this, we must develop sources of these essentials or their substitutes within our own borders so far as possible.

As stated by the Committee on Banking and Currency, in submitting the report on this bill:

> The developments of modern warfare make greatly increased demands on the mineral industry. The supply of raw materials, particularly strategic minerals, which it must furnish to be fabricated into mechanisms of warfare is vastly enlarged. The enactment of this measure will do much to stimulate development of new sources of supply for the strategic and critical minerals, and can be considered as an essential to national defense.

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, an announcement received the attention of the Nation's press—it related to the contributions which the Pacific Northwest can make to the national-defense program in supplying critical and strategic minerals. This announcement covered the release of a comprehensive report by the Bonneville Power Administration to the Department of the Interior on Industries Important to the National Defense, Feasible of Establishment in the Pacfic Northwest. This report was transmitted by Secretary Ickes to the National Defense Commission.

It is interesting to note an editorial on this report in the Washington (D. C.) Evening Star of August 27.

I quote from this editorial:

> In a report submitted to the National Defense Commission by Secretary Ickes, sound arguments are presented for establishing certain essential war industries in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific coast areas. The far West is a large producer of copper, mercury, zinc, tungsten, and other essential defense materials. These must now be transported to the East for processing and fabrication. Through the use of the vast hydroelectric power resources developed by Government projects, these materials, the report points out, could be manufactured into munitions in the far West, if facilities were available, thus securing a wider geographical distribution to our defense industries. This is a desirable objective.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to state that we in the Northwest concur unequivocally with the sentiments expressed in this editorial. It has been my particular pleasure to note that this report expands and details the facts stated in my House speech of May 8, 1940. The report referred to in this editorial grew out of an original request of Senator HOLMAN, of Oregon, and myself to the Bonneville Administrator for a catalog of Northwestern resources available for contribution to the national-defense program. During my service in the Congress, I have been engaged in providing for the development of the mineral deposits and other natural resources of the Northwest in connection with the use of Bonneville power and also in bringing industries to that area to use the power and this wealth of natural resources. This report gives earnest and detailed consideration toward the use of the Government's development on the Columbia River for processing native materials, which are feasible of commercial development and are necessary for our national welfare. Our basic national defense outside of manpower depend largely upon mechanical equipment. To provide this we must have vast quantities of strategic, critical, and other minerals and materials, together with a continuous supply of low-cost electroenergy for manufacturing purposes. These materials and power must be brought together. I invite your attention to this factual report.

I wish to lay before you some facts as to what the Pacific Northwest can and will offer to the Nation's defense program in connection with strategic and critical minerals and hydroelectric power.

PRESENT CONTRIBUTIONS TO NATIONAL WELFARE

Many of you, my colleagues, are well aware of the vast storehouse of natural resources found in what was formerly called the Oregon country—in our great forests, our clear streams abounding in salmon and other fish life, our rolling wheat plains, our vast uplands producing livestock and wool, our rugged mountains with their wealth of mineral treasures. Let me state a few figures to indicate the extent to which this pioneer country, now embracing four States—Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana, one-eighth of the land area of the continental United States—provides the Nation with essential products.

In agriculture, the four Pacific Northwest States in 1938 produced one-tenth of the Nation's potatoes, one-fifth of the wheat. The Pacific coast and Alaska furnished over one-third of the fish caught for food in the United States.

Our forest products—from our tremendous timber resources—provide 40 percent of the Nation's lumber production, one-third of the wood veneer, almost one-fourth of the wood pulp. We still have 55 percent of the volume of standing saw timber of the Nation.

In minerals, the emphasis of the past has been on the precious metals—gold and silver. However, in recent years, mineral production has been increasing and there are many who believe that we have not yet begun to realize the potentialities of the region's mineral resources. The 11 Western States contribute, in terms of national production, 100 percent of the magnesia for refractories, 98 percent of the potash, 93 percent of the copper, 86 percent of the mercury, 55 percent of the lead and almost as much of the cadmium, and 31 percent of the zinc. Some of these items are minor parts of our national consumption, due to the size of imports, but their importance cannot be minimized.

The Pacific Northwest States themselves, in spite of the relative infancy of their mining industry, contribute over two-thirds of the Nation's production of antimony, one-seventh of the copper, one-third of the lead, one-seventh of the zinc, one-fourth of the mercury, almost half of the manganese ore, and one-seventh of the tungsten concentrates.

COLUMBIA RIVER HYDROELECTRIC POWER

There is, however, one resource in which the Northwest stands above all other regions of the Nation, if I may take pardonable pride in pointing it out. Our mountain peaks, clothed in eternal snow and ice and extensive forests, are the sources of mighty rivers—tributaries to the Columbia River, whose steady flow descends from Canadian headwaters and cleaves the Cascade range before pouring into the blue Pacific. This—Jefferson's Columbia—and its tributaries contain the Nation's greatest source of water power, about 44 percent of the potential hydroelectric power of all the streams of the continental United States.

If we were to translate the potential annual output of the Columbia River Basin in terms of use, we would obtain the fabulous figure of 90,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours—an amount equal to the output of the entire electric-utility industry of the United States in 1929. This is a wealth which, unlike many resources, cannot be depleted and which will serve the Nation for ages to come.

Mr. Speaker, this catalog, brief as it must be at this time, is only a silhouette of the full picture. With the rugged pioneering of a solid people, we can expect an upward spiral of progress the like of which this Nation has so often experienced. Our population is not large—it is only one-thirtieth of the Nation's total. The people of the Northwest, descendants of pioneers, love the American flag and are steeped in a spirit of Americanism and are willing to do their full share in this emergency or any other crisis where their country's welfare is at stake.

Let me point out a significant fact. Our population has been increasing at a greater rate than the Nation as a whole. The rich soil, the abundant rainfall, the alluring promise of the Northwest, are drawing many earnest families from less-bountiful sections of our country, seeking fresh opportunities in the land of great distances and great vistas. The opportunities they seek are not to be denied them, because this is still a pioneering Nation. Our physical frontiers may not be as boundless as they were 50 years ago, but human ingenuity and the desire to wrest security, happiness, and an honest livelihood from our natural resources knows no boundaries. These western citizens will furnish the manpower for the development of these vast natural resources of the Northwest.

DEFENSE ASPECTS OF PACIFIC NORTHWEST RESOURCES

I will analyze somewhat rapidly the specific phases of Pacific Northwest resource utilization which are of primary importance to our national-defense program. I will restrict my remarks to power and minerals and their interrelationship.

ELECTRO INDUSTRIES

It has been pointed out frequently that modern civilization owes much of its material progress to the industries whose basic processes are entirely dependent on electric power. For example, our light metals, abundantly distributed in the earth's crust, would be unavailable to us were it not for the so-called electrolytic cell. Similarly, the hard metals without which the automobile and the airplane could not give us the remarkable services they offer are products of the electric furnace. That magic force, resident in electric power, wrests from the lowly rock the metals and the nonmetals which permit man to annihilate space, to multiply his strength, to carry his voice and thought over hill and dale, to make the synthetic materials that are the basis for so many household articles.

Important as electro industries may be to our normal everyday life, they become indispensable to a defense program. If it were not for the many ferro-alloys and the alloy steels, our guns would bark a few times and then remain silent—worn out, incapable of guiding the shell of destruction to its appointed mark. Our battleships would be cardboard, our tanks could not resist the fire of the antitank artillery. Our airplanes would essay the hopeful but short-lived flight of the barnyard fowl.

Similarly in the manufacture of munitions, the product of the electro industries ranks high. Brass for shell casings, the nitrates for explosives, the chlorines for gases, are all derived from the electric furnace and the electrolytic cell.

I need not emphasize or describe further because it is fact today that electric power, guided by the genius of the scientist and the engineer is one of the most important items in our national-defense industries. I would like to point out, however, that these electro industries require very large blocks of continuous and cheap electric power—they cannot use power whose unit price is much in excess of 3 mills per kilowatt-hour, nor whose availability is limited to portions of the year or of the day. These industries need power uninterruptedly, throughout the year and throughout the day.

POWER FOR DEFENSE INDUSTRIES

There are not many places in our great Nation where such power is available or can be made available in time to meet our present crisis. Steam power except in one or two cases, very special cases, cannot be generated at sufficiently low cost to meet the requirements of these industries. Rivers of the type that insure continuous flow are rare. That is why the development of the Columbia River offers paramount advantages to electro industries. With Bonneville's generators producing thousands of kilowatts and Grand Coulee about to make its share available, and T. V. A. in operation, the Nation need not fear the acute power shortages experienced during the last World War. Let me quote from a recent book on the subject of preparedness, (Mobilizing Civilian America, Tobin & Bidwell, Council on Foreign Relations, New York, 1940, pp. 198, 201.):

> In 1916 the war boom brought a sudden and tremendous demand for fuel. Hydroelectric power available to eastern munitions plants was soon fully utilized. * * * The need for a greatly increased electric power supply to meet the extraordinary demands of World War production was brought to a focus late in the summer of 1917 by an urgent call for more power from hydroelectric plants in the Niagara Falls-Buffalo area at a time when the Canadian Government was threatening to prohibit the export of power. To relieve this regional shortage, the President arranged to trade American coal for Canadian power and requisitioned the entire output of the Hydraulic and Niagara Falls Power companies, furnishing them with a restricted schedule of approved customers. The increased use of steam power in the area also helped to reduce the strain, but coal shortages periodically made this a precarious resource. In the Pittsburgh area the war load taxed some of the power plants to the point of break-down, requiring curtailment of nonessential consumption; less serious shortages occurred at the same time in the Philadelphia and industrial New Jersey areas.

Mr. Speaker, what was a contributing reason for these break-downs? What activity so suddenly enlarged created the abnormal demands for power? I need only remind you that these areas were primarily those of concentrated electro industries.

It is obvious that the Nation cannot afford a recurrence of this situation and it need not. The facilities in the Tennessee Valley are being expanded and will be ready in some 2 or 3 years. Today the Columbia River offers plentiful power for industries whose products are needed now in our defense program. This fact must not be overlooked by industry and our defense agencies. Let me specify. The Bonneville will have 100,000 kilowatts of firm power available at the beginning of next year, above and over the amounts now committed and needed for reserves. In August of next year, 200,000 kilowatts will be available from Bonneville and Grand Coulee, and in January of 1942, 400,000 kilowatts. These quantities result from the wisdom of Congress in providing the funds and authorizations to advance generating facilities at these projects.

Other important industries can be established in the Pacific Northwest for operation within a year to 18 months. The Aluminum Company of America's plant on the Columbia River has begun production and will make 30,000 tons of pig aluminum a year, 60,000,000 pounds for our airplanes, our transport facilities, and other national uses of the light metal.

These industries will provide for shipbuilding and repair, for our West Coast aircraft industry (which represented 60 percent of the dollar volume business of the national industry, for ordnance and munitions to be used in the defense of the West coast and our Pacific outposts. They will obviate choking eastern industry and will prove not only desirable decentralization, but would also diversify our sources of supplies in times of emergency.

By locating these industries in this area where raw products and power are already available or obtainable, we would also he adhering to another principle in national defense, namely, locating essential defense industries away from coast areas and thus less vulnerable to attack.

Including the Aluminum Company of America these industries could produce the following tonnages of basic materials important not only to the normal economic life of the Pacific Northwest but to our national defense:

Produce	Power requirement	Annual production
	Kilowatts
Aluminum	(65,000)	(30,000 tons of metal.)
High-grade iron and steel	25,000	50,000 tons of metal.
Ferrochrome	30,000	20,000 tons of alloy.
Electrolytic zinc	15,000	35,000 tons of metal.
Nitrates	60,000	30,000 tons fixed nitrogen.
Calcium carbide	10,000	20,000 tons of chemical.
Total (less Alcoa plant)	140,000	155,000 tons of products.

In other words, these 5 industries (if we omit the Aluminum Co. whose requirements are already met at Bonneville) would consume a major portion of the output of these 2 dams, if we consider only minimum economic plant sizes. Of course, these are only 5 industries, picked somewhat at random from the list prepared by the Bonneville Power Administration. There are other industries which may well become established in the Pacific Northwest and whose power demands could yet be satisfied from the Federal plants which would utilize these strategic and critical materials. For example, there are certain new developments which may take place such as the production of the light metal magnesium from northwest ores; of electrolytic manganese and chromium, also from northwest and western ores; of aluminum from domestic alunite ores, found in the West. The power demands of these new industries would aggregate an additional 160,000 kilowatts per year. There is only one place in this Nation where such abundant power can be found and can be made available within the next year or so—the Pacific Northwest. This power is being sold at the lowest wholesale prices in the Nation, and due to the interconnections undertaken by the Bonneville Power Administration with the great power plants in the Puget Sound area and with Grand Coulee Dam, this power will be available practically 100 percent of the time, day in and day out.

Much of this power must be taken over transmission lines to the sites where industry will locate. Although this Congress has wisely appropriated moneys for such transmission lines, there are still gaps which should be filled at the earliest possible moment. We cannot allow this great reservoir of power to remain without the necessary outlets to market.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST MINERALS AND THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. Speaker, I have discussed so far the benefits of which this Nation can take immediate advantage of the deposits of strategic and critical materials and the huge power resources of the Pacific Northwest. I would like now to examine briefly our mineral situation.

In recent sessions this body has enacted legislation designed to assist the Nation in becoming independent of foreign sources of ores which have been designated as strategic and critical by the War Department. These are termed strategic and critical by virtue of the fact that our domestic production of these ores has been insufficient to meet the demands of national consumption. There are at least two important reasons for which this domestic production has been of minor size. One is a scarcity of ore, the richness of which would be comparable to foreign sources; the second is that industrial practice has been built on the utilization of certain grades not obtainable in this country. I do believe that we should not relax for one instant in our effort to make our domestic sources available in the event our foreign source of supply should be cut off. No matter how small our domestic production may be, it may be the difference between success and failure should a critical situation arise.

The agencies of the Federal Government entrusted with strategic and critical mineral exploration have diligently engaged in work during the past years which should ultimately reveal the extent of our domestic reserves. They have also engaged in investigations of methods to be used in beneficiating these domestic ores. I frankly wish that the Congress had implemented this program with greater funds and greater authority, for today, we might rest easier if this work were more advanced than it is.

Strategic and critical minerals are found in the West. The deposits of chrome, of manganese, antimony, and tungsten have not been fully charted, but I am one of those who believes that the Pacific Northwest has not as yet been examined with the care that it deserves. Certainly, it is proper that as long as doubt exists, we must redouble our efforts to search, examine, and evaluate that which we believe we have in the soil of the region.

Mr. Speaker, some of the various minerals now known in the Oregon country are of low grade, but are particularly susceptible to treatment by electric power. For example, my investigations show that metallic chrome and manganese can be obtained from Northwest ores, that magnesium—that increasingly important light metal—can be produced from Northwest magnesite and magnesitic dolomites by the electric furnace, and apparently at a price level lower than that now available. Aluminum can be made from alunite, a western ore. It is important to be able to use our own raw materials for the production of aluminum instead of depending on foreign supplies of bauxite or our rapidly shrinking domestic bauxite deposits. And so the list could be expanded. This development and use of these native deposits depends on the effort of the scientist in his laboratory and pilot plant, of the geologist and mining man, of the engineer who can translate these investigations into commercial operations.

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to Alaskan deposits of nickel, easily accessible to the Columbia River area and Bonneville power.

Armor plate, which is the bottle neck of the Navy's accelerated building program, is an alloy of steel and nickel, with a small additional copper content to facilitate fabrication. The availability and supply of nickel determines the rate of manufacture of such plate.

I am told that 90 percent of the world's output of nickel is controlled by a closed operating combine. Independent concerns have sought out all the world sources of nickel; for example, there was a recent independent development of nickel in Finland sponsored by Norwegian interests which has been lately seized by the Russians.

In my speech of May 8, 1940, reference is made to the nickel situation wherein after the Deutschland incident in 1915 Canada required that nickel smelting be accomplished within her borders, which resulted in the closing of our nickel smelters in New Jersey. The Navy's supply of nickel for armor plate is dependent on one Canadian smelter. If this plant were put out of commission by sabotage our Navy's program would be stalled. This situation needs correction.

High-grade nickel ore deposits exist on our Alaskan islands and it has been estimated that these nickel ores can be electrolytically reduced with Columbia power and produce a product very much lower in cost than the Navy Department is now paying. This situation had been explained both to the Navy Department and to the Advisory Commission. Armor plate can be produced electrolytically from Alaskan ores at less than half the cost the Federal Government is now paying for this steel. Stainless steel can also be produced from Alaskan ores and Columbia River power for about a quarter of the present sale price of stainless steel.

RESEARCH—ITS PLACE IN NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. Speaker, it is to this subject that I wish to address my concluding remarks. I do not hesitate to say that we, as human beings, are often subject to prejudices, and particularly when the word "research" is mentioned. In spite of the fact that our modern existence is entirely predicated on the effort of the research worker, we still shy away and think in terms of the impractical, the visionary. I need not catalog those to whom we are indebted for the radio, the telephone, the airplane, our great bridges and buildings, the humming of dynamos of industry—over and over again, some character of genius, more often than not, starving and ridiculed, laid the foundation for what we now accept with nary a thought. Today we are in need more than ever of research. We need to encourage not only private initiative but public initiative as well. Research is a field where only the truth can prevail, whether developed in the laboratories of large industries or in the cubicles of Government research buildings or in the class rooms of our educational institutions.

In the present emergency it behooves us to give every encouragement to the effort of our Nation's research workers. Their labor will point the way to security.

The Federal Government has built many laboratories, many institutions where Nature's wealth is probed, where man's ills are studied. Our Government scientists are in the foremost ranks of the world of science; their discoveries stand engraved in the annals of man's ingenuity. Quietly and unostentatiously they perform their experiments, they seek to find the whys, the hows, the wherefores. I salute them.

Mr. Speaker, I predict that the Northwest and the Nation can and will gain much by investigations of Pacific Northwest resources, of the utilization of electric power in new ways. Especially today when we seek to distribute our industries, strengthen our methods of production, utilize even our low-grade resources, new techniques must be sought and developed.

The greatest need of the Pacific Northwest is what has been called economic equality. Economic equality is only possible when we convert our raw assets into a more valuable finished product. It is the fabrication of the finished product which gives us employment and enhanced income. Without industrial research our objective cannot be reached. Unfortunately the bulk of our national private research has been carried on in eastern industrial centers and has been built around eastern and imported raw materials. The small manufacturer cannot afford this pioneering effort, and as a result the private research has been carried on by the large interests. This is a handicap that must be overcome before our smaller fabricators can expand their pay-roll production. Industrial processes are conceived in the laboratory and are matured in the pilot plant. The Northwest must have laboratories and pilot plants, specializing in native materials. This effort must cover both small- and large-scale operations. The small-scale effort is extremely important, so that local capital and initiative can be encouraged. Large-scale operations are only the first step in any utilization program. It is the small fabricators using the basic reduced material who collectively produce larger employment.

Mr. Speaker, as I have pointed out previously, if we are to hold our place as a nation we must actively solve the new process and utilization problem. From my experience in pressing the utilization of northwestern materials I know that the national-research structure must be effectively expanded. I also feel that the various agencies are not fully aware of the potentialities that lie ahead. Private industrial research must be broadened and supplemented with large-scale public research. This public research must be carried on by all our public institutions in cooperation with commercial interest. To tie these together, we need what we do not have at present—a top coordinating head. I cannot too strongly urge the creation of such an organization. If we do not, we as a Nation will pay for our lack of foresight. Such research is a vital part of any defense program. Still more important is the post-war commercial effect, which I outlined on May 8 last, and which can be found on page 8870 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Although the level of income in the Northwest is relatively high, we are living on our capital—and this cannot lead to anything but eventual trouble. We are producers of raw materials and to an extent unprecedented in the history of our Nation. So long as our forests furnish us with raw material, we can survive. We know that depletion due cumulatively to the demands of our Nation for lumber, the ravages of fire, disease, and insects far exceeds the rate of replenishment of our forests. We must husband our timber resources; and in order to do so without a complete dislocation of the Northwest economy, we must diversify our occupations and increase the processing of our forest products. Unless we do so, we shall repeat the tragic events of the cut-over lands in other parts of the Nation.

Each year our Pacific Northwest colleges and universities graduate outstanding young men and women, fired with ambition to put their technical skills to work. Alas, they find themselves shut out from their fields; they eventually find their way into the large industrial research establishments of the eastern part of our Nation. How much more desirable it would be to provide them with an outlet for their talents in their own Northwest, to work out the destinies of their own region from its own resources.

Mr. Speaker, let me say in conclusion that the Pacific Northwest will be the center of electro industries in the Nation. I make that prediction confidently, because I know that nowhere else in the Nation is there comparable potential and existing supplies of low-cost power. I also know that our regional raw materials have not as yet fulfilled their promise and that research will wrest additional values now ignored or wasted. I therefore early hope that the Northwest will be blessed with the types of institutions which will not only offer opportunity for our own young people but will open vistas as yet undreamed of, through research and investigations for the utilization of power and our own regional resources. Today we need such a program even more than we ever did. If the Pacific Northwest is to contribute effectively to our national defense, it must do so in line with normal economic development. It must therefore develop to the fullest and wisest use the bounties which a generous nature has placed within our reach. I therefore am glad to support this measure which will offer some financial assistance to this program.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I very gladly yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Is it not a fact that if this bill is enacted into law it will do much to prevent the shortage of strategic minerals and will be one of the greatest aids to national defense that can be enacted?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that as a new man in this body I got many lessons from the gentleman from Nevada. He was an artillery officer about 1917 and knows that from the very lack of these things then our defense program was greatly handicapped in the first World War. The gentleman from Nevada has undoubtedly done more than any other Member of this House to see that we wisely lay in stock piles of strategic minerals. I recall that in the naval bill of 1937 the House inserted an item calling for $5,000,000 for that purpose. The gentleman from Nevada has been untiring in his efforts not only in behalf of this measure but in behalf of all others with the object that we may have home production of the strategic minerals.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking a further question.

As I understand the measure, as explained by the committee and as stated before the committee, this gives an additional $10,000,000 for loans for development of strategic minerals, as mentioned in the bill, and does not affect the arrangement for loans for gold, silver, and tin production.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. No change is made in the total amount made available for such loans, which is $10,000,000 as in the original law. The only new language furnished by this bill is the addition of strategic and critical minerals to the original three mentioned, and also the increased limit of the permissible loan raised from $20,000 to a total of $40,000 on each property eligible for it.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to substitute the Senate bill, S. 4008, for the House bill, since they are identical.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 4008) will be substituted and considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans upon sufficient security to recognized and established corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the business of mining, milling, or smelting ores. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered also to make loans to corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the development of a quartz ledge, or vein, or other ore body, or placer deposit, containing gold, silver, or tin, or gold and silver, or any strategic or critical mineral which in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be of value to the United States in time of war, when, in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, there is sufficient reason to believe that, through the use of such loan in the development of a lode, ledge, or vein, or mineral deposit, or placer gravel deposit, there will be developed a sufficient quantity of ore, or placer deposits of a sufficient value to pay a profit upon mining operations: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 shall be loaned to any corporation, individual, or partnership for such development purposes; except that not in excess of $40,000 in the aggregate may be loaned to any corporation, individual, or partnership for such purposes, if such corporation, individual, or partnership has expended funds previously obtained from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for such purposes in such manner as to justify an additional loan for such purposes: Provided further, That there shall not be allocated or made available for such development loans a sum in excess of $10,000,000."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZATION OF JESSE H. JONES TO BE APPOINTED TO AND PERFORM DUTIES OF SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 602) to authorize Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, to be appointed to, and to perform the duties of the office of Secretary of Commerce.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend, under this resolution, to have Mr. Jesse Jones perform the duties of Secretary of Commerce and also the duties of the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at the same time?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman misunderstands the purpose of the legislation. Mr. Jones is not the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Corporation operates under a separate board, of which Mr. Schram is the chairman. Mr. Jones is the Federal Loan Administrator, who acts in a supervisory capacity for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subordinate agencies, the Export-Import Bank, the Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Housing Authority, the Home and Electric Authority, and other lending agencies of the Government.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. That is about the same thing. Mr. Jones is the main cog of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and now has enough work and more than enough work for one man. How can you say that he can perform the work of two men? We read in Holy Writ that no man can serve two masters, and I think we ought to keep Mr. Jesse Jones right where he is. He is a good man and the ablest man which you new dealers have in the Government service. He was first brought into the Federal Government service through Republican administration appointment.

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will permit, let me say that the purpose of this legislation is to continue to utilize the judgment of Mr. Jones in connection with the lending agencies which we could not do if he gave his entire service to the office of Secretary of Commerce. I fully agree with the gentleman as to the value of Mr. Jones' services in connection with these lending agencies. I think it is agreed by all who are familiar with the record that he has done a marvelous job. The purpose of this resolution is to keep him in a supervisory capacity in connection with these lending agencies so we will not lose the benefit of his judgment and experience. Of course, the larger volume of the work, the details, will be handled by others, but they will have the benefit of his judgment and his cooperation in deciding the more important questions that will come before these agencies.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This new bill will not reduce in any respect the authority and the power which Mr. Jesse Jones now has with reference to this loan board?

Mr. STEAGALL. He will still serve in that capacity.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And it does not in any manner, directly or indirectly, indicate that we are liable to have some of these dollar-a-year fellows, like that racketeer, Earl Bailey, from J. and W. Seligman Co. and Tri-Continental Corportion, on this lending job, does it?

Mr. STEAGALL. I would not like to assent to all the implications of the gentleman's statement, but the purpose is to retain the services of Mr. Jones in connection with the lending agencies.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And his status with the lending agencies will be precisely the same after the passage of this bill as it was before?

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Therefore I shall not object.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, this is such an important matter and there are so few Members here I make a point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I have made a point of order that there is no quorum present and I insist on it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota makes a point of order there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, for the time being I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield to me.

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman inform the House just what activities are embraced in the department Mr. Jones now heads? Is the Home Owners' Loan included?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Export-Import Bank?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, its subordinates, and other agencies just mentioned.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Home Loan Bank and the Rural Electrification?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; the Home Loan Bank Board, but not Rural Electrification.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, will the gentleman tell the House?

Mr. STEAGALL. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation; the Export-Import Bank; the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. KNUTSON. And the Electric Home and Farm Authority?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. The Commodity Credit Corporation has been transferred to the Treasury Department and is no longer operated in connection with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; nor is it under the supervising authority of Mr. Jones.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the purpose of this—to work Mr. Jones to death?

Mr. STEAGALL. We hope not. He is certainly a very hard working man.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not want to kill him off. I think he is the outstanding man in this administration. I do not want to see you folks pile so much work on him that you will kill him.

Mr. STEAGALL. We have a feeling that it would be very unfortunate to the country for Mr. Jones to sever his connection with these lending agencies at this time. One reason for that is the work that will be done by the Export-

Import Bank in connection with loans that will be authorized by the measure which passed the House a few days ago, and which it is expected will become law during the present session. We are going to authorize loans in the amount of $500,000,000, in addition to amounts now authorized, to the nations of the Western Hemisphere. This will fit in with his duties as Secretary of Commerce. He has an experience of nearly 10 years in connection with the lending agencies of the Government. I do not think it is unfair to say that, in the light of his experience, his judgment cannot be duplicated by any other public official. We do not want to lose the benefit of his services in connection with these agencies, by having him surrender these duties in order to accept the appointment to the office of Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, I do not want my good friend from Alabama to misunderstand me. Personally, I would like to see all the functions of the executive branch of the Government transferred to Mr. Jones. I think we would have a great improvement. Of course, we all admit that it cannot be any worse than it is now. But I am just wondering whether this is the thing to give Mr. Jones. I would be willing to vote to declare a vacancy down at the White House and move Mr. Jones in.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course you will have an opportunity in a few days to deal with the matter of occupancy of the White House. [Laughter.]

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I think some members of the committee felt that, while this appointment would be unprecedented from the fact that you are adding a department head to his job, the duties of the Federal Loan Administrator, which since they have power over industry and banks and homes and billions of dollars worth of property, the ability to foreclose or not to foreclose, is a power which, I think it would be fair to say, is greater than any President ever had over those same activities prior to 1932; yet some Members felt that, in view of past performance, it was very likely that a man might be appointed as head of the Department of Commerce who would not be a businessman at all, and for that reason we felt it was just as well to consent to let this man who had this additional power be appointed, since those powers were only one of a handful of powers held by the President.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is probably true that lending authority has been granted by the Congress in some instances that would not have been granted but for the great confidence we have in the administration of those agencies under Jesse Jones.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, it must not be forgotten we have had 43 emergencies in the last 7½ years.

Mr. JOHNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNS. I am interested in another feature and that is in knowing whether or not it would be possible to have the services of Mr. Jones even though he became Secretary of Commerce and somebody else took his position as chairman of this committee. I read in the Merry-Go-Round a couple of days ago that even though two members of the Supreme Court have been appointed, they have been in counsel with the President of the United States on what ought to be done with these destroyers. It seems to me that if the members of the Supreme Court of the United States can sit in on matters that they may later on have to pass upon themselves, it might be possible to get the use of Mr. Jones even though somebody else was appointed in his place. What do you think about that?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am in hearty accord that it is desirable to obtain the services of Mr. Jones as Federal Loan Administrator.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin will admit that he can call in the whole Supreme Court and he would not have very much.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There being no objection the Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Joint Resolution 602

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, may continue in such office and be appointed to, in the manner now provided by law, and may exercise the duties of the Office of Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That the total compensation to be paid him as Secretary of Commerce and as Federal Loan Administrator shall be that provided by law for the Secretary of Commerce.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VICKSBURG NATIONAL MILITARY PARK, STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9656), to authorize the acceptance of donations of property for the Vicksburg National Military Park, in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Reserving the right to object, may we have a brief explanation of this bill?

Mr. DEROUEN. This bill merely authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to take title to certain areas contiguous to the park at Vicksburg. The citizens are willing to donate this land to the Government and it is very necessary because of conditions existing at the entrance of the park in order to build a road.

No appropriation is involved. It is simply authorization to accept title to land donated to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for further explanation.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely authorizes the Park Service of the Department of the Interior to accept land adjacent to the Vicksburg National Park. People living adjacent to the park are having a great deal of trouble in getting ingress and egress to and from their homes. Because of park improvements that have been made in the past 5 or 6 years these entrances have been closed by reason of grading work and the cutting down of banks. The Department of the Interior has no authority to go on private property and construct a highway to relieve these people.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGEHEE. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does this involve the transfer of any more battleships?

Mr. McGEHEE. No; not this bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. McGEHEE. That is the sole purpose of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept, in behalf of the United States, donations of lands, buildings, structures, and other property, or interests therein, within a distance of 1 mile of the present boundaries of the Vicksburg National Military Park, which he may determine to be of historical interest in connection with said park, the title to such property or interests therein to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

All such property or interests therein, upon acceptance thereof, shall become a part of the Vicksburg National Military Park and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my extension of remarks certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include an article by Andrew C. McLaughlin, head of the department of history, University of Chicago, and Claude H. Van Tyne, head of the department of history, University of Michigan, entitled "A History of the United States for Schools."

I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a report of David Hirschfield, commissioner of accounts, city of New York, on British Propaganda Agencies Are Active in America.

Mr. Speaker, this slightly exceeds the two and one-half pages allowed for the ordinary extension of remarks, but I have an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the requests of the gentleman from Montana will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein 3 newspaper articles against all isms.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on two subjects and to include in one a speech by Milo Perkins entitled "Feeding America First," and in the other to include a resolution of the General Welfare Federation of Southern California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

SUPERHIGHWAYS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, what I have to say will be of interest only to those who are concerned with national defense and the security of the Nation for all time.

Five years ago I called the attention of the House to the proposition that it might be well to consider the question of building highways across the Nation throughout its length and across its breadth, and I chose to call them transcontinental and north-and-south highways. At that time I said that undoubtedly there would be a lot of unemployment in the years to come and that I knew of no better way in which to put the unemployed to work than building highways not to last 50 or 100 years but 1,000 years or more. We have built some highways, but we have not built the real superhighways we are going to build across the Nation east and west and across the Nation north and south in the near future.

If I may be pardoned for referring to Pennsylvania for a few minutes, I will tell you something of what we have done in this State. In the western part of the State are the ranges of the Allegheny Mountains. The Pennsylvania Railroad winds in and out, over and across these mountains. The William Penn Highway runs from Pittsburgh to Harrisburg across these mountains. The Lincoln Highway runs across these mountains from Pittsburgh to Harrisburg and the old National Park Highway, commonly known as Route 40, runs across these mountains. The distance is about 200 miles. With these three highways paralleling, so to speak, it was thought that the time had come in transportation for a new highway to be built. So the Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission, receiving a grant from the P. W. A. about 2½ years ago and getting a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, built the Pennsylvania Turnpike at a cost of about $64,000,000. This means it cost about $400,000 a mile to build this highway.

You may ask, How are we going to pay for it? We are going to pay for it by tolls. The agreement with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is that they will pay for it in 16 years, but with the contracts and the verbal understandings with the trucking corporations and the public it looks now as though they would pay for it in 8 years. I mention that because the days of superhighways are here and in the interest of national defense I would like to call your attention to the fact it was my privilege and my duty to go to Alaska with my committee a few weeks ago on the national defense set-up. As I see it, if we are going to protect the Western Hemisphere, and especially if we are going to protect it from the Panama Canal north, one of the first things we should do is to build a highway from Alaska on down through Canada, Washington, California, and Mexico to the Panama Canal, and I mean a good, substantial highway.

Someone may get up and say that these highways will be targets, but before you ask me that question, let me call your attention to the fact that as much as we dislike Mr. Hitler's proceedings, before he started any of his destruction he built big highways from the eastern coast to the western coast and north and south and he was shrewd enough in his propaganda work to get over into France and Belgium and there he had his agencies build highways so that they would dovetail right up to his highways. This was all completed before the war started. When he got ready to make his lunge on France the highways were built, and paid for by the nation he was to attack.

If we are going to have a two-ocean Navy in the United States we will need right now one big superhighway right across the middle of the Nation and one 50 to 75 miles back, running up and down each coast.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman mentioned Alaska.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is this Government negotiating with Canada for a right-of-way?

Mr. SNYDER. Not as I know of.

Mr. KNUTSON. Why did we not include a right-of-way in that battleship deal some couple of weeks ago?

Mr. SNYDER. Battleships are on the ocean. Roads are on land.

Mr. KNUTSON. I know, but when we traded these ships for naval bases, why did we not ask for a right-of-way along the west coast of Canada which would give us a highway up to Alaska? I am offering that as a serious suggestion.

Mr. SNYDER. I am going to look into that for the gentleman, and I will see why that was not done. I will try to find out.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am surprised that was not included.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that about a year and a half ago the Congress passed a bill authorizing the establishment of a commission to be known as the Alaskan International Highway Commission. I happened to be chairman of the American section. Canada has appointed a like commission. We have had conferences and negotiations for 2 years now. We have our reports ready. The Joint Defense Board is taking up the matter and, as the gentleman well points out, those of you who have been to Alaska know the real necessity for having some means of ingress and egress in that territory.

Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If the Japanese should try to take Alaska, for instance, and they sent their fleet to intercept the American fleet, there is no way we could get to that precious possession. May I say, transgressing on the gentleman's time a little, he points out the superhighway through Pennsylvania. We cannot fly to Alaska very safely today up the coast. We cannot fly the interior, because an air line, like a railroad, needs a roadbed; an air line needs some flying fields. If we built a highway up there like there is in Pennsylvania you could land these planes or you could build landing fields and it is time that this Nation, emulating some of the things that have been done in Europe, build a superhighway. This Alaska proposition is an important matter.

Mr. KNUTSON. I notice in the morning paper that we are getting ready to trade off some tanks. Why can we not get a right-of-way from Canada in return for the tanks?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that what we are trying to do is to arrive at what we call a financial formula for building this highway. We want to sit down with the Canadian Commission and work that out. We would like certain concessions; yes. We would like the use of the right-of-way at all times. We do not want any discrimination as between American and Canadian citizens. We want particularly the right to use that highway at all times of emergency. The President talks about continental defenses. This is one of the most important things to be done and if we are going to protect Canada they ought to give us the right to use this highway to get to our own most precious possession. As far as I know there is no difficulty.

Mr. KNUTSON. Are there any customs restrictions?

Mr. MAGNUSON. There are now.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, you will notice that I have run an additional red line [indicating] along the middle there.

In talking with those at the head of our Army, our Army engineers, and others who are interested in national defense, just as you are, they say they believe a highway such as this would be very desirable. As you know, my bill calls for a highway eight lanes wide, with 11 to 12 feet in each lane, and a right-of-way 500 feet wide, all leveled down. There will be no poles, no wires, nothing at all on this 500 feet. The lighting system would be no higher than the edge of the concrete, so that you would have a landing field clear across the Nation, as was suggested by the gentleman from Washington.

I may say that according to the inside information we get from our Intelligence Service and from the War Department, many a German plane has landed on the German highways in this emergency.

The second road we would build would be one up and down the western coast, and then one up and down the eastern coast, running anywhere from 30 to 60 to 75 miles in from the coast. That would be a link in national defense that is most necessary, as our national-defense people see it, especially as to the transcontinental road, because if you are going to have a two-ocean Navy you surely ought to have a highway across here that would afford transportation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has called to the attention of the Congress not only on this but on previous occasions a matter which has aroused tremendous interest throughout the country. There is no question but that in the near future a chain of highways as outlined by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be constructed and put into operation. Not only from the angle of national defense but from the angle of the convenience of our country, rapidity of travel, and comfort, highways of that nature will do more to bring about unity among all the sections of the United States than almost anything I know of at the present time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is to be highly congratulated—and I know I speak the sentiments of my colleagues in this—on being such an ardent advocate of such a practical proposition. It is only a matter of time when it will be consummated.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from the other end of the Nation—from Massachusetts to Florida.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I want to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania on his long and consistent work. I recall that more than 6 years ago the gentleman explained this highway system. The highway, just as the gentleman has explained, would go from the northernmost part to the southernmost part of the United States, including my own State. It would be vital in national defense because of the strategic considerations that have been recently brought up. I recall that time and time again the gentleman has spoken to this House and emphasized the need of these important transcontinental highways. The gentleman deserves the commendation of the Nation for his consistent work. I believe he will be rewarded by success in this project, which will be so vital to the national-defense program of the United States.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I believe the gentleman deserves an enormous amount of credit for the work he has done on this proposition. I notice that apparently the tape on the map on the blackboard before us has slipped a little bit, so that it does not show the highway as going through Lowell, Mass., as it did before. Lowell is in a direct line from Canada. My district is very highly industrialized. I notice that one of the lower main highways does go through some of the towns in my district.

Mr. SNYDER. Evidently the tape was not placed on the map as accurately as it should have been.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It slipped a little bit.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I would like to make the suggestion that if the gentleman is going to have superhighways they do not end down here at Chicago but go right on through Milwaukee to Canada. I would make the further suggestion, in view of what has been stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] with reference to not including the highway right-of-way in the negotiations for the naval bases. I sincerely hope we do not sell or transfer any of our very limited number of tanks to foreign nations or anyone else, because we need them for training our own men. Let us not sell or trade any more naval vessels for rights-of-way or any other concession. Let us get these rights-of-way and give Great Britain a receipt for a part payment on the $6,000,000,000 which she owes our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury. If we are going to sell or trade additional portions of our inadequate Navy away we might have these highways but we will not have an adequate defense. If Hitler comes over here we will have to go out and meet him on the sea with rowboats, if we sell or trade essential portions of it to the British.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I want to thank the gentleman for putting Dunkirk on the main line.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not see Duluth, Minn., marked on this highway. It is in a direct line with St. Francis, Ontario, and Winnipeg.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know just what towns the highway would run through.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. I believe it is very commendable of the gentleman to offer this suggestion. I am somewhat familiar with conditions in Alaska. I should like to know if any survey has been made of Yucatan, in lower Mexico, Nicaragua, Honduras, and Salvador. That is a very difficult territory to penetrate.

Mr. SNYDER. There has been, but I shall let the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] make a statement on that, as he is chairman of a commission making a study of the problem.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others who are interested that there has been some discussion here about the pan-American highway from Alaska to Yucatan and Nicaragua and down to the Canal. It is my purpose to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes later and answer any questions on this subject, because we have made a report on the whole subject, and I should be glad to report to the House on it, if you will stay here until the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has addressed the House.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman had better do that when we have a crowd here.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will do it then, but I should like to sell the idea.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I notice this highway swings a little south of Michigan. Is the gentleman aware that we are trying to put a canal across from St. Jo to Detroit on that long-ago-surveyed route for a canal, and I would like to ask whether or not this highway will interfere with that?

Mr. SNYDER. I cannot answer the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman know about that canal we are contemplating building?

Mr. SNYDER. No.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman recalls that I was a former member of the House Committee on Roads and extremely interested in fostering farm-to-market roads in order that we might have a continual flow of farm produce into these highways and give the farmer an all-weather road. Recently we made a trip over the 160-mile turnpike in Pennsylvania. I wonder if your plan is along that idea?

Mr. SNYDER. Here is a man who made a trip over the turnpike and you should listen to him.

Mr. STEFAN. We were highly impressed with it and I was wondering if the gentleman has explained to the membership of the House that today Mr. Carmody is having an important press conference on roads and also the House Committee on Roads has been giving this matter of roads for national defense, during emergencies as well as during peacetime, a great deal of consideration. Mr. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Roads, has an elaborate and highly studied plan and a very exhaustive report which he has made to the House Committee on Roads in connection with orderly planning of road construction in the United States.

Many of us, especially those of us who come from farm districts, are tremendously interested in getting the farmer out of the mud before we go into a general superhighway program. I had the opportunity of traveling over the Autobahn system in Germany a year ago. Mr. MacDonald, the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, has made that trip twice, and Mr. Charles Upham, who is one of the great road engineers of America, has also made that trip. He was consulting engineer on the turnpike construction in Pennsylvania. These experts know what our future highways should be like. It is my opinion, I may say to the gentleman, that in constructing superhighways in America, to make them successful, they must be done under one general national plan already studied by Mr. MacDonald. We cannot go into the construction of superhighways in a haphazard manner. I am sure our Roads Committee has full information.

Mr. SNYDER. I understand that thoroughly.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. In the absence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], may I ask where we are going to get the money? [Laughter.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Recently there was announced in the Baltimore Sun a rather comprehensive road program which, I understand, the War Department, the State roads commission, and the Bureau of Public Roads were collaborating on with the idea of some further development, which I assume has come under the study of the gentleman who has been advocating this plan for a number of years. I wonder if the gentleman can tell the House whether his plan is before the group that I have in mind.

Mr. SNYDER. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question and I may say that plan is before them and, naturally, they are considering all plans that anyone may have studied out and submitted to them, and like all great projects that are carried out, it is only after the consideration of many suggestions that you arrive at the best possible solution.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Then it is true that the gentleman knows the agencies to which I refer are looking ahead to some sensible and comprehensive scheme of this character?

Mr. SNYDER. That is right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Pending the construction as well as the planning of superhighways east and west, north and south, and in the present emergency, inasmuch as by way of Federal aid the Federal Government has contributed largely to highway construction in all of the States, is not the wiser course to pursue at present to strengthen the existing highways so that we will not have to await the construction of future highways during the present emergency, and particularly, in strengthening the present highways and constructing absent links, the bridges ought to be made available for use in transportation in connection with national defense, keeping in mind that one of the reasons that has justified the Congress in making Federal appropriations for highway construction is in the aid of national defense as well as in the transportation of the mails, and if we had not had in mind national defense and transportation of the mails and other Federal purposes, the probability is there would not have been nearly as strong and cogent an argument for Federal aid 25 years ago?

Mr. SNYDER. Before I yield further I want to make this observation on that point.

The California Fruit Growers' Association informed me that if such a highway as this were completed today they could deliver their many fruits and vegetables to the eastern markets at possibly 15 percent less than they can now. The same thing is true with the citrus-fruit group down here.

I do not suppose this will ever be used for military purposes, because I do not think we will ever get into war, but for commercial purposes I think it would be advantageous. As I said, we have running from Pittsburgh to Harrisburg three fine highways, two lanes, much of it three lanes and some of it four lanes. Still the Pennsylvania Railroad and big industries and public utilities said, "You can use another highway here at an elevation of not more than 2 or 3 percent, and still utilize these three from the standpoint of economy." When big business, such as the United States Steel, General Motors, and those people, get behind something and push it, I think they are doing it from the standpoint of sound business procedure.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. The Pennsylvania Turnpike from Harrisburg to Pittsburgh is probably the most gigantic and greatest highway construction in the United States and is much better than any part of the Autobahn system in Germany.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Yet there has been no objection to the construction of that road, the dream of tomorrow, a sample of what to expect in the years to come. It is a great work.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. STEFAN. But you have to connect that with your farm-to-market roads.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] said, you have to have an orderly program. You cannot go into a real national program without first taking into consideration the real blood veins of transportation, which is the bringing of raw material and products from the farms to these highways first. I think Chief McDonald has that in mind. Mr. Walter Jones, of Pennsylvania, could tell us a great story of modern highway construction if he were here.

Mr. THORKELSON. How much did this cost?

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; certainly.

Mr. STEFAN. There was an outright grant of $29,000,000 from the Federal Government, and the total cost was approximately $70,000,000. The rest of it, I believe, was borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. THORKELSON. No part of that money was put up by the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. SNYDER. Oh, no.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am very much interested in the road program of this country. I would like to inquire what is the estimated cost of this system entire or by the mile?

Mr. SNYDER. I am glad the gentleman asked that. The best estimate I can get is five hundred thousand per mile.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is it to be paid by tolls on the road?

Mr. SNYDER. Of course, I am in favor of private industry doing the thing if we can get it done, but, as I said, the Pennsylvania Turnpike Association was an authority created by the Legislature of Pennsylvania and it borrowed $36,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to pay it back in 16 years, I think. As I formerly said, however, they see their way clear to pay it back in about 8 years.

Now, with reference to the farm-to-market roads, I would like to say the Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, or the B. & O.—I was born and raised alongside of the B. & O.—said 20 years ago to people in my district, "We are no longer interested in these little stations along here. We do not want that business." They said that in your district, too. How did they say it? This does not mean anything to you, but you can follow.

Mr. STEFAN. Oh, the farm-to-market road means everything to our Nebraska people.

Mr. SNYDER. Here is Meyersdale, Garrett, Rockwood, Casselman, Markleton, Pinkerton, Fort Hill, Ursina, and Confluence. Those are little stations that were there 25 years ago, where I was born and raised. We used to go down there with the wagon from the farm and get our lime and our phosphate, and the cars would be backed in and the local freight would go by every day, put things off for the farmer and put others on. Finally they took away the station agent. They took away the operator. Finally they did not run the local any more, and finally they did away with the stopping of the passenger trains.

In other words, they said, "If you want to get this material you go 12 miles this way or 19 miles that way and get it. Go to Confluence or to Somerset." They said, "We do not want to stop any more to get these bits of material."

Then the trucker got busy. They built highways. Then we started our farm-to-market highways. I do not know how your State is, but whenever you consider Pennsylvania, I want to give Governor Pinchot a great deal of credit for advocating and building a lot of what they call farm-to-market roads, out to the main highways. I would say that Governor Earle and even Governor James are following along. I believe that you have these highways just the same as when you built the Pennsylvania Railroad across the Nation and the Baltimore & Ohio and the New York Central. They ran shuttle trains back and forth. Here was a junction, and here was a junction, and here was a junction, all back through your home district. The same thing will occur if you build these highways. I believe you will get more roads built if you build these highways—more farm-to-market roads—than if they are never built. I believe there will be more of them built immediately after in future years. You think back in your home district, of some roads built in your home community from one city to another. Nobody lived along that road. Perhaps it is 20 or 30 miles between the two towns. There was a dirt road there, or black-top road. Then they put permanent concrete there 10 years ago. Now, you think of the number of homes that have gone up between those two towns since they put in that permanent concrete road.

It has this effect, too, Mr. Speaker, and this is what I think we are all interested in and must be if we are to solve unemployment. We have got to get the people out of the cities, we must decentralize the population. I do not know anything we could do that would decentralize our population more than to build these highways, for then the people would know they were going to be there for all time to come. Then they would get out and build along these highways. What does my friend from Minnesota think about that?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I would like to have an answer to my question as to the cost of building these 16,000 miles of highways. Will it cost half a million dollars a mile as it did in Pennsylvania?

Mr. HESS. It will cost about $8,000,000,000, will it not?

Mr. SNYDER. Somewhere in that neighborhood.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Where are you going to get the $8,000,000,000?

Mr. SNYDER. As I said, I have not any definite plan. Neither has the gentleman from Wisconsin. I would rather have private industry build these roads backed up by something like the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I would let private industry furnish the money at 3 percent, 3½ percent, or 4 percent interest over a period of 16 to 20 years—that is just a suggestion.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Has the gentleman taken this up with the Bureau of Public Roads?

Mr. SNYDER. They have a copy of the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. They have not sent it down to Congress.

Mr. SNYDER. No; they have not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, this is a new way of bringing it in, it is brought in by the gentleman himself instead of from a committee.

Mr. SNYDER. Just because I have been advocating it for 6 or 8 years.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I see. And this is an election year, too!

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, many of us who have been interested in this long discussion were waiting with a great deal of interest the discussion to come on the destroyer situation; and I shall be forced to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

TRANSFER OF DESTROYERS TO GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I wish to preface my remarks by reading an article that appeared in this morning's Washington Times-Herald headed "British offered bases free, officials reveal in ships deal."

BRITISH OFFERED BASES FREE, OFFICIALS REVEAL IN SHIPS DEAL—ROOSEVELT REJECTED CHURCHILL GESTURE, INSISTED ON BARTER OF 50 DESTROYERS

(By Chesly Manly)

Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain wanted to make a grand gesture to the American people by donating, outright, leases for American air and naval bases in the British Western Hemisphere possessions from Newfoundland to British Guiana.

Only at President Roosevelt's insistence did the British Government reluctantly consent to make the base leases available on a barter basis in exchange for 50 American destroyers.

This amazing detail of the destroyers-for-bases deal was disclosed yesterday in official quarters. It explains Mr. Roosevelt's insistence at a press conference on August 16 that American destroyers were in no way involved in the pending negotiations with Great Britain for the acquisition of air and naval bases and also this declaration in Mr. Roosevelt's message to Congress last Tuesday.

"The right to bases in Newfoundland and Bermuda are gifts—generously given and gladly received."

EXCHANGE REPORTED

The President's message added that 50 destroyers had been exchanged for bases in the Bahamas, Jamaica, St. Lucia, Trinidad, Antigua, and British Guiana.

The acceptance of the base leases in Newfoundland and Bermuda as "gifts" represented a compromise whereby the administration recognized at least the principle insisted upon by Prime Minister Churchill.

Mr. Roosevelt's insistence upon bartering the destroyers for base leases that were offered as gifts was motivated by two considerations, according to information emanating from the Cabinet. One was his desire to present the deal to the country as a Yankee trade in which he had driven a hard bargain. The second and more important reason was the President's fear of the political consequences if he should undertake to sell destroyers to the British or transfer them in any other manner.

Mr. Speaker, my only purpose in speaking at this time is, if possible, to keep the record straight.

A few days ago the President of the United States sent a message to Congress, reporting that he had acquired the right to lease naval and air bases in certain of the British Dominions and Colonies in the Western Hemisphere, for the use of the United States Army and Navy in protecting the Western Hemisphere, and as a consideration therefor he was transferring to Great Britain 50 of our over-age destroyers.

With the President's message there was transmitted to Congress an opinion, delivered by the Attorney General, purporting to find authority under the law for such an exchange.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention at this time to question the wisdom of the acquisition of the naval and air bases from Great Britain. Certainly, under present circumstances, America needs outlying bases to insure an adequate defense. Whether the conditions imposed by Great Britain, under which she retains full sovereignty over the bases we have thus acquired, so inextricably links our fortunes with hers, at least in the Western Hemisphere, as to deprive us of full freedom of action with respect to future wars of the British Empire, only the unpredictable events of future years can determine. Certainly, from the viewpoint of the people of the United States, it could well be wished that we had acquired the sovereignty also. However, it is not my purpose here now to deal with that question.

First. There is no authority of law for the sale of any ship of the United States Navy whose name is on the Navy register at the time of such sale.

All of the so-called over-age destroyers, which it is proposed to transfer to Great Britain, are commissioned ships of the United States Navy, and as such are on the Navy Register.

The only authority for the sale or disposal of ships of the United States Navy is that conferred by United States Code, title 34, sections 491, 492, and 493 (22 Stat. 296 and 599, and 39 Stat. 605, respectively), and limits such sale or disposal to ships whose names have been stricken from the Navy Register of active commissioned ships. Section 491 directs the Secretary of the Navy to cause all naval vessels to be examined as often as once in 3 years, when practicable, by competent boards of officers of the Navy, which boards shall report which of said vessels are unfit for further service, and if the Secretary of the Navy concurs in such report he shall strike the name of such vessel or vessels from the Navy Register and report the same to Congress. A complete copy of all statutes will be attached at the end of this speech.

United States Code, title 34, section 492, provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall cause all vessels of the Navy which have been stricken from the Navy Register, under the provisions of the preceding section, to be appraised, and if he shall deem it for the best interest of the United States to sell any such vessel or vessels, he shall, after such appraisal, advertise for sealed proposals for the purchase of the same for a period of not less than 3 months in such newspapers as other naval advertisements are published, and shall thereafter proceed to sell the same in accordance with further provisions of the statute with respect to bids, cash deposits, and bid bonds; and then follows the provision of the statute quoted by the Attorney General and which is as follows:

Except as otherwise provided by law no vessel of the Navy shall hereafter be sold in any other manner than herein provided, or for less than such appraised value, unless the President of the United States shall otherwise direct in writing.

And the construction placed upon the same by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Levinson v. United States (258 U. S. 198, at 201), also quoted by the Attorney General, as follows:

The power of the President to direct a departure from the statute is not confined to a sale for less than the appraised value, but extends to the manner of the sale and the word "unless" qualifies both the requirements of the concluding clause.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in what the gentleman from Ohio is telling us. I have a special order for 10 minutes. Under the rules would I be allowed to yield 5 of my 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan can ask unanimous consent to postpone his own time 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 5 of the minutes I was going to use be used to better advantage, that they be yielded to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for 5 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. It will thus be seen that in the statute above quoted only those ships whose names have been removed from the Navy register may be sold and the power of the President of the United States, conferred by the statute, to make a sale otherwise than as set out in the statute relates only to the price and to the manner of sale, that is by means of an appraisement, an advertisement for bids, and the receipt of bids accompanied by a cash deposit and bond, but does not, either by express terms or by implication, give him the right to extend the category of ships to be sold beyond those whose names have been stricken from the Navy register; and for the conclusion of the Attorney General to the effect that "I find nothing that would indicate that the Congress has tried to limit the President's plenary powers to vessels already stricken from the Navy register," there is no support whatsoever. The only provision of statute authorizing the sale of any ship of the Navy is limited to those that have been stricken from the Navy register.

Second. It is a violation of law for the United States Government to deliver warships to a belligerent nation.

The Attorney General quotes United States Code, title 18, section 33, Forty Statutes, pages 217, 222, which is section 3 of title 5 of the act of June 15, 1917, which is as follows:

SEC. 33. During a war in which the United States is a neutral nation, it shall be unlawful to send out of the jurisdiction of the United States any vessel built, armed, or equipped as a vessel of war—

Or converted from a private vessel into a vessel of war—

with any intent or under any agreement or contract, written or oral, that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation or to an agent, officer, or citizen of such nation, or with reasonable cause to believe that the said vessel shall or may be employed in the service of any such belligerent nation after its departure from the jurisdiction of the United States.

And thereafter the Attorney General states:

I am of the opinion that this statute does prohibit the release and transfer to the British Government of the so-called mosquito boats now under construction for the United States Navy. * * * This will not be true, however, with respect to the over-age destroyers since they were clearly not built, armed, or equipped with any such intent or with reasonable cause to believe that they would ever enter the service of a belligerent.

In other words, in the Attorney General's opinion, the statute forbids the transfer to the British Government of ships that are not yet completed but does not prohibit the transfer of ships already completed, but such is not the language and I believe is clearly not the intent of the statute. The statute deals with two types of vessels.

(1) Any vessel built, armed, or equipped as a vessel of war. (2) Any vessel * * * converted from a private vessel into a vessel of war.

The sending of a vessel of either category out of the jurisdiction of the United States is only unlawful provided the same is done "during a war in which the United States is a neutral nation; (A) "With any intent or under any agreement or contract, written or oral, that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation, or to an agent, officer, or citizen of such nation;" or (B) "With reasonable cause to believe that the said vessel shall or will be employed in the service of any such belligerent nation after its departure from the jurisdiction of the United States."

Clearly it would seem that no such distinction is contemplated or intended by the statute as that drawn by the Attorney General between ships under construction and ships already completed. The prohibition of the statute is against the sending of ships out of the jurisdiction of the United States with intent that the same "shall be delivered to a belligerent nation" or "with reasonable cause to believe that the said vessel shall or will be employed in the service of any such belligerent nation." In other words, the purpose of the statute was to protect the neutrality of the United States and that that is its purpose is proved by the context of the statute, which appears in United States Code, title 18, chapter 2, which is headed "Offenses against neutrality," and I submit that it is, to say the least, as serious an offense against the neutrality of the United States to send out of its jurisdiction to a belligerent nation warships such as the over-age destroyers, which are immediately available for service against the enemy belligerent, as to send out of the jurisdiction of the United States partially completed ships of war, such as the mosquito boats. In either case their sending clearly constitutes a violation of both the spirit and the letter of the section in question.

Third. Plenary powers of the President are limited by the Constitution and the statutes.

The opinion of the Attorney General refers in a vague manner to what he calls the "plenary powers" of the President, and rather indirectly intimates that under such powers the President had the right, in what he conceives to be the public interest, to transfer the ships in question without respect to the limitations or prohibitions contained in any statute, in other words in entire disregard of the statutory law. In such a view the powers of the President would transcend all statutory and constitutional limitation, provided only the power exercised could be claimed to be "in the public interest." This is strange doctrine indeed and especially in these times when democracies have been and are being crushed by executives who claim that their right to do so is because it is "in the public interest." If the time ever comes when any of the three coequal branches of the Government of the United States under the Constitution assume to exercise power not granted to them by that fundamental law, then liberty, democracy, and our so-called republican form of government will have vanished. [Applause.] The doctrine announced by the Attorney General, but which apparently even he was not willing to rely upon, is denied by one of the greatest constitutional authorities that has appeared in this country in recent years, the Honorable William Howard Taft, former President of the United States, later Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, who in his work on Our Chief Magistrate and His Powers, at page 139, says:

The President can exercise no power which cannot be fairly or reasonably traced to some specific grant of power or justly implied and included within such express grant as proper and necessary to its exercise. Such specific grant must be either in the Federal Constitution or in an act of Congress passed in pursuance thereof. There is no undefined residuum of power, which he can exercise because it seems to him to be in the public interest.

Fourth. The transfer of the destroyers constitutes a violation of the neutrality of the United States under the provisions of international law.

The Attorney General in construing the United States Code, title 18, section 33 (40 Stat. 222, heretofore quoted), states that the same must be "read in light of the traditional rules of international law," and then proceeds to quote from Oppenheim on International Law, fifth edition, volume 2, section 334, at pages 574 and 576. The section in question has to do wholly with conditions arising out of the sale of armed facilities to belligerents by the subjects or citizens of neutral nations, which is entirely beside the point. What we have to deal with here is the case of a neutral nation selling its own warships to a belligerent. The quotation from Oppenheim, which the Attorney General should have found, because it is contained in the same volume of the same edition from which he quotes and but 20 pages removed from the matter quoted in his opinion, and which states the rule of international law exactly applicable to the conditions, is as follows:

If a state remains neutral it violates its impartiality by furnishing a belligerent with troops or men of war; and it matters not whether it renders such assistance to one of the belligerents or to both alike. Whereas Convention V (Hague Convention) does not mention the furnishing of troops, article 6 of Convention XIII (Hague Convention) admits that "the supply in any manner, directly or indirectly, by a neutral power to a belligerent power of warships, ammunition, or war material of any kind whatever, is forbidden." * * * (2 Oppenheim International Law, 5th ed., p. 554.)

It is interesting to note that the above-quoted rule of international law, finally adopted as a part of the Hague Convention, had a precedent growing out of the dispute between the United States and Great Britain over the claims made against Great Britain for losses caused by the Confederate ship Alabama during the Civil War. That ship was constructed in a British port. Unarmed, she was permitted to sail by the Government of Great Britain. At the Azore Islands she was met by two British ships bearing her armament, ammunition, and other supplies, and there she was converted into a ship of war and thereafter preyed upon the commerce of the United States. As a result of the losses caused by her activities, the United States made claim against Great Britain for reimbursement; and on May 8, 1871, Great Britain and the United States entered into what is known as the Treaty of Washington for the purpose of having these claims settled by arbitration; and I quote now from Oppenheim's account of that treaty:

The treaty contained three rules, since then known as The Three Rules of Washington, to be binding upon the arbitrators, namely, a neutral government is bound, firstly, to use due diligence to prevent the fitting out, arming, or equipping within its jurisdiction of any vessel which it has reasonable ground to believe is intended to cruise or carry on war against a power with which it is at peace, and also to use like diligence to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise or carry on war as above, such vessel having been specially adapted in whole or in part within such jurisdiction to warlike use; secondly, not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms or the recruitment of men; thirdly, to exercise due diligence in its own ports and waters, and as to all persons within its jurisdiction, to prevent any violations of the foregoing obligations and duties * * *. The treaty contained a stipulation that the parties agree to observe these rules as between themselves in future and to bring them to the knowledge of other maritime powers and to invite them to accede to them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, have I any more time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has used 20 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS] may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

Oppenheim on International Law, the very authority relied upon by the Attorney General for his conclusion that international law, in the light of which he says the pertinent statutes of the United States must be read, expressly condemns as a violation of neutrality the transfer of warships by a neutral to a belligerent nation, and renders truly remarkable those sentences in the President's message which state that—

This is not inconsistent in any sense with our status of peace. Still less is it a threat against any nation.

Mr. Speaker, I have given the House the results of my investigation of the legal aspects, both domestic and international, of this transaction, solely for the purpose of keeping the record straight and in order that we may understand what the true situation is. With the larger questions of policy and what the future may have in store for us as a people, arising out of this transaction, I shall not now attempt to deal, except to say that if the consummation of this agreement is of sufficient importance to the Government of the United States to induce it to violate its status as a neutral under international law, then it seems to me it is of sufficient importance to have readily induced the Congress to clear the way for its consummation by legislative action in accordance with our democratic practices and it need not have been consummated in violation of our statutory law. That method savors too much of dictatorship. [Applause.]

I ask the Attorney General of the United States to reply, and in order that he may be given the opportunity I propose to introduce tomorrow a resolution conferring upon the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives the power to investigate the legality of this transaction, and to report any legislation needed to legalize it. [Applause.]

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. ELSTON. Under the opinion of the Attorney General would it not be possible, I ask the gentleman, for the President of the United States to transfer to any belligerent power the entire United States Navy limited only to those ships which have not actually been completed?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I would say that under what the Attorney General calls the plenary power of the President there is absolutely no limitation whatsoever except that he must claim to do it in the public interest.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman has made a very thorough and learned discussion of the law involved in this transaction. Does he have an opinion as to whether or not an injunction would lie against the movement of these destroyers at this time?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I would not want to give any snap judgment on that question. I may say to the gentleman, I doubt very much if an injunction would lie, but I certainly would not want to express an opinion at this time one way or the other on that point.

Mr. CURTIS. One more observation. I do not think we should be too hard on the Attorney General here. He was perhaps instructed what kind of an opinion to render before he rendered it.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. I simply want to make the observation that these ships were fully prepared for war. They even had demagnetizing plates around the side of them so as to be protected against magnetic mines. They were armed as well. Naturally they would not want them over there without being armed.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman include in his resolution a provision which will also provide for an investigation of all phases of this transfer including the violations of the Neutrality Act which this Congress enacted? The gentleman knows that said act, known as the Bloom bill, contains a cash-and-carry provision. We read in the press of yesterday generally throughout the country that not only have these 50 torpedo boats, an essential portion of our Navy and national defense, been sold to a foreign belligerent nation in violation of international law and the law of the United States, but we are informed from those Canadian press reports that the personnel of our United States Navy has delivered the torpedo destroyers to foreign ports in violation of the cash-and-carry provisions of the Neutrality Act and are now in Canadian ports helping the British prepare the destroyers for action.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman on his splendid argument, based on the high plane on which it is based. It is a matter in which the country and the Nation is vitally interested and I may say that politics were in no way, shape, or manner even squinted in the gentleman's remarks. Again, I compliment him.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. My understanding is that the Attorney General ruled in effect that a ship that was already built could be transferred to Great Britain?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. That is correct.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But any ship that was not built purposely for Great Britain could not be transferred?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. The distinction the Attorney General drew was between a ship that has been completed and one that has not been completed, but is to be completed with intent to turn it over to a belligerent. He said any ship that is completed may be sold and delivered to Great Britain, but any ship that is in the process of construction in our shipyards may not be sold.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I do not have the opinion of the Attorney General before me, but it was stated to me that if ships were not being constructed expressly for Great Britain they might possibly be sold. For instance, if the Navy Department decided that the type of ship was not needed by the Navy Department, it might then be turned over to Great Britain even if not entirely completed. The distinguished gentleman has made a very fine statement, as always. I congratulate the district he represents in having such a statesman to represent them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Under the Attorney General's opinion, what is the status of warships that are capable of being used for fishing?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Well, I will permit the gentleman to answer that question himself.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Would the gentleman say that if it be found that the President is guilty of violation of a criminal law, the only legal constitutional remedy is impeachment?

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Well, I have not looked into that question and I think the gentleman's opinion on that subject would probably be better than mine. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, we remember how we acquired the Panama Canal when Theodore Roosevelt was President. As much was said then as is being said now with reference to violation of international law in connection with the acquisition of territory for the Panama Canal. However, the Congress approved by appropriating money for the act that was committed and the matter went along.

If our Republican friends are sincere, always adding a sentence to their remarks that this is a good deal, that it is necessary, that they would have approved it if consulted, why does not some Republican introduce the necessary legislation to ratify the act?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. After you have stolen the chickens there is no virtue in paying for them.

Mr. CREAL. I understand that, but if there is any sincerity in your argument, if that is all that it is necessary to do and you would have approved it if asked, what is there to prevent the House approving it afterward? I understand quite well the technical end of the argument that if it was illegal at the time, it was illegal. If not, it was not. But you say that it is a good act, that the people of America approve it, that we need the bases and that American sympathies are in line with the purposes for which it was transacted, and you want to leave it in that manner. Why "beef" around about it when all that it is necessary to do, and it would not take as much time, is to introduce a resolution, and you will have all Members of the House, both Republican and Democratic, those who are not pro-German, pass this unanimously and we will have the thing over tomorrow night.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think the gentleman makes the error of assuming that the Republicans say it was a good act. So far as I know, no one has said it was a good act.

Mr. CREAL. The gentleman who just spoke said it was.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I believe the gentleman misunderstands. What has been said was that it is desirable to get these bases, but there is a legal and constitutional way to do it. So far as I know, no one has approved the act in the way in which it was done. Let me go a little further. If I am hungry, that does not justify me in stealing from my neighbor and paying for it when I get caught. Why not go to him in the first place and do it in the right way?

Mr. CREAL. The gentleman goes right back to my question. I say that if you are in favor of doing it the right way, unless you are opposed to it had it been submitted, you can do it now.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman's argument, if I may interrupt once more, is that the end always justifies the means. What I personally object to in the transaction, among other things, is the establishing of a precedent whereby the President can violate the law. If he can do it once, he can do it any time he feels like it.

Mr. CREAL. If that was against the will of Congress, you can test the sentiment of the House in a dozen different ways, by approval or by condemnatory resolution or otherwise. If it be true that Congress would have approved, as many say, what is to prevent ratification as yet?

I want to refer, before my time expires, to the question of the Alabama claims and the probability that if these 50 destroyers do some damage we might have to arbitrate something with Germany. In the first place, the first offset we would take off would be the debt that Germany owes to us. Everybody talks about England owing us, but no pro-German ever mentions about Germany owing us, too. Again, she is now taking over the territory of the other countries that owe us, all except England. She is in domination of France, Belgium, Hungary, and the other countries that have owed us this debt, and now, morally and legally, Germany owes us this debt. If they get enough counterclaim to offset those claims, that will be perfectly all right. We will be glad to arbitrate that question with them and present our counterclaim for any claim they may present.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. CREAL. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does not the gentleman believe it would have been a better bargain to have taken these bases and given Great Britain credit on the $5,000,000,000 war debt she owes us?

Mr. CREAL. That might have been all right, but just any way so England got the ships is all I wanted.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, yes; that is what the gentleman wanted, to give the warships. The gentleman did not want the bases.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. VINSON of Georgia, for Tuesday and Wednesday, on account of official business.

To Mr. MCGREGOR (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), for 3 days, on account of illness in his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a very fine and inspiring peace sermon I was privileged to hear at Washington Episcopal Cathedral yesterday, by Bishop Freeman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a report by David Hirshfield, commissioner of accounts, city of New York, on Investigation of pro-British history textbooks used in the public schools of this city.

Mr. Speaker, this is slightly over the limit of two and one-half pages, and I have an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

THE LATE PRESIDENT OF PARAGUAY, GENERAL ESTIGARRIBIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a resolution which I shall present to the House in a moment to express to the people of Paraguay the sympathy of the American Congress on the tragic death of their President, Gen. Jose Estigarribia, former Ambassador to the United States, who lost his life in an airplane accident on last Saturday.

Undoubtedly General Estigarribia was the outstanding military leader South America has produced in a century and one of the most dynamic figures of the Spanish-speaking world. He was one of the greatest statesmen of South America and was a friend of the United States. He was doing more for the upbuilding of the people he represented than probably any other leader south of the Rio Grande.

His death was a tragedy which is deeply regretted by the people of the United States, as well as the people of the rest of the world.

He will long be remembered for his services as Ambassador to the United States, during which time he greatly strengthened the ties of friendship between the two countries. His record here will long endure, and his name will be enshrined in the hearts of the people of Paraguay for a thousand years.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 595

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States of America has learned with profound sorrow of the death of the President of the Republic of Paraguay, Gen. Jose Felix Estigarribia, and sympathizes with the people of the Republic of Paraguay in the loss of their beloved President.

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate this expression of sentiment of the House of Representatives to the Government of Paraguay.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of President Estigarribia the House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, September 10, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION

There will be an executive session of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation on Tuesday, September 10, 1940, at 10 a. m., in room 128, House Office Building, for the purpose of considering H. R. 10122.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

1936. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize naval agents to assist civil authorities in the enforcement of the law, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. COLMER: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 594. Resolution providing for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 2934). Referred to the House Calendar.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

SENATE

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, August 5, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Eternal God, who has taught us in Thy Holy Word that our bodies are temples of Thy Spirit: Keep us, we humbly beseech Thee, temperate and holy in thought, word, and deed, that, with all the pure in heart, we may see Thee as Thou art and be conformed to Thy likeness.

Do Thou open our hearts to share with others the faith which Thou hast revealed to us in Thy blessed Son, until the littleness of our knowledge becomes lost in the greatness of Thy love. And may the eternal and ever-blessed Father, whose chosen reward is the gift of peace, so fill us with His grace and heavenly benediction, that Christ, who is the brightness of His glory, may dwell in us and we in Him both now and evermore. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, September 9, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4008) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals which in the opinion of the Corporation would be of value to the United States in time of war, and to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more adequate loans for mineral developmental purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4165) to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9525. An act to provide for the reorganization of the government of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 9656. An act to authorize the acceptance of donations of property for the Vicksburg National Military Park, in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10406. An act to authorize the appointment of graduates of the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps to the line of the Regular Navy, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10438. An act to extend the age limits for applicants for appointment as midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy; and

H. J. Res. 602. Joint resolution to authorize Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, to be appointed to, and to perform the duties of, the Office of Secretary of Commerce.

PETITION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from E. H. Groom, Wacissa, Fla., praying that the United States immediately furnish to Great Britain for defense purposes a thousand or more airplanes, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ELLENDER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 3009. A bill for the relief of June Thompson, a minor (Rept. No. 2099);

H. R. 4815. A bill for the relief of Henry J. Wise (Rept. No. 2100);

H. R. 5040. A bill for the relief of Arthur Joseph Reiber, a minor (Rept. No. 2101); and

H. R. 5314. A bill for the relief of Paul J. Kohanik (Rept. No. 2102).

Mr. ELLENDER also, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1284. A bill for the relief of Sophrania Holmes (Rept. No. 2103);

H. R. 1874. A bill for the relief of Mrs. E. V. Maki (Rept. No. 2104); and

H. R. 10438. An act to extend the age limits for applicants for appointment as midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SUPPORT OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT BY ALBERT H. LADNER

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a newspaper article under the heading "Ladner supports Roosevelt—hits Willkie on draft," which appears in the Appendix.]

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], in charge of the bill, a few questions. I wish to invite his attention to the bill before us calling attention particularly to page 3, lines 10 to 12, inclusive. In those lines it is stated that the purpose of this bill is "to assist in the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economies, and the orderly marketing of products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere." In so stating the purpose of this bill, does not this mark a definite departure from the powers hitherto granted to the Export-Import Bank?

Mr. WAGNER. I should say it broadens its powers somewhat.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator, to pursue the inquiry made at the time we were discussing it yesterday when we were interrupted, know what plans may have been developed for "the stabilization of the economies" of the countries of the Western Hemisphere?

Mr. WAGNER. No; as I stated yesterday, I know of no fixed plan, and I do not think there is a fixed plan or blueprint. The question as to what is to be done, and under what circumstances it is to be done, I suppose will arise in practice if the Congress grants this power to the Export-Import Bank to make this type of loans. Applications will be made, and then they will be reviewed by Mr. Jones, the Administrator, by the State Department, by the Agriculture Department, by the Treasury Department. They will determine whether or not the applications are within the terms of the bill and whether they should be granted, whether they are in the interest of the national defense, in the interest of unity among the respective countries, and, of course, to the advantage of our own producers.

If it is a matter of export or marketing, I can visualize a situation in which there may be a surplus of a commodity in some one of the Latin American countries, or perhaps in more than one, which if thrown upon the market at distress prices might have a serious effect upon our own agricultural products which we sell in foreign markets. In such a case it may be desirable, in order to protect our own agricultural producers, to aid the orderly marketing of that surplus, and only for that purpose.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that when Chairman Jones testified before our committee, on page 15 of the report, we find that he was asked whether or not there was some general plan or idea as to how we were to stabilize the economies of South American countries, develop their resources, and achieve the orderly marketing of their products; and Mr. Jones answered:

> We ask for a half billion dollars to be available to do things that might appear to the administration—the President and the Secretary of State, and other officials of the Government—to be desirable.

In short, there is no plan, as the Senator from New York has said. Consequently, it amounts, does it not, to our saying: "Here is a half billion dollars with which the Export-Import Bank is to do whatever may seem desirable to further the stated objectives of the bill." Does it not boil down to that?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; it does, as we do every day in legislation we enact. We have to give somebody power to act as the circumstances and situation confronting us require; and particularly in an emergency situation of this kind we have to have faith and confidence that the officials who are in charge of our activities will do what is for the benefit of the United States, and not do something destructive of our interests.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me ask the Senator another question. The bill before us, if enacted, will repeal the saving clause or protection which we hitherto wrote into the Export-Import Bank legislation by wiping out the restriction of $20,000,000 on loans to any one country. Is not that so?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. So that if it seems advisable to those in charge, in whom we place faith and confidence, there is no restriction upon their lending the entire $500,000,000 to one country, is there?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, we can conjure up all sorts of impossible situations.

Mr. DANAHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. WAGNER. But I do not think anybody would be so bold as to suggest that Mr. Jones, in charge of this matter, would lend $500,000,000 to one particular enterprise in some Latin American country. We must assume that these men are going to do the thing sensibly and soundly, as they have done heretofore. Mr. Jones' record is, I think, a very commendable record both for enterprising and for conservative financing; and I think the country, and I am sure Congress, is willing to trust him.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. Jones is entitled to our very great confidence, and I applaud his endeavors. I respect and regard him very highly. Do not mistake me at all. When the Senator says, however, that Mr. Jones is to do these things soundly, there being no statement of the objectives sought to be achieved or the manner in which they are to be achieved, if the Congress sets no yardstick, it comes down to this: We are taking a half billion dollars of American money, turning it over to persons in whom we are to repose confidence, and saying to them, "Do whatever you choose to achieve the objectives that we set out." Is not that so?

Mr. WAGNER. No; I think the Senator is not making a correct statement. We are setting out objectives in the bill, just as we set out objectives when we originally authorized the incorporation of the Export-Import Bank. Those powers were very general. They were not restricted. Under that authority I think everybody will concede that the Export-Import Bank has done a marvelous job, if I may say so, in helping our industrialists and our farmers to export their products by the use of the facilities of the Export-Import Bank. It has been done so well that large sums have been used for that purpose. There has not been a single default in any of the loans made to the Latin American countries. On the contrary, to date over 3-percent profit has been made on all of the bank's transactions. I think that is a commendable record.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from New York that the function of the Export-Import Bank under powers previously granted to it, to which the record referred to by the Senator applies, is by no means the power conferred by this bill; quite the contrary. This bill contemplates loans to countries already in most instances in default to us, whereas the original measure contemplated facilitating exports by American exporters, so that we were actually lending money to American corporations and American firms, and the Government was taking their paper in cases in which individual banking concerns did not or could not take it. Is not that the fact?

Mr. WAGNER. The fact is that this bill broadens the powers of the Export-Import Bank; and I tried yesterday to state the reason for it. It is a very obvious reason—that we are trying to expand our own trade opportunities, and at the same time to aid the Latin American countries in their economic difficulties, rather than abandon them at a time when economic chaos may very well drive them into the Axis camp. Yesterday I gave a number of instances of the activities of Nazi groups in Latin America; Nazi elements are gradually seeking by economic and other means to control the political instrumentalities of the different governments.

Mr. DANAHER. Is that what we are trying to do, Mr. President?

Mr. WAGNER. Are we trying to do what?

Mr. DANAHER. To control the political instrumentalities of the South American Governments.

Mr. WAGNER. We are not trying to do that. Among other things, we are trying to help protect the Latin American countries against those activities on the part of others.

Mr. DANAHER. In other words, we would extend our political control instead of allowing some other country to extend its political control? Is that it?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, the Senator may say what he likes. Way back in 1823 President Monroe stated that we were going to protect this hemisphere against invasion, or the introduction into those countries of foreign systems of government; and we felt that we took that position not only for their protection but for our own protection and defense. Now a new method of foreign penetration has arisen, by insidious means, first by getting economic control, and then, as a result of that economic control, imposing Nazi philosophy upon the governments of the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. One moment, and then I will let the Senator make his own speech. I am talking about realities, not conjectures.

Consider the situation in the Balkan countries today. Every one of them now is controlled by the axis, and every one of them has been so controlled by gradual steps. Take the case of Jugoslavia——

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. Will not the Senator permit me to answer him? I want at least to conclude my sentence.

Mr. DANAHER. Very well.

Mr. WAGNER. Take the case of Jugoslavia. In 1934, I think, they were in great difficulties. Agricultural surpluses had accumulated to a point where there was grave economic distress in the country. The Nazi government came along and gave them for their agricultural commodities prices 25 to 30 percent above the world market. Then, after saving the situation, the Nazi government gradually came in, step by step, and exacted more and more economic conditions. Jugoslavia lost its other markets because it had to deal exclusively with the Nazi government instead of with its former customers. The Nazis then used their economic control to destroy competing local industries.

We do not want to have those things happen in this hemisphere. I think it is fair, from that standpoint, to help the Latin American countries; and in the long run it will be greatly to the advantage of our economy to make small, judicious loans to aid them to rehabilitate themselves, and to make them better markets for our products.

The Senator remembers that at the Habana Conference not very long ago a resolution was adopted providing for mutual aid, economic as well as political. It seems to me that if we abandoned them now in this critical time we would be repudiating an agreement reached at a conference when all the 21 Latin American republics were present and subscribed thereto.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator from New York consider that that agreement has the force of a treaty without it having been submitted to the Senate or in any way having received the consent and advice of the Senate? Does the Senator say we now are bound by an Executive agreement, and that therefore we must pass this bill in order to effectuate that agreement, which never was submitted to the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator believe we should not help the Latin American countries in this critical time?

Mr. TAFT. As usual, the Senator entirely avoids my question. I will explain later to what extent I think we should assist them. I am asking the Senator whether he thinks we are bound by an agreement which was not submitted to the Senate of the United States, which, in my opinion, was a treaty, and should have been submitted, and now is used as an argument by the Senator as to why we should pass this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I believe we should help the Latin American countries in conformity with a resolution adopted at a conference where all the 21 countries of the Western Hemisphere were represented. That is my view about it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from New York how the South American countries will repay any loans which we may make to them, other than through exports to us?

Mr. WAGNER. The way they have been doing it up to date.

Mr. DANAHER. That is through exports.

Mr. WAGNER. They have exported their commodities to our country and they have received sufficient credit as a result of such exportations to pay their debts. I have stated several times that the Export-Import Bank has been financing these transactions, and to date there has not been a single default. They have paid their indebtedness. Furthermore, the Export-Import Bank made a profit of 3 percent on all its transactions.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me first respond to the Senator from New York by pointing out that when he takes the instance of the Balkan countries and what happened to them, he is predicting precisely what will happen as the result of this proposal, for Great Britain undertook to do this very thing for the Balkan countries. So long as she continued to furnish them with loans they were enabled to do business with her; but the moment she withdrew from the business of paying for her own exports those countries collapsed, and that is precisely what will happen in the case of the South American countries if we continue this policy. So the instance the Senator from New York gives is wholly invalid as an argument upon which to predicate his conclusion with reference to this bill. Quite the contrary, it supports the opposition, who have predicted that precisely that ill and evil result will follow should the Congress enact this legislation and follow out the line of the argument of the Senator from New York.

Let me go one step further and point out that Mr. Jones has told us that the reason defaults have not occurred up to date is that the maturities have not yet expired, the result being, of course, that things are written into the future. The maturities will come along in due course. Mr. Jones has testified as to the matter on page 20 of the Senate hearings.

Let me point out to the Senator, when he says that they will pay us in the future the way they have in the past, that this may be an appropriate time to call attention to the way they have paid us in the past.

Argentina today has outstanding loans from American investors to the amount of $233,000,000, in round figures, only $20,000,000 being in default, however.

Bolivia has $60,000,000 and is entirely in default.

Brazil has $356,000,000 and is entirely in default.

Chile has $182,000,000 and is entirely in default.

Colombia has $146,000,000 and is in default for all but $3,000,000.

Costa Rica is in default for $8,000,000, her entire commitment.

Cuba took $125,000,000 and still owes us $42,000,000.

Ecuador took twelve million and still owes us twelve million.

Guatemala took five million and still owes us three million.

Haiti took eight million and still owes us eight million.

Mexico took two hundred and seventy-three million and still owes us two hundred and seventy-three million.

Panama took seventeen million and still owes us seventeen million.

Peru took eighty-five million and she is in default for the whole amount.

Uraguay took fifty-six million and still owes us five million.

Mr. President, if we could not buy the goodwill of the South American countries on the basis of the hundreds of millions of dollars, reaching into the billions, we have already loaned to them, on what basis does the Senator expect we will be able to buy their goodwill in the future in pursuance of this good-neighbor policy?

Let me say to the Senator from New York that if he says we are bound, as a result of the Habana conference with the 21 South American republics, to enact the proposed legislation, we should also consider the fact that only on October 8, 1939, we entered into a convention with the very same countries at Panama. We agreed with them at that time that not any one of the respective countries would send out armed vessels to become part of the complement of a belligerent in the present war. We did that in furtherance of our common neutrality objective. But the first country to send vessels out in violation of the convention we adopted was the United States. So, if that is the type of argument the Senator from New York chooses to rely upon in support of this type of legislation, then I submit that, too, is as invalid as the other contentions he has offered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator a question in connection with the figures he has just given. Do they represent the indebtedness owed to the Government of the United States, to the Export-Import Bank?

Mr. DANAHER. No.

Mr. NORRIS. It is debt due to individuals and corporations?

Mr. DANAHER. Investors; yes. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that, of course, the Export-Import Bank in all respects, although the Government, through the R. F. C., will own its capital, stands in the relation of a private dealer with reference to these very countries. That is one of the iniquities of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I am trying to ascertain whether the loans which have been made, as the Senator has stated, came in any way from the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. DANAHER. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Or whether they are merely investments made by American citizens and corporations.

Mr. DANAHER. They were private loans, made through the floating of bonds and other securities in this country, and their sale to private investors in this country. Of course, they were bonds of the South American countries.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Due to being detained in meetings of the Finance Committee, which has been sitting for so many days, I have not been able to hear all the debate, and I should like to ask the Senator whether there is anything in the pending bill which provides that these funds shall be used for the development of products such as tin and rubber, and kindred products, which are advantageous to the United States, and which we now have to obtain from a great distance.

Mr. DANAHER. I will answer the Senator by calling to his attention the fact that in line 10, page 3, we read as one of the purposes—

> To assist in the development of the resources * * * of the countries of the Western Hemisphere.

Let me answer the Senator further by saying that when Mr. Jones, in charge of all this business, was before our committee, he told us candidly and frankly that they had no plan whatever; that they did not know how they were going to operate; that they did not know just what they would do. They said:

> Make $500,000,000 available to us, and if we see a plan which to us seems feasible, then we will be enabled to effectuate it.

No doubt the development of the resources of these countries might very properly include the development of supplies of tin, antimony, and other products not indigenous to our country.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to explain to the Senator from Massachusetts that the amendment which I have offered, and which is now the pending question, restricts the purpose of the act and provides—

> Such loans shall only be made for the purpose of assisting in the development of resources which are defined by the President as strategic and critical materials * * * not produced in the United States in appreciable quantities and which are required for use in the United States.

In other words, that seemed to me the only valid purpose of the bill, and the amendment which I have offered intends to limit the proposed law to that one purpose.

Mr. LODGE. I am much obliged to the Senator from Ohio. That is what I wanted the Senator from Connecticut to discuss, that there is one compelling thought so far as relates to anything being advantageous to the United States, insofar as developing certain resources so much nearer home is concerned. The point that has always struck me is that if we want to bring about the development of some strategic and critical materials which we do not produce in this country, we can develop a program designed especially for that purpose, and deliberately and concretely follow it up, and not adopt a broad, general scheme which has many other ramifications. That is the point I wanted to have the Senator discuss.

Mr. DANAHER. The observation implicit in the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts is perfectly sound and valid. In part we attempted to do that when we adopted an amendment submitted by the Senator from Arizona to the R. F. C. law. The Senator will remember that we added to the capital and resources of the R. F. C. in order to make possible the development of sources of raw materials in this country, and that, no doubt, would include Alaska.

To answer the Senator from Massachusetts, if we had before us a scheme for the development of natural resources through American capital, through American corporations, whether in Alaska or in Mississippi, or in other States of this country, or in South America, it would be in furtherance of a very definite and a very worthy objective.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has not made a completely negative approach to this question at all.

Mr. DANAHER. No; quite the contrary. I am trying to discuss the argument of the Senator from New York and show that he purports to base his argument on the splendid literary effort which we heard yesterday afternoon. He himself called it evidence, but it was not presented before our committee at all. If Senators will read the RECORD of yesterday's proceeding they will find that the Senator from New York introduced much matter which never was in our contemplation, which never was submitted to us. No facts in connection with the subject were gone into at all, and, quite the contrary from being evidence, it was an argument being offered by the Senator from New York. I feel that the argument is invalid in many particulars, some of which I am seeking to explore, and one of which I point out is that there is no plan before us for the development of these resources or for the stabilization of our economies. Consequently that phase of the matter must be left to some persons—I do not know whom, but Mr. Jones intimated that it might be the President, the Secretary of State, and the other officers of the Export-Import Bank—who can take $500,000,000 of American money and do anything they choose with it.

Secondly, the Senator from New York talked about orderly processing of surpluses, so to speak. In other words, he hints vaguely that there will be a surplus of cotton and a surplus of coffee in South America, and apparently American capital will take up those surpluses and take them off the world's markets, and that Brazil, for example, which cannot find a world market for its coffee, will be able to sell its surplus coffee to us.

As I see it, pursuing that idea to its logical conclusion, we shall be obliged to sell the same commodities in due course to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation or some other Government unit. If the South American countries sell their surplus commodities to us, then when we sell them, in turn we can only hope to receive payment for them in products. For instance, if we sell to France the South American surplus commodities which we take over, that means that France must import to us manufactured products in payment, which, in turn, will result in our American manufacturers and American labor being obliged to compete, in their manufacture of products, with products which are brought into this country in payment for the surpluses in question, which, for example, may be coffee which we take from Brazil, and for which we pay in American money, through the Export-Import Bank, with no restrictions and no control by the Congress; in fact, as the Senator from New York has admitted, without even a plan before us.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am under the same disability the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has indicated he is under, having been tied completely in the Finance Committee for 10 days on the pending tax bill.

Mr. DANAHER. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him for a moment, I will say to him that even if he had been present in the Banking and Currency Committee he would not have heard the argument and the facts presented there which he heard stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. The Senator from Michigan has not missed anything by not having been present at the hearings in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can assure the Senator from Connecticut that, if he had been in the Finance Committee and tried to probe the imponderable mess we are dealing with, he would be equally in the dark regarding everything.

Mr. DANAHER. I was not there, and yet I must say I am confused.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to explore one suggestion which I heard the able Senator from New York discussing as I entered the Chamber. I heard him describe a process by which the Balkan states were aided through the introduction of foreign capital for the purpose of lifting their agricultural surpluses off the market at a substantial price above the world level. Is that contemplated by the funds which are proposed to be made available by the pending measure?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me answer the Senator from Michigan in this way, that if it is, it was never explained to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I attended its hearings. Let me say further to the Senator from Michigan that if that is the contemplation, it is born of the argument offered by the Senator from New York, which in turn, I take it, represents the views of those who will undertake to administer the funds in question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator allow me to ask the Senator from New York whether it is contemplated to lift agricultural surpluses in South America with these funds and subsidize them at prices above world levels?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there was no such suggestion made before the committee, nor have I heard any such suggestion made anywhere. The only point that Mr. Jones made, as I recall, and which has been generally stated, is that there may come an emergency situation—there is not any specific case before us now—where the dumping of those surpluses on the markets of the world might seriously affect the agricultural commodities which we export to the same markets. We may want to aid these countries as well as to protect our own agricultural commodities from that terrific drop in the market, and the resultant depression. We may not be able to afford complete protection to our own agriculture, but certainly, under the circumstances, we should try to help our own agricultural interests as well as to prevent chaos in Latin American countries, with resulting diminution in their ability to buy our goods. If some limited help can be afforded under loans proposed to be made, I think they should be made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, as I entered the Senate Chamber I heard the Senator from New York describing the process by which the Balkan states were aided for a time, through external financial help, to take their agricultural surpluses at prices above world levels. Was the Senator indicating that as a sample of the type of thing which is to be done under this bill?

Mr. WAGNER. No. I was giving an example of Nazi activities, which consisted first in penetrating a country by economic methods in order to secure control of the economy of the country, and when that was accomplished, superimposing their political philosophies.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask the Senator to withhold his request for a moment.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I do not suggest that we adopt any such plan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understood the Senator was describing the Nazi process, and that he drew the conclusion that we had to fight the devil with fire, and that that was one of the methods which would be available to us under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. There is nothing in what I suggested which would justify the Senator from Michigan in drawing that conclusion.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to read to the Senator from Michigan what the Senator from New York said yesterday in the Senate. He said:

> I have here an item from the Washington Post of August 2. It is headed "Coffee and sugar skid to new lows as war piles up United States surplus." It goes on to give figures which spell tragedy for the people of the American republics—85 cents a hundred pounds for sugar, 5½ cents a pound for coffee. So it goes for most of the main products of our neighbors to the south.

Then his argument is that we should extend loans and boost those prices exactly as he said Germany did in Yugoslavia in recent years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator from Ohio for his exhibit.

I wish somebody would shed a few tears about the effect of the sugar depression upon several hundred thousand American farmers who are caught in the same terrific depression, a portion of which is produced by our own American sugar policy.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, well, that would be outrageous.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question. The Senator from New York referred to the fear he had, if I correctly understood him, that the situation in South America might be reflected in lower prices for American agricultural exports. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. REED. Very well. The greatest items of export of agricultural commodities from the United States are cotton and wheat. Aside from agricultural products, we export a great deal of oil. Does the Senator from New York mean to say that we are going to help the export of cotton and wheat from South America, when we are now paying a subsidy for the export of American cotton and wheat, raised by United States farmers, which is the only way we can get into the world markets?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Kansas did not do me the justice of listening to all I said. I said that the Export-Import Bank might well act if the drop in prices of the surplus commodities of Latin American countries affected adversely the sale of our products in foreign markets, and then we would be justified in doing something to stop the fall of prices of our own commodities.

Mr. REED. With the permission of the Senator from Connecticut, may I ask the Senator from New York another question?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. REED. Let us suppose the United States of America, with the taxpayers' money, undertook to raise above the world price level the price of cotton and wheat produced in South America. We would virtually have to buy it and bring it here, and we already have a surplus of those commodities. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has pointed out that we raise a part of the sugar we use, and that the American sugar producer is suffering from the depressed price of sugar in the same way as the sugar raiser of South America.

If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio were adopted, and the use of this money were limited to the development of critical and strategic materials, or other things in South America which we do not produce in the United States, and in which we can trade, a different picture would be presented. But as I understood the statement made yesterday by the Senator from New York, to a part of which I listened—and I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that he made a beautiful literary effort—I am unable to follow the soundness of his statement now as to dealing with South American surpluses of commodities with respect to which we have our own surpluses. We are under great difficulty in moving our own surpluses into foreign markets. Every Senator from a cotton-producing State knows of the tremendous accumulation of cotton in this country which we should be glad to move. Are we to finance the movement of cotton from South America into the world market in preference to our own? Are we to finance the movement of wheat from South America into the world market when we have a surplus of wheat in this country which we have to subsidize in order to get into the foreign market?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator himself has made a fine literary effort, so I return the compliment. However, the Senator is ignoring the point I made, and his argument does not in any way touch the suggestion I have made, that if the authority shall be exercised at all, it will be to protect our own agricultural products in foreign markets. If the circumstances are such that by loans we can produce such a result, the power will be exercised; but I think the power certainly ought to exist.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I happen to come from one of the important agricultural States, producing one of the main agricultural surpluses; and I am unable to follow the argument of the Senator from New York to the effect that the plan he proposes would protect our agricultural surpluses. In my opinion his plan would do nothing except to dissipate $500,000,000 of American money throughout South America.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield for a moment. I wish to conclude.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield for one observation?

Mr. DANAHER. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator from Kansas think it would be to the advantage of American producers of wheat, corn, and other products which are exportable, if by any system of cooperation between the United States and the countries of South America those countries were better enabled to hold their own products off the market, rather than to dump them on the world market and drive prices down, the effect of which would be reflected upon our own products?

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator from Kentucky if he thinks it could possibly help us to build up surpluses of wheat or beef in Argentina, or coffee, which heretofore has been burned, in Brazil?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not talking about building up surpluses of corn, wheat, and coffee. However, I do not see how coffee comes into competition with anything produced in the United States.

Mr. REED. I grant that it does not.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I am talking about is creating economic cooperation between our country and South America which will make it possible for South American countries to hold off the market their own products which are now surplus and feed them to the market at a time when they can be absorbed, rather than to dump them on the market and thereby drive down the world price, so that our own prices in the world market would fall.

Mr. REED. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky does not come from a great cotton-producing State, although it produces some cotton.

Mr. BARKLEY. My State produces considerable cotton.

Mr. REED. However, the Senator from Kentucky is thoroughly familiar with the cotton situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Kentucky produces more cotton than does Kansas.

Mr. REED. That is correct; but not so much wheat.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not quite.

Mr. REED. One of the troubles in marketing American cotton is the competition with Brazil. Brazil is expanding her production of cotton. She is one of our principal competitors.

I shall not take the floor from the Senator from Connecticut; but if the proposal before us is to take $500,000,000 and distribute it among the South American countries in such a way that it will never be repaid, we should frankly say so. If the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill, or whoever is responsible for it, will frankly say so, that is one thing; but when any Senator undertakes to say on the floor of the Senate that this plan has even remote possibilities of assisting in disposing of United States agricultural surpluses, or protecting the prices at which we export, the argument is so fantastic as to be beyond the bounds of reason.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, briefly in conclusion, I feel that the argument offered by the Senator from New York wholly fails to sustain the objectives declared in the bill. I feel that the bill itself is deficient in that it gives the Congress no plan. There is no opportunity for the creation of a yardstick by which to measure and gage the activities which are to be carried on under it. I notice that it removes a very salutary provision which the Congress hitherto has put into the Export-Import Bank law, namely, that there shall be no loan in excess of $20,000,000 to any country. The bill contains no limitation whatever on the exercise of the authority of the Administrator.

Above all, Mr. President, let me call attention to something unique—or perhaps I should say that by this time it has lost its uniqueness and has become a customary device. It will be recalled that last year we had before us a so-called self-liquidating projects bill. Efforts had been made to double the capital of the Export-Import Bank, and the Congress had rejected the proposal. We had a self-liquidating projects bill, and when we got through we discovered that we had increased the capital of the Export-Import Bank.

In January, when we came back, we discovered a bill introduced by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the title of which indicated that it was a bill to aid Finland. However, when we got through with it we found that we had doubled the capital of the Export-Import Bank, increasing it from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000, and we had struck out any semblance of reference to Finland. There was no aid to Finland inherent in the bill. The fact is that it was a pure subterfuge to double the capital of the Export-Import Bank.

We now have before us a program to increase the capital of the Export-Import Bank from $200,000,000 to $700,000,000 and to extend the life of the Corporation for several more years. The fact of the matter is that this particular proposal has nothing whatever to do with the original purpose of the Export-Import Bank. The plan under which the bank was authorized and chartered in the first place, according to the statement of purposes prepared by the bank itself under date of June 15, 1938, was as follows:

> The object and purpose of the Export-Import Bank of Washington (hereinafter called the Bank) is to aid in financing and to facilitate exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between the United States and any of its Territories and insular possessions and any foreign country or the agencies or nationals thereof.
> In furtherance of said objects and purpose, the bank is authorized to do a general banking business; to purchase, sell, negotiate, and discount, with or without its endorsement, notes, drafts, bills of exchange, acceptances, including bankers' acceptances, cable transfers, and other evidences of indebtedness, and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to borrow money and rediscount notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; to purchase and sell securities, including obligations of the United States or any State thereof, but not including the purchase with its funds of any stock in any other corporation; to accept bills or drafts drawn upon it; to issue letters of credit; to purchase and sell coin, bullion, and exchange; to lend money; and to do and to perform the necessary functions permitted by law to be done or performed in conducting such enterprise or business.

Hitherto, an exporter or importer made application to the bank for credit. He wrote directly to the bank in Washington, or applied through his own commercial bank, setting out the amount of credit he desired, the proposed terms of payment, the name of the foreign country to which the export would go, the name of the purchaser, the security for the proposed credit, and similar items, which any sound banking institution would require. However, the bill does not contemplate any such activity; quite the contrary. It enables the United States, with untrammeled discretion, to engage in the political penetration of other nations without any limitation whatever, under the guise of stabilizing the economies of other nations, when we cannot stabilize our own.

The bill states its purpose to be—

> In order to assist in the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economies, and the orderly marketing of products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere.

We have not succeeded in bringing about an orderly marketing of surpluses even within our own boundaries.

To recur to the reference of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the bill would undertake to "assist in the development of the resources." That is, eo nomine it would; in terms, it is so stated. However, there is no plan of action. There is no outline of the scope of the objective or plan, or the extent to which it would go. So it seems to me that once more we find a bill which purports to have an allegedly valid objective, undertaking almost—shall I say secretively?—to accomplish some very different result. It is part and parcel of the type and pattern of thing which has come before the Congress month in and month out. In my opinion, the bill should be defeated.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I think the able Senator from Connecticut will concede that in the nature of things we could not write a plan into a bill any more than we could write into the bill the individual loans to be made in the future. I supported the bill in the committee, and I intend to support it in the Senate. It occurs to me that we could no more put a plan in a statute than could a group of stockholders, in forming a bank, tell who their customers for loans would be.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Idaho is a most able and respected member of the Committee on Banking and Currency; but when he and the Senator from Arizona desired to have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act amended in order to permit loans to small mining corporations and mining units to explore lodes, engage in development, and otherwise to seek out gold, tin, and other supplies of raw materials, some of which were critical and strategic materials necessary for our defense, he ably supported and sustained his presentation. However, he had a plan. He had a basis, because he tied his plan in with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with respect to which there is a method for gaging how much money will be utilized, for what purpose, and under what circumstances. Will not the Senator from Idaho concede that every proposal which he advanced in that connection was logically and properly tied in with a plan?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. No plan was written into that statute. We developed the plan in precisely the same manner in which the plan is proposed to be developed in connection with the pending bill. The bill to which the Senator refers authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under proper regulations, to make loans to small mining companies for development. I think there was an amendment offered which restricted those loans to critical and strategic materials. I understand that is the purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and it may be they should be so restricted. I have not determined what I shall do on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator knows, if he will pardon me, that the R. F. C. restrictions are imposed by law, and that certain standards of operation have been created, does he not?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I do not know of any standards in the statute; that is all done by regulation.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator not know that the very amendment which he offered contained an outline of the circumstances under which loans could be made?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I think not. I think there was no attempt to write departmental regulations into the statute.

Mr. DANAHER. In any case, let us leave it in this way, that we differ slightly in our recollection as to the intendment, scope, and verbiage of the Senator's language, but this much we are agreed upon, that at least the Senator did not come here with a bill to increase the capital of the R. F. C. and to permit untrammeled discretion as to the development of the resources of any country. Is not that correct?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. That is correct. Of course, Mr. Jones was very candid before the committee, as the able Senator from Connecticut so well recalls. He said in the nature of things he could not have a plan. He said that first he had to have the funds available. He did give us certain specific instances. I think he mentioned that negotiations were under way with a foreign country to build a steel plant within its borders; that they were raising a part of the capital and that he intended, under proper circumstances, to advance a sufficient amount more to enable them to construct the steel plant. There was reference also, I believe, to a possible tin smelter, and then there was considerable reference made to certain loans which might be made to aid in the orderly marketing of agricultural products. Those things will have to be considered when they arise. I have followed with attention the Senator's argument, but I think he has overemphasized the lack of a plan, because a plan cannot be formulated until the money is available, until it is known what it is we want to do under certain individual circumstances.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator knows that in the case of the control of the surplus situation in our own country we outlined a plan; we created a Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, did we not?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Yes; but I do not think, if the Senator will permit me, that there is any intent to buy up agricultural surpluses in South America.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me point out to the Senator from Idaho that he is overlooking the fact that one purpose of the bill is to assist in the orderly marketing of the products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere. We have commonly heard that term as used in this country, explained. I think, according to the Secretary of Agriculture, "orderly marketing" is the taking of surplus products off the market. That is precisely what it has meant and what it has come to mean, and yet we do not undertake to say how America's $500,000,000 are going to be used in South America in anyway whatever. Does the Senator concede that there is a complete lack of plan in that particular? We impose the plan upon our own country, but none upon the South American countries?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I will concede that the language is quite broad, but if I had thought there was going to be anything in the nature of a cartel, or a gigantic scheme to buy up surpluses, I would be as opposed to this measure, as is the Senator from Connecticut. But my understanding was—and I think it is fairly clear from the testimony of Mr. Jones—that these loans were going to be made individually, to individual banks or to individual countries, under certain circumstances, for different and, perhaps, unrelated purposes. Does the Senator find anything in Mr. Jones' testimony before the committee that would indicate a scheme to organize a cartel to undertake in some broad way to buy up the surpluses of South America?

Mr. VANDENBERG rose.

Mr. DANAHER. I will answer the Senator's question briefly before yielding to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. President, let me say that there has been far too much done already in the trend of this very broad legislation, to adopt the Senator's words. "Broad" is no word for it; it is limitless. The fact of the matter is that there is nothing about it to indicate that there will not be a cartel plan or any other device that someone in Washington decides to employ. When we find that the Attorney General can write an opinion to the effect that the President can dispense with the Congress in dealing with extraterritorial jurisdiction of territory not even within our control and possession, I hesitate to think what he will do under a plan that authorizes him to enter into political manipulation of countries without there being some limitation created by the Congress as to how the $500,000,000 is to be spent. Moreover, I believe the $500,000,000 is a down payment on perpetual grief.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to pursue the inquiry under the recent discussion a step further. There seems to be no way to tell what the plan is. I am wondering if there is any way to tell what the plan is not? That is of equal concern to me. The Senator from Idaho has been discussing the cartel idea. As I read the newspapers, when this proposal was born, it was born in connection with the cartel program to mobilize all agricultural surpluses of North and South America and sustain them on credit from the United States Treasury.

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then I read that the plan under exploration had been abandoned, which was certainly a concession to common sense. I want to know if it has been abandoned or whether this bill in its ultimate scope would permit the original cartel idea to be pursued.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator, in the first place, news leaked out of the Habana Conference to the effect that the cartel plan had been abandoned, but we certainly could not expect, the way things are going, the Senate to know what is going on or what the facts are or whether the treaty negotiated at Habana binds us to anything, when it has not been submitted to the Senate. We lack the background, and therefore I cannot answer the Senator's question. I suspect, however, that we are reliably informed, as we usually are, by the press that the cartel plan was rejected at Habana. I hope it was.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I should like to express a few ideas and get the Senator's reaction to them. I first mention the fact that the bill itself does not suggest any plan, but I think it is generally conceded that the bill itself is in pursuance of a plan. What is that plan? We all know that while, in one sense, we are not at war, in another sense, we are engaged now in a great commercial war, as is conceded by those in control of affairs in Washington. It may be said that Germany is attempting to take over the control of South America. Let us see what that implies. It implies that she is penetrating South America commercially; and, perhaps, if she should overrun England, she would penetrate South America politically, attempting to make the countries there her colonies.

We know that the products South America raises are practically all in competition with the products we raise, and, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], we are in no position to continue to buy up those products. Yet, in view of the fact that Germany needs the products South America produces, in view of the fact that when the war is over, all Europe will need what South America produces, it seems as if we have engaged or are about to engage in some kind of a commercial war that may prove very dangerous to our future welfare. Here we are entering by a side door the cartel plan of Mr. Wallace. Let us watch our step.

It was suggested a few months ago that we should get a strangle hold on South America, so that we could stop Germany from entering South America and obtaining control of conditions there. The cartel plan has apparently been abandoned, but has it? I am interested in knowing the truth.

If we provide the additional $500,000,000 to be loaned to South America in furtherance of the defensive program—and I know that the proponents of the bill are serious in saying that we must do that in order that Germany may not get control, the question is whether next year there will not be another $500,000,000 needed.

What we should do, as I see it, is to understand this plan, get a grasp on what this thing really means, and then decide our course. Is it an entering wedge, as suggested by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, not only for an attempt to take control of all the economics of South America, but because they are Latin Americans, also to take control of the politics of South America? The question is, Where are we taking the United States of America? Where are we taking the economy of the United States? Where are we taking our own land so far as safety is concerned?

Mr. President, the situation is serious. It calls for serious consideration of all the future contingencies. A step taken now may prove very disastrous.

What are our responsibilities under the Monroe Doctrine in view of the changed world conditions?

Is America going to attempt to regulate produce in South America? Our investments therein so far have been unprofitable. Let us pause and do some thinking before we take this step.

I have talked to some of the statesmen whom I call New Dealers, and they are sincere in the belief that in order to protect the United States we must economically and practically politically put our money into South America.

We must think this thing through. My mind is confused. I do not know where we are going to end if we follow this course. I do not know in which direction we are going; but I say that if we do take over the productivity of South America we shall be taking over and getting in abundance goods which we produce here. So I should be very much in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], under which, if we are to provide this additional power to Mr. Jones, it shall be used to produce things which are essential to our defense, and which we cannot produce in this country. I should like, however, to have the reaction of the Senator from Connecticut to the idea I have mentioned.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I am about to conclude, and I shall be more than happy to hear further exposition of his views in due course. Briefly, however, making reply, let me say that there were not submitted to the Banking and Currency Committee any plans. There was not submitted to us any outline of the scope of the intended operations. We do not know whether or not there are German business houses in Brazil, or in the Argentine, or in any of the South American countries. We do not know whether or not there is Nazi infiltration, and, if so, to what amount and to what extent. We do not know the type of competition they are likely to offer to us. We do not know the facilities of Brazil or any other South American country to acquire German products, whether under a barter system or any other.

Remember, I keep using the terms "German" and "Nazi" simply for the reason that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], as he argued for the bill, pointed out that part of his plan at least, and what he has in mind, is to defeat any possible infiltration into South America in competition with us from German sources; and I take it from the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin that that is what he, too, had in mind. So I must say to him that there were no such ideas submitted to us, and no evidence concerning the matter. Had there been, I have not any slightest doubt that intelligent consideration could be given to whatever the problem might be as thus presented. But so far as the committee are concerned, all of us stand on whatever we happen to know from the newspapers or from any other sources, and that is all that we had before us. With that sort of thing, it seems to me the argument bogs down; that it will not sustain the claims made for the bill by the Senator from New York.

In conclusion, I am in favor of giving the Export-Import Bank $500,000,000 more to enable American exporters to export their products to South America or anywhere else in competition with the exporters of Germany or any other country. I am perfectly willing to have credit facilities made available to American exporters on whatever basis our own authorities decide is right and proper; but in that instance we shall be dealing with an American entity over which we have control and to which we may properly make loans.

In other words, the matter of an increase in the capital of the Export-Import Bank, the exigencies of the international situation being what they are, is by no means the touchstone in this process; not a bit of it. What is being offered to the Senate and to the country under this bill is something far different and with implications far beyond our present imagination, since we do not even know what the authorities are going to try to do under the bill.

For those reasons I certainly shall support the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I also believe that unless the bill is remedied in several other particulars it should be defeated.

Mr. TAFT obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	King	Russell
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lodge	Sheppard
Bailey	Gerry	McCarran	Smathers

Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds	Wiley

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I listened with interest to the statement of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] that no plan was presented, and that there apparently is no definite plan as to what this $500,000,000 is to be used for. But I think it is fairly clear that the principal purpose of it is to provide for the lending of money on agricultural commodities of which there may be a surplus in South America. I do not think there can be any doubt about that. The bill itself probably states the broadest purpose in the lending of money ever stated in any act which has been submitted to this body:

> To assist in the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economies, and the orderly marketing of products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere.

If any broader purpose could be stated, I do not know what it would be, unless we extended the authority to all the countries of the world. Just think of today undertaking the job of stabilizing the economies of every country in Central America and South America. Think how we have failed to stabilize our own economy. Think how tremendously difficult it is. Think how the goal is one which is impossible of accomplishment, and how any conceivable means might be used under the terms of the bill.

The bill increases the lending power of the Export-Import Bank by $500,000,000. It takes off the limitations formerly imposed on loans to any one country. It takes off the limitation which up to this time has prohibited the Export-Import Bank from lending money for the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war. As originally submitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency, it repealed the Johnson Act and repealed the Neutrality Act, so far as loans of this kind were concerned. As originally submitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency, it also increased the borrowing power of the R. F. C. by an indefinite amount. I have great confidence in Mr. Jones, but my experience with legislation which he sponsors is that he puts no limit whatever on his power, and the pending bill, as originally submitted, authorized the R. F. C. to borrow any amount of money whatsoever which might in any way be necessary in connection with national defense. Incidentally, the House has passed a bill somewhat like the one before us which does repeal the Johnson Act and does repeal the Neutrality Act, so far as the making of this kind of loans is concerned.

There is a general idea that loans under the bill could be made only to countries in the Western Hemisphere. That is not true. Loans might be made to any country in the world to which the Federal Loan Administrator chose to lend money if it would assist the stabilization of the economy or the orderly marketing of the products of the Western Hemisphere. In other words, we could lend money to China to finance the sale to China of agricultural commodities produced in South America.

I do not know what is going to be done with the House bill, but the House bill, in addition to this $500,000,000, authorizes the R. F. C. to borrow another billion dollars and to lend another billion dollars, in addition to all the great power it already has.

The purpose of the bill presumably is that stated by the President in his message to Congress sending the bill to the Congress, and that message, which is a matter of record here, apparently indicates that the only real purpose of the bill is to authorize the lending of money on agricultural surpluses of commodities produced in South America.

Reading the message, the President refers to the fact that—

> All American republics in some degree make a practice of selling, and should sell, surplus products to other parts of the world.

Because of the war, he states, the ordinary channels of trade have been interrupted, and—

> Necessarily this has caused distress in various parts of the New World and will continue to cause distress until foreign trade can be resumed on a normal basis and the seller of these surpluses is in a position to protect himself in disposing of his products.

The President continues:

> I, therefore, request that the Congress give prompt consideration to increasing the capital and lending power of the Export-Import Bank of Washington.

He said further:

> I call the attention of Congress to the fact that by helping our neighbors we will be helping ourselves. It is in the interests of the producers of our country, as well as in the interests of producers of other American countries, that there shall not be a disorganized or cutthroat market in those commodities which we all export.

I disagree entirely with the President's conclusions. But the only purpose the President states in submitting the bill to Congress is that he may acquire power to lend money on agricultural surpluses for use in South America. That is the only purpose the President has, and so far as I can see, we can conclude that if the bill is enacted the great bulk of this money will be used to finance the holding of surpluses of agricultural commodities produced in South America.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I notice that the usual qualifying phrase which has appeared in all previous lending bills for the Export-Import Bank, namely, the one requiring adequate security, seems to be missing from this text. Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is entirely correct. There is absolutely no requirement, so far as I can see, that any particular attention shall be paid to the question of security in connection with the lending of this $500,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So that the word "loans" as used in this connection, and particularly in the connotation suggested by the agricultural analogy, might suggest that these loans will ultimately be in the nature of gifts.

Mr. TAFT. I would think certainly they are not loans because in making loans in this country we have adopted the policy of lending in excess of the market price on cotton and corn and various other products, and presumably loans on these surplus products would be made also in the same manner.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, we are now lending on wheat at 10 or 12 cents more than the market price of wheat, and the same latitude would be permitted to the Export-Import Bank in dealing with South American surpluses if it wished to proceed in that fashion. Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. I think that is entirely correct. What I have said concerning the President's statement might be applied to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State made a statement at the conclusion of the Habana Conference in which he also laid particular stress upon his belief that we should lend money on agricultural surpluses. He said:

> Surpluses of commodities, the exportation of which is essential to the economic life of the American republics, have accumulated and continue to accumulate because Europe at war is unable to absorb them. Their existence is a matter of serious concern throughout the Continent.

That is the first of the only two purposes he states. The other is:

> In addition, we must envision the possibility that, after the termination of hostilities, many important European markets for these commodities may be directed and controlled by governments which regard international commerce as an instrument of domination rather than as a means of enabling all nations to share fully and on a basis of equality in a mutually beneficial exchange of their surplus products.
>
> The resolution on economic cooperation adopted by the Habana meeting is designed to create and set into operation machinery of action to deal with and meet both of these situations.
>
> The Habana meeting specifically instructed the committee to proceed at once with the preparation of detailed plans for cooperative temporary handling and orderly marketing of existing and prospective surpluses. * * * The committee was also instructed to devise methods of increasing consumption in the American republics, through relief and in other ways, which would aid in the disposal of surplus commodities.

So that under the bill—and apparently it is one of the things the Secretary contemplates—we can loan money to Argentina to enable her to put in a stamp plan to dispose of Argentina's corn to Argentine consumers, but the United States will pay the whole cost of putting such a stamp plan into effect.

> It is a system of economic defense under which the American Republics will be prepared to trade with any nation willing to meet them in good faith, in a spirit of friendly and peaceful purpose, and on a plane of frank and fair dealing, and under which they will be fully equipped to protect themselves against any other kind of dealing.

In other words, if we think the Germans are not offering proper terms, or doing right in dealing with Argentina, then we take the surpluses off Argentina's hands. That seems to be the deliberate purpose of the Habana Conference and the so-called act of Habana.

It is rather interesting that the act itself carries out very largely the same language which the Secretary of State has used, and finally affirms this rather broad purpose—

> And to recommend that, in order to promote the economic development of the American nations under the terms of said resolution, each nation, upon its own initiative and in consonance with the program of the Inter-American Development Commission, establish appropriate enterprises with Government or private capital provided by two or more American republics.

I venture to say that when there are two, the United States will always be one, and that all the money and capital which will be provided will come from the United States.

> Such enterprises may deal directly with the Inter-American Bank or other official or private credit institutions, it being recommended that the said bank give its sympathetic consideration to the possibility of granting them financial aid.

I should like the Senator from New York to tell me, if he can, what the Inter-American Bank is. There has been a great deal of discussion about it. I have seen references to it in the newspapers. It was to be a large two-billion-dollar bank, for which the United States, of course, shall put up nearly all the capital. There have been frequent rumors that a charter for such a bank is to be submitted to the Congress of the United States, but it never has been submitted to the Congress of the United States. Yet there seems to be such a bank, because the act of Habana refers to the fact that this program may be carried out through—

> The Inter-American Bank or other official or private credit institutions, it being recommended that the said bank give its sympathetic consideration to the possibility of granting them financial aid.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to make an observation at this point in connection with the Senator's recent statement. As a Member of the Senate, and certainly as a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, I would be greatly aided in my consideration of some of the pending legislation, similar to that now before us, much of which apparently is based upon the agreements at the Habana Conference. I should like respectfully to say that I should be greatly aided in my own legislative duties if the State Department would at least file the Habana agreements with the Senate for its information, even if it does not want the Senate's advice and consent.

Mr. TAFT. I might say, Mr. President, in that connection, that it is rather interesting that this act of Habana, which I hold here in my hand, has attached to it certain reservations of some other nations. For instance, the Colombian delegation votes affirmatively to sign the Act of Habana and the declaration concerning reciprocal assistance—

> Subject to approval by my Government and to the constitutional norms of my country.

Also the Venezuelan delegation signs the act with the statement that it is subject to ratification—

> By the public power of the nation in accordance with its constitutional provisions.

But the United States assumes to sign the act without any reference whatever to the Senate, apparently without any consideration of the provision of the Constitution which requires treaties to be ratified by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. WAGNER. I have been just informed that while my attention was otherwise taken the Senator from Ohio stated that he wanted to ask me about the Inter-American Bank.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I should like to know what it is. I have not been able to find out whether the bank was chartered and in existence or not.

Mr. WAGNER. It is not yet in existence. The plan is being worked out, but the bank is not yet a functioning entity.

Mr. TAFT. So the references in the act of Habana that—

Such enterprises may deal directly with the Inter-American Bank or other official or private credit institutions, it being recommended that the said bank give its sympathetic consideration to the possibility of granting them financial aid—

Are references to a nonexistent institution, a bank which does not exist in any way?

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that the bank is not yet in being?

Mr. TAFT. There is no officer of any such bank, in the Senator's opinion?

Mr. WAGNER. I know of none.

Mr. TAFT. I might say on this question of the ratification of the treaty of Habana, that it is rather interesting to see what the Senator from New York said yesterday—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not think the RECORD should rest with the statement made by the Senator from New York. An investigation will disclose that a treaty has been prepared involving and suggesting and providing for the creation of the Inter-American Bank. Of course, that treaty cannot be binding upon the United States until it shall have been submitted to the Senate, and have been ratified, but there is a proposed treaty in existence. I am not prepared to say definitely, but I am under the impression that some nations have ratified the treaty, and it is in existence, and is ready for submission to the Senate at the will and the option of the persons who have it in charge.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator know whether there is any person acting as an officer of the nonexisting bank?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There can be none until the treaty shall have been ratified by the Senate. We cannot participate in the matter any further than to agree to the terms of the treaty, and have it approved and ready for submission. That part is completed, and the treaty, so I am advised, is ready for submission to the Senate for approval.

Mr. TAFT. I wonder if some of the nations which have ratified the act have set up a bank somewhere which we have not yet heard about?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; they have not. The United States cannot take part in its establishment until it has come into existence. It is obvious that we shall furnish the major part of the capital. The treaty provides that other nations may become members of the bank by subscribing a certain percentage of the stock of the bank. The amount thereof is fixed. I have a copy of the purported treaty, but it is not at my desk.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator say that it is to be developed in treaty form rather than in this new method of Executive agreement which avoids the necessity of Senate advice and consent?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I cannot answer that definitely, but it is my impression that such an institution, in order to have a valid existence, and to be furnished with the necessary capital, must be created under a treaty which must be submitted to the Senate for ratification, thus giving validity to such bank.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator from Oklahoma is correct in that statement, but I have had the same illusion about other things.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, with reference to the Act of Habana, now that we have been discussing it, I think the statement made by the Senator from New York yesterday is interesting. He said:

This summer, at Habana, the good-neighbor policy bore fruit in a series of far-reaching measures.

I do not know what a "measure" is, unless it is something that has more or less legal effect—

The conference resolved that "any attempt on the part of a non-American state against the integrity or inviolability of the territory, the sovereignty, or the political independence of an American state shall be considered an act of aggression" against all the signatories. This establishes—

No matter what we do—a policy of common defense and mutual assistance, now reinforced by the bases we have leased from Great Britain and made available to all the American republics. The conference also set up machinery for the provisional administration of foreign possessions threatened with transfer of sovereignty.

If that statement means anything, it seems to me to mean a defensive alliance among all the nations of this continent. If that is not a matter which should be submitted to the Senate, then I do not understand what the Constitution provides. If the Senator from New York considers that we are bound now by a policy of mutual defense, if the Senator considers that if we go into these bases we are then obligated to admit all the other South American nations which desire to send planes to the same bases we are going to appropriate for, then it seems to me we are entirely evading the constitutional restrictions on the treaty-making power of the President of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, I agree with the Senator's conclusions, but even if there be disagreement as to whether or not the Habana Conference produced treaties or agreements, at least I respectfully submit that we in the Senate are entitled to be officially informed of what has happened, so that we may at least have an official text before us, which we might consult, so as to be at least casually informed regarding the responsibilities which the Constitution used to put upon us.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, in that connection, the only information the Senate has had, so far as I know, as to the making of these bases available to other South American nations, is the matter contained in the speech of the Senator from New York yesterday. I should like to know whether he can tell us on what terms these bases are made available to South American countries? Are they to participate in the expense of building them? It occurs to me that unless they are very valid restrictions we might find neutral nations, or nations whose governments are unfriendly to us, insisting upon the occupation of our bases, thus to a large extent nullifying the effect of the acquisition of the bases. Can the Senator tell me whether or not there is an agreement, or upon what terms the bases are to be made available to South American republics?

Mr. WAGNER. All I can say is that the bases have been acquired not only for our own use but for the defense of the entire Western Hemisphere—the countries to the north and south of us as well as ourselves.

Mr. TAFT. As the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] says, I think the Senate should at least be informed of the terms upon which the bases are to be made available; and I suggest to members of the Appropriations Committee that before we appropriate any money for the construction of such bases the Senate should approve the terms of whatever agreement may be made with reference to the use of the bases.

Mr. President, I have digressed from the particular point which I wanted to make in discussing the act of Habana. It is very clear that the main purpose of the sponsors of this legislation is that of lending money on surplus agricultural commodities in South America. It has nothing whatever to do with the original purpose of the Export-Import Bank, which was to finance American exports and promote the export of American products. It has very little, if anything, to do with the development of the resources of South America, or the development of strategic and critical materials in South America. I think that purpose was entirely an afterthought with Mr. Jones when he appeared before the Banking and Currency Committee. The President says nothing about it; the Secretary of State says nothing about it; and it seems to me there is an entire lack of regard for this best use of possible loans to South America.

I have proposed an amendment which limits the use of the money to two purposes—one, the original purpose of lending money to finance American exports; the other, assisting in the developing of resources which are defined by the President as strategic and critical materials, or of resources and materials which are not produced in the United States in appreciable quantities, and which are required for use in the United States.

In the long run we can hope to export our goods to South America only to the extent that we take goods from South American countries. They produce a large number of things which we cannot take. We produce them in more than sufficient quantities. However, they also produce other things; and to the extent that we can increase the production of rubber or tin in South America, or other things that we want to take, we can in the long run increase our exports to South America. In the long run, that is the only way in which we can increase our exports to South America.

In normal times I do not think the Government ought to engage in that activity. I think private capital could be interested in doing so in normal times; but today possibly conditions are such that private capital cannot do it. So I see a reasonable purpose behind the idea of lending money to help South American countries to develop materials which they can sell to us, and which we need. My amendment would permit those two purposes, and no other purpose. It would not permit the purpose stated by the Senator from New York, by the President, and by the Secretary of State, of lending money on agricultural surpluses and building up some vast cooperative enterprise to hold American agricultural surpluses off the market.

The original purpose of the Export-Import Bank was short-term financing. It was to help American exporters get their goods out as fast as possible, and turn them over as rapidly as possible. I think that was an absolutely sound purpose; but it has been largely neglected, because the purposes of the bank have been turned more and more to political considerations. Last year the bank adopted the new policy of making longer-term loans of all kinds to governments, instead of merely financing the normal courses of private trade. Even then, the bank said, "We will make such loans only to the extent that we can finance the export of American products. When the borrowers receive the money, they must pay it out for American exports." That has been the policy of the Export-Import Bank up to this time. Now we face a complete departure in policy. The proposal now before us is something new. It is just as new as though the proposal were for an entirely new bank, an entirely new project, authorizing the making of loans for political purposes and for the vast, vague economic purpose known as the stabilization of the economies of the countries of South America.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me that one of the difficulties in proceeding upon the rather amazing adventure which the Senator is now describing is the fact that when we once start upon this sort of enterprise there is no end. When we sink our first $50,000,000 south of the Equator, and make our first down payment on good will, there is no way to sustain our right, title, and interest except by a continuous series of subsequent payments; and the appetite feeds upon itself.

I can give the Senator an example.

For the past 7 years our domestic sugar policy has been built entirely on the theory that we must aid Cuban sugar. There will be no dispute about that. Is that policy now adequate to satisfy the Cuban appetite in respect to our down payment on good will Not at all. At the Habana Conference, to which the Senator has referred, a very distinguished Cuban seriously proposed to the American delegation that it ought to go back home and obtain an appropriation to buy up all the domestic sugar production facilities in the United States and put them out of business permanently for the benefit of Cuba.

I suggest to the Senator that the problem we have before us is not merely the initial down payment on good will. In its lengthened shadow it may double the existing deficit of the United States; and that certainly would be an astronomical figure.

Mr. TAFT. Of course, the Senator is correct. It is alleged that we must do this, as the Senator says, to buy good will. We buy it only so long as the loans are being made. The moment we stop we not only have not bought good will but we immediately create bad will, and we are worse off than if we had never begun making any loans at all.

Yesterday the distinguished Senator from New York referred to the increase in South American trade from $200,000,000 of exports in 1932 to $633,000,000 in 1939, and gave the impression that the Export-Import Bank was an important factor in that increase. As a matter of fact, the trade with South America is still very much less than it was all through the twenties. I have the figures before me, and I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

United States exports and imports to Latin America

Year	Exports to—		General imports from—
	Southern North America	South America	Southern North America	South America

1937	321,068,000,000	318,354,000,000	283,045,000,000	422,026,000,000

Mr. TAFT. The figures show that as long ago as 1917 our exports to Latin America were more than $730,000,000, whereas today they are only about $633,000,000. From that time they steadily increased. In 1920 they reached one and a half billion dollars. Through the period of the twenties—1924, 1925, and 1926—they were in the neighborhood of $800,000,000 or $900,000,000. That was at a time when the present good-neighbor policy was not in effect, but at a time when we carried on the normal relations of trade with South America.

So the restoration of this trade, or a part of it, is not in itself an extraordinary feat. Furthermore, as the Senator pointed out, the Export-Import Bank has made loans of $62,000,000 in the past 5 years to help the development of South American trade. The total exports to South America during those 5 years were $2,400,000,000. So the Export-Import Bank actually financed 2½ percent of the South American trade.

Our trade with South America depends on the encouragement of private enterprise. The original purpose of the Export-Import Bank to help private enterprise in this field was a worthy purpose, and can help; and yet in the long run we can increase our trade with South America only by the development of private industry rather than through Government loans.

The proposed loans are to be made to governments and to central banks, or on the guaranty of governments and central banks. In spite of the general feeling that we must approve anything the moment a defense label is attached to it, it seems to me it is our duty to examine and analyze every proposal on its merits. It is our duty to determine whether or not the method proposed is really a method to help the defense of the United States.

This is a wide-open request for authority to lend money for any purpose to South American nations. It may be loaned for military defense. I do not know whether or not we should finance the export of arms to South America. There have been instances in which we have financed or delivered war material, only to find later that it was being used against us. That might well be so in the case of some South American nations. The proposed loans may be used for the control of surpluses, for the inauguration of stamp plans, or for any purpose.

So far as being a defense project is concerned, I should like to refer to two editorials, one from the New York Times and the other from the New York Herald Tribune. Both newspapers differed with my position on the conscription bill. Both are for total defense, whatever that means; and yet both are extremely critical of the present proposal.

The Times says:

We still do not know the exact purposes for which the new lending power is to be used. A few weeks ago it was announced that the Roosevelt administration had "definitely and completely abandoned" the idea of creating a huge cartel to buy surplus commodities of the Western Hemisphere. As an unnamed high official rightly declared, it would be "ridiculous to think of buying up South American surpluses, because that would only encourage increased production of the same surplus commodities."

Of course, he is correct; but this bill is proposed for the very purpose of doing exactly that thing.

He added that this would further depress our own market. Jesse Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, also testified on August 6: "There is no association between this plan and the plan to take surpluses off the South American market."

The statements of Mr. Jones—

The Times says—

The statements of Mr. Jones with respect to this are ambiguous. In a letter made public this week he declares:

"While it is not contemplated that loans would be made on surplus agricultural commodities, appropriate consideration would be given to applications from some of the governments or their central banks for loans in reasonable amounts that might enable the Government or its banks to assist their nationals in the carrying and orderly marketing of some of their agricultural surpluses, with a view to avoiding demoralized prices that would affect our own farmers."

The comment of the Times on Mr. Jones' remark is certainly justified. The Times says—

In other words, while it is not contemplated that loans would be made on surplus agricultural commodities, it is contemplated that loans would be made on surplus agricultural commodities.

The Times goes on—

Such a policy, once embarked upon, could lead to limitless commitments. There is no reason why explicit limitations and safeguards cannot be written into the bill.

There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that the loaning of money on agricultural commodities is the purpose of the authors of the bill.

I will not undertake to read the entire editorial from the New York Herald Tribune; its conclusion is the same as that of the New York Times; but I quote in part:

It is obvious that occasions may arise when direct subventions from the American Government may be desirable as the only effective way of accomplishing a necessary objective. But the readiness of the administration to toss away hundreds of millions of dollars at home without a thought of the consequences, together with the notorious failure of the Government's attempt to help the needy by buying up surpluses, make it incumbent on the proponents of this plan to convince the Nation that this vast sum will be effectively and efficiently used and will not simply go down the rat hole.

Mr. President, the amendment I offer is intended to eliminate the lending of money on agricultural surpluses and to eliminate the vague cartel plan and confine the lending of money to the proper purposes of the Export-Import Bank.

The minority of the Banking and Currency Committee has filed a minority report, which will be found on the desks of Senators. It was signed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], and myself. It sets out the arguments against the bill. In the first place, I think it is perfectly clear that the bill is unconstitutional, although that is not a matter that much concerns the Senate these days, and it has not even always concerned the courts. Many crimes have been committed in the name of the general-welfare clause. It is said that we can borrow money and spend money for the general welfare of the people of the United States, but I have never heard the general-welfare clause extended to apply to the general welfare of the inhabitants of Patagonia. How we can constitutionally raise taxes in order to pay out money for the stabilization of the economies of other nations, for the general welfare of people in any part of the world, I do not understand. We have just as much obligation here in the Senate to abide by the provisions of the Constitution as has the Supreme Court of the United States, or any official of the United States Government.

The whole policy of surplus control, in my opinion, is not only futile but absolutely harmful not only to our own citizens but to the citizens of every South American republic, to assist whom we are asked to pass this bill. Surplus control is certainly of doubtful value. We have tried it. With us it is still an experiment. Nobody knows whether it will be a complete failure; nobody knows whether it will break down all prices, and cause a depression greater than any depression we have ever had.

We have already in this country appropriated a billion and a half dollars for the Surplus Commodities Corporation to buy up agricultural surpluses. The Surplus Commodities Corporation today has most of its money invested in agricultural surpluses. It owns or controls 8,732,000 bales of cotton; it owns or controls 532,000,000 bushels of wheat; it owns or controls 44,000,000 bushels of corn; and nobody knows how the Corporation will ever get rid of those surpluses. When that policy is extended to international surplus control, it is infinitely more unsound and infinitely more difficult to carry out. What possible means of carrying it out can there be? If we make a treaty or an agreement with a dozen South American countries, what will happen if they are all hard-pressed and someone comes along and says, "We will take your products"? What is to prevent them from breaking their agreement? What possible means of enforcing such an agreement can we have? The moment one nation becomes hard-pressed and says "We have got to get some cash," of course, the nation next door will do the same thing, and the whole scheme comes down in a crash. The result of every cartel, every holding of surpluses off the market, up to this time, has been ultimately to break the whole price of the commodity concerned.

We saw that in the Stevenson plan to control rubber; we saw it in the valorization plan to control coffee in Brazil. When there is an international agreement, particularly between a dozen different nations, each one of which, after all, is free to do as it pleases, the possibility of carrying it out seems to me to be exceedingly remote, to say the least. When the plan collapses, prices will collapse far below the point they would have reached if every year we had gotten rid of the surplus of that particular year.

Our surplus control is, at least, accompanied by some effort to control production, and every person who defends the policy of loans and of surplus control says that it must be accompanied by control of production. How on earth can we make Argentina control her production? The lending of money on Argentina's surplus wheat or corn would simply encourage further production in the Argentine than there would otherwise be, and the building up of larger and larger surpluses, until the whole thing would fall of its own weight. The idea of a surplus control of commodities by international agreement has broken down every time it has ever been tried, and it is absolutely certain to break down if we try it under the provisions of the pending bill.

The proposed policy would certainly be harmful to our farmers. It is said that if foreign prices collapse that affects our prices also. Of course, foreign prices have collapsed, and, so far as we could be affected, we are affected already. Certainly, a very much cheaper method of disposing of our surpluses is to finance the sale of our products through some form of export subsidy. That plan has worked reasonably well. Certainly it would be very much cheaper than to lend $500,000,000; and when we adopt it, we know the exact effect; we are able to carry out the disposition of our surplus, and, in effect, the rest of the Nation is assisting the producer to meet world conditions that could not otherwise be met. Why should not the Argentine people help their own producers in the same way? If they want to subsidize their producers, that is their affair. If they want to hold their surpluses off the market, that is their affair. They are able to do it; it does not cost them anything; that is, it does not cost them anything on the theory on which we proceed here of merely borrowing the money from the banks. They can borrow money from their own banks as we borrow from our own banks, and they can hold their surpluses off the market as we hold our surpluses off the market; but, in the name of good sense, why should we lend them money to enable them to hold their surpluses off the market?

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] yesterday made a statement which I think is of some interest to our producers. He said:

> A program of economic cooperation stands to the advantage of all the American nations. The economy of Latin America is in many respects the natural complement of our own. Latin America lies for the most part within the Tropics. The staple export crops of this area—coffee, cocoa, bananas, sugar, and long-staple cotton—

He does not mention short-staple cotton, the production of which is rapidly increasing in South America—> do not compete in any way with our agriculture and cannot be obtained from any other assured source.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Did I correctly understand the Senator to quote the Senator from New York as saying that Central American and South American sugar has no American competition?

Mr. TAFT. Yes. The words of the Senator from New York are:

> The staple export crops of this area—coffee, cocoa, bananas, sugar, and long-staple cotton—do not compete in any way with our agriculture.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, I knew that the administration proceeded on that theory; but I at least, assumed they recognized the existence of the sugar industry in the United States.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, there is a legal restriction now, in the form of a quota, which controls the importation of sugar into this country. That is what I intended to say with reference to that commodity. I may perhaps have used an unclear form of expressing what I had in mind.

Mr. TAFT. At any event, I think the argument made that we are naturally complementary nations is not one on which a very sound conclusion can be based. Very much the same thing is true of cotton.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. I am glad to be interrupted.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean to say that we do not import long-staple cotton into this country?

Mr. TAFT. No; I only said the Senator had omitted all reference to short-staple cotton, the production of which is rapidly increasing in South America, which does compete directly with our cotton, and for which we are now going to loan South American nations money to enable them to hold that surplus off the market, as we are holding our cotton surplus off the market.

I think it is fair to say that there is no policy as unsound as the policy which apparently is the whole basis of this bill—the attempt to set up an international plan to hold agricultural surpluses off the market.

There is one other purpose stated, and that is that we should uphold the internal economy of the South American countries, because if they have hard times they may have political troubles, and it may be easier for the Germans to get in.

The Senator from New York yesterday said:

> By financing the development of certain local industries we can greatly contribute to the stability of economic life throughout Latin America. At the same time the improved living standards in Latin America which would result from a strengthened local industry would increase purchasing power and open immense new markets for our products.

Of course, that argument proves too much. If by loaning a little money we can raise the living standards of South America, we can in the same way raise the living standards of China; we can raise the living standards of all Asia and Russia and every other country; and we can create a great prosperity from which, of course, we also would benefit. However, the trouble is that with $500,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 we cannot raise the living standards of people in South America. We have tried our best to improve our condition here, and we have accomplished something by the expenditure of billions of dollars; but we have not eliminated depressions. We have not eliminated hard times. We have not eliminated a great many unemployed. We have not eliminated the necessity of a tremendous amount of relief in this country. Now, however, we are to raise the living standards of everybody in South America. It is a noble purpose, but I say it is absolutely futile. It is something we simply cannot possibly do under any circumstances, and if we undertake to do it we cannot stop at $500,000,000 or $5,000,000,000. Why not loan money to everybody in the world? Why not loan money to the countries under German control? They will be benefited just the same as other countries if we raise their living standards. We can undoubtedly increase the general prosperity of the world in that way.

As a matter of fact, the economic condition of each country is within its own control to some extent. The best way in which we can help any country to improve its economic condition is to let it go on in its own way, to advise it as best we may, to set some bad examples, as we have, to show what it should not do, and let it work out its own salvation.

As a weapon against German economic penetration, these loans would be completely futile. The Germans do not make vast loans to any country. That is not the way in which the progress has been made to which the Senator from New York has referred. Loans of this kind encourage the building up of vast surpluses, and thereby make weaker the economic conditions of American countries. When Germany is freed from the occupation of the present war, those countries will be very much weaker against Germany if they have surpluses which they have to get rid of. If they have to get rid of those surpluses, the Germans perhaps can make some terms which otherwise they could not make for political infiltration.

What is Germany going to do to South America? Frankly, I do not understand. At times we are told that because the Germans control so much of the world markets they are not going to pay America anything for its products, and thereby America is going to suffer. We are told that we are jointly to hold all our products away from Germany until they give us a fair price. That is one argument. The other argument is that far from not giving us a fair price, the Germans will give us too much. They will come into South America and say, "We will give you more than the world market. We will take all the surplus off your hands in return for certain political advantages."

I do not know what the Germans may do, and no one knows what they may do, until they are freed from the present war and have an opportunity to show. When they do, we can adopt the same methods. We can take the same steps that may be necessary to meet the particular kind of German "blitzkrieg," if there is such a "blitzkrieg," at the time we find out what it is.

Frankly, we cannot hope to monopolize the trade of South America. It is absolutely impossible. We are not willing to take more than about one-third of the products produced in South America; and in the long run we cannot sell them any more goods than we are willing to take from them. We cannot monopolize the trade. We must recognize the fact that all European nations are going to deal in South America, and we are going to have to push our own trade just as hard as we possibly can when that time comes.

It is said that the Germans will go to Brazil and say, "We will not take your products unless you give us certain advantages." Well, we can go to Brazil and say, "We will not take your coffee unless you give us certain advantages." We can play the same game that the Germans play. As a matter of fact, there is not any evidence that the Germans' method is going to be particularly successful in political infiltration. The Senator from New York himself yesterday pointed out that the methods the Germans had pursued had so antagonized the people of South America that they had risen up against the idea of German domination. He said:

> The subversive activities of the Nazis in Latin America finally led to a great wave of protest from the people of these republics. During 1937 and 1938, Nazi activities were exposed in a documented report to the Argentine Congress by Deputy Dickman. * * * In May 1938, an attempted Nazi revolt in Brazil was put down and measures were taken to put a stop to Nazi expansion. Many other Latin American states at the same time imposed various restrictions on the Nazis.

The question of how we may have to meet Nazi penetration in South America is a question which involves a thousand things, which involves a great many measures which may have to be taken at the time; but, as far as we can see, the one thing that certainly is not going to do any good is to lend anybody any money, because the moment you stop lending people money, as the Senator from Michigan pointed out, they not only are no longer friendly but they are positively unfriendly until you resume the policy of lending.

The same German policy created such intense resentment in Uruguay that the whole Uruguayan public sentiment has turned against German infiltration; so I do not know whether we should use the German methods. It seems to me that if we go ahead and promote our trade in South America by normal methods, if we pursue a "good neighbor" policy, if we keep on a friendly basis, there will be some opportunity for us to make constant headway in the esteem of our South American neighbors.

There are many things we can do. Our main purpose should be to do in detail every little thing we can to help our exporters to South America to be really friendly to South America. We can buy more coffee, for instance, from Brazil and sell it through the food-stamp plan. It can be done. We can insure short-term credits, as Germany does and as England does, in South America. We can reduce steamship rates, which the South Americans think are much too high, for products transported between the United States and South America. We can even perhaps reduce taxes on the profits from export trade. We can develop strategic materials in accordance with the terms of my amendment. I may say that we have already authorized the Department of Agriculture to spend a large amount of money in developing the production of rubber in Brazil, a specific project. I am willing, under this measure, to give general power to the Export-Import Bank to lend money to Brazil or concerns in Brazil to develop rubber plantations. I am willing to lend money to Bolivia to develop tin that we may need. Those are purposes which in the long run will benefit us, because increasing the exports from South America to this country is the only means of increasing in the long run the exports from this country to South America; so in that we have a particular purpose which will improve South American relations.

As a matter of fact, of course, we stand to lose this money finally if we lend it. Our records of loans to governments show that they are just about 95 percent bad. Finland pays its debts. Whether they will be able to continue to do so, I do not know. But practically every other government has defaulted except those to which money has been loaned by the Export-Import Bank during the last few years. So long as we are willing to go on lending to a government, the government is willing to go on paying interest and some amortization on its loans. In the case of Brazil, for instance, as long as they can get more money to release American exchange from time to time, it is easy enough to take some of the money and pay the interest and amortization on the older loan. But we have shown that we are not going to enforce any loan against a government, and there is no possible way to make a government pay a loan. Loans to governments are probably the worst type of credit risk that exists in the world today.

The Senator from Connecticut has referred to South American defaults. I think that out of $1,700,000,000 owed in this country by South American countries, $1,200,000,000 is in default. The trouble is that some people think we have in the United States an unlimited amount of money available.

I read from a pamphlet called Total Defense—Report of Committee on Economic Defense of the American Council on Public Affairs. I suspect that this pamphlet was the real origin of the whole theory of lending money on agricultural surpluses and on South American cartels. It came out about the time of the President's message. It contains very much the same language and the same arguments contained in the message. It states the theory I am combating in the bill, because I am sure that it is what the bill is intended to carry through. I wish to quote from the pamphlet. I may say that the American Council on Public Affairs is made up of a good many left-wing economists and others who take the usual extreme economic view. The pamphlet states:

> We must arrange for collective bargaining by the countries of the Western Hemisphere in dealing with the totalitarian systems as no individual American country, dealing alone, would be a match for the totalitarian powers in the field of international trade.

In other words, here are 20 nations going to sit around a table and try to make a deal with England to sell their products. They would have each fellow out around the back door making special terms with him, and the chance of an attempt to apply to nations the correct idea of collective bargaining as it is known in labor unions seems to me completely fallacious.

> If the United States attempted to outbid Europe in a barter arrangement with a single South American country, it would mean we would have to be prepared to reduce the living standards of American labor to that of Europe. By bargaining collectively within the pan-American economy, we will be able to maintain and raise our standard of living and that of all the American countries, at the same time dealing with Europe to our advantage.

That is the cartel plan.

> We should start negotiations at once to use our great financial strength for the purchase of exports of Latin America. These commodities could then be turned over to a pan-American trading corporation which, in turn, would use them to meet the needs of the people of this hemisphere through a circular exchange among the American countries, by direct distribution, or by trading them for desired products in other parts of the world. In fact, it is difficult to see how we can escape a rapid collapse of our influence south of Panama, by any less drastic move. For the moment, we have no power but money, and we have most of the money in the world. If we hesitate to use that power, we may find its value evaporating.

We have all the money in the world, but we ran a deficit of $3,700,000,000 this year, and we are going to run a deficit of over $6,000,000,000 next year. We cannot get enough money to pay for the very vital essentials of our national defense, we cannot raise money to pay for the ordinary expenses of the Federal Government, but we have so much money that the only thing we can do with it is to scatter it around the world to every nation whose good will we think we can in some way buy.

I read further from this pamphlet:

If we hesitate to use that power, we may find its value evaporating. This action would, of course, be merely a temporary stopgap, and should be accompanied as rapidly as possible by the formation of a permanent pan-American trading corporation. This public corporation should aim to develop a circular trade within the hemisphere, providing a higher standard of living and full employment. The program could be greatly assisted by making loans at nominal rates of interest to develop the industrial programs called for by the pan-American economic plan. Our Government could supply the Inter-American Bank, which is just about to be created by the governments of the Western Hemisphere, with the necessary reserves to finance these investment developments.

That is the real thought behind the bill, a grandiose plan to make everybody happy, to raise everyone's standard of living, to associate all the American republics in one trading corporation which would say to Europe, "You have to pay us what we want for our products." Merely to state the plan shows how competely impossible and impracticable it is. Yet it shows the kind of thinking which has instigated the idea that we can lend money on agricultural surpluses.

We are struggling with a tax bill. I do not know how much it is going to raise. There have been all kinds of estimates. I suppose it may raise $500,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. About $300,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Three hundred million dollars; well, $500,000,000 a year in later years. By the action we take here today we are merely taking all the money that is supposed to be raised for national defense and dumping it into South America. We are going to use up, under this one measure, what would be raised through the efforts of the Finance Committee to get the country somewhere near a reasonable budget basis.

I am extremely pessimistic about the future of the United States merely because of the financial condition of the country. Unless we are willing to face the situation, unless we are willing to cut expenses, unless we are willing to raise taxes, unless we are willing to get back on a normal basis, I do not see any outcome of the present situation except a collapse of our entire financial system, which would mean the wiping out of all of our savings, which would mean the wiping out of all of our investments, which would mean the destruction of the system which has made America what it is. It would mean inflation, which is just a form of repudiating debts, a form of paying debts by taking all of the money everyone has saved in recent years and pouring it in to pay the debts of the Government. If we ever get to that condition, I do not know how we are going to avoid the very kind of totalitarian status there is in Germany, because we are going to have to set up a hand-made economy and I submit that a hand-made economy is going to be a Government-directed system.

Unless an expenditure is absolutely essential, it is our responsibility to prevent it. We may blame the President, but there is nothing more our own responsibility than the appropriation of public money. If destruction comes to this country, it will be the fault of Congress, of this Congress, and of the Congresses of recent years. It is a responsibility we cannot escape, and it is our duty to examine every bill and every expenditure. Five hundred million dollars looks small to many today, yet it is just as important to save as it is to reduce any other expense of the Government. We should not vote any appropriation unless it is an essential appropriation; and if there is any vaguer, more indefinite, more unnecessary, more unessential appropriation than that authorized in the pending bill, I do not know what it is.

Mr. President, I feel that the bill should be defeated. I feel that if it is not defeated its purposes should be cut down to certain definite things which will not set any precedent, which can be stopped, which can be limited to a reasonable amount.

I urge that my amendment be adopted, and that the bill be otherwise modified.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question about his amendment. Is he proposing to confine the increased resources to the development of strategic materials?

Mr. TAFT. No. The amendment provides—

Such loans shall only be made for the purpose of assisting in the development of resources which are defined by the President as strategic and critical materials or of resources and materials which are not produced in the United States in appreciable quantities and which are required for use in the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Why would not the Senator also be willing to increase the capital of the Export-Import Bank for the making of loans to exporters in the ordinary procedure which has heretofore been followed?

Mr. TAFT. I think that the effect of the bill as drafted would still permit that to be done. I will examine into that. But my intention was to permit the additional capital, whatever it might be—and if this amendment is adopted I hope it may be cut down to $200,000,000, instead of $500,000,000—to permit that to be used also for the ordinary financing of the export of American products. I think that would be the effect, but I will examine the bill and be sure it so provides, or offer an amendment to make it do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish the Senator would examine the subject, because my feeling about it is that there is a very great purpose to be served through the encouragement of Pan American economy, and I am perfectly willing to do it through sound methods, and I think the methods of the Export-Import Bank heretofore have been sound. I am perfectly willing to expand that effort. I am perfectly willing to go into the field of strategic materials, to which the Senator refers in his amendment; I should like to see the bill have that much breadth and scope. The thing I want to do is to protect myself and the Senate, and the country, and my children against the monstrosity of an international cartel to handle agricultural surpluses.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator uses the term "in appreciable quantities." I am wondering whether the word "appreciable" is not rather too diminutive to carry out what the Senator has in mind. I assume what he means is, unless they are produced in commercial quantities, in quantities sufficient to furnish some of the needed supplies of the country.

Mr. TAFT. I should be glad to follow any suggestions the Senator may make. My purpose, I think, was clear. I did not want to exclude the lending of money to develop production simply because somewhere in the United States a small amount of it may be produced, or that somewhere in the United States there exists a field of some particular metal which cannot be expanded, but will always produce a little. That is the purpose of the term "appreciable."

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I cannot support the bill to increase the capital of the Export-Import Bank by $500,000,000 for the purpose, apparently, of financing South American surpluses of farm products through a cartel plan or some substitute for the cartel.

Of course, I must admit that the bill does not say that, nor did Mr. Jesse Jones say that in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, so far as I have been able to discover in reading the hearings:

"We would like to help the South American countries with their economy and the marketing of some of their products," Mr. Jones said on page 2 of the Senate hearings.

"In what way will that be done, Mr. Jones?" asked the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

"We do not know in what way, Senator," responded Mr. Jones, for whom, I wish to say, I have a great affection and also great respect.

The remainder of Mr. Jones' testimony is merely a variation of this theme—"We do not know in what way."

Mr. President, I have grave doubt as to the wisdom of furnishing a half billion dollars to be loaned—one should say expended—in what way we do not know.

As a matter of fact, we have been given an inkling as to how the half-billion-dollar fund will be used, and how other half billions or billions will be used, if the initial investment calls for further investments, as it will.

The White House some time ago announced at a press conference the establishment of a cartel system for handling surplus products of the South American countries.

The idea then expressed, as I understood it at the time, was that in order to prevent Adolf Hitler from getting his tentacles on South America, through trading with South America, through getting foodstuffs and other raw materials from South America, Uncle Sam would buy up and take over those surpluses. To get them we would, of course, outbid Mr. Hitler; we would pay more than he would pay.

Then, having acquired the surpluses, Uncle Sam would have them on hand to sell—to sell to Mr. Hitler, as nearly as I could figure out. To get Mr. Hitler to take them, presumably, we would have to make him a better price than he could get elsewhere. Uncle Sam would buy South American surpluses high and sell them low. The probable cost was estimated at from one-half billion dollars to $1,000,000,000 annually.

I understand the cartel plan has been repudiated. That does not necessarily mean it has been abandoned. Under the provision of this bill, it could be picked up again and put into operation.

As a matter of fact, it seems to me there is little practical difference between providing for "orderly marketing," as the Senator from New York describes this purchasing of surpluses, through the cartel plan and through financing South American governments to enable them to buy and dispose of their surpluses with the cooperation of the United States Government or its representatives. I understand that is what now is proposed, once the bill becomes law.

So much for the general implications of the bill. I may say that the purchase of the friendship of one government by another government is unsound from the economic standpoint, and unsound politically, in my judgment.

We in the Farm Belt, Mr. President, have even more cogent reasons for opposing this measure. I believe I can state them briefly.

Mostly the nations of South America are agricultural countries. They produce in surplus largely the same farm commodities which the farmers of the United States also produce in surplus—cotton, wheat, corn, meat products.

Our Government today is subsidizing exports of our farm surpluses; it is holding up the domestic prices through commodity loans; it is disposing of surpluses in our country through the stamp plans, through school lunches, through outright gifts to persons on relief. If we should, in addition, now undertake to dispose of surpluses of the same commodities from South American countries, the plight of our own farmers, as well as of the United States Treasury, would indeed be very much worse.

I may add that there are deep suspicions throughout the western cattle section that the price of Argentine cooperation in whatever program might be developed under this half-billion-dollar slush fund for "doing the needful" in South America might be to let the bars down for imports of Argentine cattle and fresh beef and other animal products from the Argentine—after the election.

The measure, Mr. President, is loaded with dynamite in the field of foreign relations and fraught with threats to the future welfare of American agriculture. The American farmer is in need of markets for his surplus products, but he is bitterly opposed to any program which will result in opening American markets to the competing surplus products of South America or any other countries. I must oppose the passage of the bill with all means in my power.

INVESTIGATION OF ENROLLMENT METHODS, CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution calling for the investigation by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs of the practice on the part of the Civilian Conservation Corps Director of admitting enrollees on bases other than need. I ask that the resolution be read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 311) was read, as follows:

Whereas the Civilian Conservation Corps was established by the Congress to provide employment for needy unemployed youths; and

Whereas new regulations were issued on August 14, 1940, by the Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps defining the phrase "Unemployed and in need of employment" to cover "unmarried junior applicants otherwise qualified by age, citizenship, fitness, and character; not in attendance at school, nor on temporary vacation therefrom; not possessing other regular or full-time employment, and who need the employment, the job training, the educational and other opportunities available in the Civilian Conservation Corps."; and

Whereas the pay in the Corps is a minimum of $30 a month plus clothing, subsistence, laundry, travel, education, welfare, hospitalization, shelter, and burial expense, while the Army pay under existing law is but $21 a month, and under the conscription bill is but $21 a month for the first 4 months of service; and

Whereas hundreds of thousands of young men are now required in the Army to provide an urgently needed national defense; and

Whereas it is charged that said regulation issued by said Director is not fully supported by provision of law; and that a well-organized campaign for enrollees is being conducted throughout the country which will tend to delay and disrupt our program of national defense: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Military Affairs Committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the above-mentioned matters, and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask that that resolution be referred to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I further ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point part of the act to establish the Civilian Conservation Corps. The part I wish to have inserted in the RECORD deals with the qualifications of enrollees.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator read that portion of the act, so we may hear it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not think it is necessary to suggest the absence of a quorum. I shall proceed to read a portion of the act into the RECORD. I do not wish to delay the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the Senator ought to yield to the Senator from California for the purpose suggested by him. The matter to which the Senator refers is one of very great importance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Very well, I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	King	Russell
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lodge	Sheppard
Bailey	Gerry	McCarran	Smathers
Barbour	Gibson	McKellar	Stewart
Barkley	Gillette	Maloney	Taft
Bilbo	Green	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Guffey	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gurney	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Hale	Neely	Townsend
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Tydings
Byrnes	Hatch	Nye	Vandenberg
Capper	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Caraway	Herring	Overton	Wagner
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Pittman	Walsh
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Reed	White
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Reynolds	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, just before the order for a quorum call was entered, I submitted a resolution calling for an investigation by the Military Affairs Committee of the new regulations of the C. C. C. Director taking in boys on some other basis than the basis of need. No change whatsoever has been made in the law, and yet a change has been made in the enrollment. I want the Senate Military Affairs Committee to investigate the matter.

The C. C. C. is paying $30 a month, whereas in the Army the same class of boys receive only $21 a month under existing law; and under the terms of the conscription bill, if it shall be enacted, they must serve 4 months before they receive $30. Under the C. C. C. regulations, 10 percent of the boys may be paid $36 a month, and 6 percent of the boys enrolled may be paid $45 a month.

I wish to read into the RECORD the first section of the act establishing the C. C. C. camps, which reads as follows:

That there is hereby established the Civilian Conservation Corps, hereinafter called the Corps, for the purpose of providing employment, as well as vocational training, for youthful citizens of the United States who are unemployed and in need of employment, and to a limited extent as hereinafter set out, for war veterans and Indians, through the performance of useful public work in connection with the conservation and development of the natural resources of the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions: Provided, That at least 10 hours each week may be devoted to general educational and vocational training: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall continue for the period of 3 years after July 1, 1937, and no longer.

I think every Member of the Senate and almost everyone in the country is in complete accord with the purposes of the C. C. C. We are glad that we have that kind of an organization to furnish employment to boys in need. However, we now have a new regulation, under date of August 14, in which the whole thing is changed. I now read from page 2 of the bulletin issued by Mr. McEntee:

The latest modification in the regulations defining the terms "unemployed and in need of employment"—

That term is lifted from the law which I have just read—

read as follows: "For the purpose of C. C. C. selection the phrase 'unemployed and in need of employment' shall be understood to cover unmarried junior applicants otherwise qualified by age, citizenship, fitness, and character; not in attendance at school, nor on temporary vacation therefrom; not possessing other regular or full-time employment, and who need the employment, the job-training, the educational, and other opportunities available in the Civilian Conservation Corps."

Mr. McEntee continues in the bulletin:

It is important to have in mind the new definition of "unemployed and in need of employment." This new definition is the heart of the new regulation.

The law has not been changed. The law is the same today as it was, but the regulation has been changed, so that boys may be taken into the C. C. C. service whether they need employment or not. The object of my resolution is to have an investigation of the situation. I think it is highly important that this matter be investigated, because the campaign which is being put on to get boys into the C. C. C. camps must necessarily interfere with the effort which the War Department is making to get men into the Army.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Who is to make the investigation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senate Military Affairs Committee, or a subcommittee of the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. ELLENDER. Since the bill creating the Civilian Conservation Corps was considered and reported to the Senate by the Committee on Education and Labor, does not the Senator think his resolution should be referred to said committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is a defense matter. I think it affects the national defense.

Mr. ELLENDER. I cannot agree with the Senator. The bill originated with the Committee on Education and Labor, as I have just stated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. It was thoroughly considered by that committee; and I believe that in justice to that committee the resolution ought to be referred to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have no fault whatever to find with the law. I think the law was well written, and I think the committee did a fine job in writing the original law. I am not finding any fault with the bill which came from the committee represented by the Senator from Louisiana, but I am finding fault with the regulations set up under that law, because they affect the national defense; and the Senate Military Affairs Committee should be interested, and is interested, in that phase of the matter.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand from what the Senator has read, the officials in charge are not satisfied with the language of the law, and they are taking words which we all understand, words of common use and acceptance, and are now putting upon them what they confess to be a new interpretation and a new, expanded meaning.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes. They say:

It is important to have in mind the new definition of "unemployed and in need of employment." This new definition is the heart of the new regulation.

In this connection it may be said that the C. C. C. has an overhead limitation of 300,000, as I recall. Suppose the ranks of the C. C. C. should be filled with boys who, under the law, do not deserve to be enrolled.

Mr. ELLENDER. How could they be enrolled if the applicants do not come within the purview of the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is exactly what is being done. The officials have changed the law by defining it.

Mr. ELLENDER. I cannot agree with the Senator. I am sending for a copy of the order to which he has previously referred and in my own time I propose to point out that the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] is in error.

Did the Senator obtain an opinion from the Department of Justice in an effort to find out whether or not there was a violation of law, as he states?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not know that there is any violation of law, but the order has been issued. The Senator worked on the bill. When he worked on the bill, did he contemplate that boys would be enrolled in the C. C. C. on any other basis than that of need?

Mr. ELLENDER. No. The law, as well as all rulings of the Director, including the latest one made and which forms the basis of this discussion contemplates need.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Let me read what the Denver welfare director had to say about the matter:

The Denver Bureau of Public Welfare is again accepting applications for the Civilian Conservation Corps, Miss Bernice Reed, director of the bureau, announced yesterday.

That was one day last week. I do not know the exact date. It was probably Saturday, or perhaps Monday of this week.

Miss Reed pointed out that regulations concerning applicants have been changed.

Have they been changed by any law enacted, I will ask the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ELLENDER. In what respect have they been changed? I was not present to hear all the discussion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will read how they have been changed:

Miss Reed pointed out that regulations concerning applicants have been changed, and it is no longer necessary that enrollees come from families on relief. Youths between 17 and 23½ years of age will be accepted immediately. She said: "So far as I now know, the Denver quota is unlimited, and the C. C. C. is seeking as many young men as possible."

They are seeking them, and the Army is also seeking them at the same time. I do not believe there should be that kind of competition.

For those reasons I have submitted the resolution and asked that it be referred to the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words with reference to the statement of the Senator from Colorado

Prior to 1937 admission to the C. C. C. camps was restricted entirely to members of families on relief. When the committee of which the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is chairman reported the bill in 1937, the Congress, after discussion of the subject, intentionally made a change in the law. Whether it was wise or not the Congress then determined it. The Administrator had nothing to do with the determination. Congress determined that the individual boy should not be denied admission to a C. C. C. camp if he could not show that he was on relief. The matter is generally known; it was discussed before the Appropriations Committee when the representatives of the C. C. C. organizations appeared upon the bill providing funds for the fiscal year beginning July 1. Mr. McEntee advised the committee in response to a question by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]:

We work on that basis, Senator.

That is, whether one boy is needier than another. He proceeded—

Prior to the basic act of 1937 being passed we enrolled exclusively from families that were on relief. We ran into a condition that we were never able to remedy until after the act was passed, that we could not accept an orphan into the camp because he had no dependents. Congress had that in mind, I think, and was desirous of relieving the restriction. The act passed in 1937 carries the qualification which the Congress set up, that the applicant shall be unemployed and in need of employment.

Not that he has dependents or is on relief.

In administering the law Mr. McEntee advised the committee that if they had 100,000 more applicants than there were vacancies, they gave preference not to the man who was in need of employment but to the one who was in the greatest need at the time.

I know nothing about the regulation which has been issued, but it must be borne in mind that the Congress changed the law so as to eliminate the requirement as to a relief status which was referred to in the newspaper article the Senator read. So, under the law it is no longer required that a man be upon relief.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have not stated that it is necessary that his family be on relief, but he must require relief. The Senator does not mean to say, does he, that his understanding of the law is that any boy, if he is otherwise qualified, can be enrolled; that a millionaire's boy can be enrolled, for instance?

Mr. BYRNES. As a matter of fact, it occurred to me at the time the question was discussed before the committee that, whether the Congress intended it or not, what the Congress said was, "is out of a job and in need of a job." In endeavoring to administer the law those in charge have placed what I regard as the humane construction upon it. They determined that they would interpret the intention of Congress as wanting preference to be given to the man who is most in need of a job, and that has been the policy which has been followed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Under this new ruling they have now abandoned that policy and have adopted a broader policy and are now going out on the highways and byways seeking enrollees on any basis whatsoever.

Mr. BYRNES. Under the law, they would be restricted to enrolling men who were out of jobs and who were in need of employment. I certainly think they ought to follow the policy they have heretofore followed. Certainly where they have a surplus of applicants, as is generally the case, preference should be given to the man who is most in need of a job.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I may say that there is an over-all limit of 300,000. Suppose those in charge of the C. C. C. in the month of September enroll boys for 2 years on the basis of something else than need and fill up their rolls and then in December and January 100,000 boys, on the basis of need, want to get in, but they cannot be enrolled because the rolls are filled up with boys who were not taken in on the basis of need. There is that situation, but the situation which I want investigated and to which I am calling attention of the Senate is the interference, the disruption this new policy is causing to our efforts to enlist men in the Army. The C. C. C. boys are paid more. It costs the Government, if the Senator will bear with me for just a moment longer, more than a thousand dollars a year to keep a boy in a C. C. C. camp, I think it is money well spent when it is limited to boys who are in need, but when it is extended to every boy, I do not think that the Government can afford to spend a thousand dollars in that way. It does not cost any more to send the boy to a university.

Mr. BYRNES. The Congress could well consider whether it should amend the law and restrict it to those in need and not those in need of jobs.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I inquire what is the date of that new regulation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. August 14, 1940, is the date of the bulletin. I presume that is the date.

In reply to my inquiry, this is what Mr. McEntee tells me:

In accordance with your telephone request there is attached a copy of a memorandum dated August 14, 1940, which was sent to all Civilian Conservation Corps State selecting agents.

Mr. WILEY. It seems to me that there might be two implications drawn from the fact that the regulation originated in August, one political and the second that here we have demonstrated the fact that once a Government agency is established, it is difficult to get rid of the agency. Employees hate to let go.

The Senator should be given a vote of thanks for bringing this matter before the Senate. At this time, when the country needs men, the C. C. C., which is a fine organization in itself, should not be competing for men. We should have this matter investigated. So I say the Senator from Colorado is entitled to have the support of every Senator.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, of course the bureaus of public welfare are accepting applications for the C. C. C. so as to fill the quota contemplated by the law which is fixed at 300,000 enrollees. I do not wish to discuss the merits of the resolution at this time. As I stated a few moments ago, I believe that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor rather than to the Committee on Military affairs. The Committee on Education and Labor has considered all legislation pertaining to the Civilian Conservation Corps. Should the motion of the Senator from Colorado not prevail, it is my purpose to move that the resolution be referrred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I asked unanimous consent that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that was granted. If the Senator from Louisiana wants to reconsider that action, that is all right, but——

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I thought that was the pending motion; that is, that the resolution be referred to the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But my request has already been agreed to. If the Senator desires to reconsider the action, very well, but I want to oppose the action.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I inquire what the parliamentary situation is?

As I have just stated I understood that the pending question was on the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the matter, the Senator from Colorado asked unanimous consent to submit a resolution and have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and there was no objection.

Mr. ELLENDER. I was out of the Chamber and answering a telephone call when that happened.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If the Senator from Louisiana desires to enter a motion to reconsider the reference of the resolution, of course, he has that opportunity, although I shall oppose it, because if he will read my resolution he will find that I based it on the national-defense issue, and his committee has nothing whatever to do with military matters. That is a matter for the Military Affairs Committee to consider.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, according to the Senator's views, as expressed on the floor of the Senate, his resolution affects the administration of the law by the Director in charge of C. C. C. It also affects an interpretation of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. My resolution does not question the law in any way. It questions the action under the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, the parliamentary situation is that which has been stated by the Chair. The Senator from Colorado asked unanimous consent, out of order, to introduce a resolution and to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and there was no objection. That raises the question, however, just what connection the resolution has with the military program. The mere fact that, as the Senator from Colorado says, there is some competition between the C. C. C.'s efforts to get boys into the C. C. C. camps and the War Department's efforts to get the same boys into the Army would not necessarily confer jurisdiction on the Military Affairs Committee.

Personally, I do not care where the resolution goes. I am sure either committee would give it appropriate consideration; but it seems to me the mere fact that there may be, in the opinion of the Senator, some competition between these two Government agencies for possession of these boys might make it appropriate not to refer the resolution to either committee, but to refer it to some committee that is impartial as between them.

I very much doubt, however, if the competition is as serious as it may seem on the surface. There is not anything particularly military about the resolution which would automatically cause its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, that was my reason for rising to oppose the motion to send the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs. If action has already been taken by the Senate to that effect, I now move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was sent to the Military Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Colorado if he would be willing to let the resolution lie on the table for the time being, and give further consideration to the committee to which it may be referred.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be glad to have the resolution lie on the table without changing the parliamentary situation with regard to it; that is, it has been ordered referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I want it to come up under a motion to reconsider, if the reference is to be changed. With the understanding that unless some action of that kind is taken the resolution will go to the Committee on Military Affairs, I shall be glad to have it printed and lie on the table.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, how can a unanimous-consent agreement be reconsidered?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the result can be attained by moving to reconsider something that has been done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the resolution has been referred to the Military Affairs Committee, how can it lie on the table? I should like to know that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian says it cannot.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator may ask unanimous consent to have that done.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield the floor?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to make a very brief observation in my own time. The Senator has not finished?

Mr. ELLENDER. I have nothing further to say at the moment, except this, that after my motion to reconsider is considered, the resolution may lie on the table, if that is agreeable to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; that is not agreeable.

Mr. ELLENDER. Very well, then; as I understand the situation, my motion to reconsider will go over.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it seems to me that if unanimous consent has already been given that the resolution shall go to a particular committee, the appropriate motion would be to discharge that committee and refer the resolution to some other committee, either now or hereafter; but I am not interested in that phase of the matter, and I am not concerned about where the resolution goes. I think the resolution is timely, and that is why I rose to make an observation.

Personally, I have been very greatly disturbed to know what is the policy which is back of an increased enrollment in the C. C. C. camps at this time. I do not know that anybody ought to ask what policy is back of any move; but up to this time we may do so with some fair degree of immunity, at least.

I have been interested in this matter for some time. It will be recalled that many weeks ago I offered in the Senate a simple amendment to provide for voluntary military training in the C. C. C. camps. I was met by the most stubborn opposition—I may say concerted administrative opposition. I was very much at a loss to know why there should be so much opposition to training some 250,000 young men in the C. C. C. camps at an expense to the Government of $1,000 a year each, particularly when it was put on a voluntary basis.

Since that time much water has gone over the dam or under the bridge, as we may see fit to phrase it. We have passed what we referred to as a conscription bill, and a National Guard bill, and brought the units of the guard into the Federal service in peacetime, to be trained, or to be sent, or to be used in active service anywhere in the Western Hemisphere, in the Philippine Islands, or wherever somebody may want to send them; and we are about to do the same thing with the young men who are to be conscripted.

I voted for compulsory military training, but I did not do it under the craven fear that any other nation was attacking or would attack this country. I did it because of the settled conviction that the United States should have an adequate national defense. It needs it. It has long needed it. I do not know when it will have to be employed, but, whenever it becomes necessary to employ it we ought to have it. The amendment, however, to give voluntary military training in the C. C. C. camps was opposed and was defeated, whereupon I made some inquiry to this effect: Was it intended to create a haven against military service for anyone who was fortunate enough to get into the C. C. C. camps?

The members of the C. C. C. camps do not want any such policy as that. As a matter of fact, they wanted voluntary military training. As a matter of fact, they were willing to take military training, and desired to do so; but I have made that inquiry.

Recently the Senator from Colorado has very appropriately called the attention of the Senate and of the country to what is going on. I do not know why it is being done; but there has been and is in progress an effort to increase the number of young men in the C. C. C. camps. In some places I have seen it stated that they were bringing some of the middle class—if anybody wants to classify our citizens as top and middle and lower—or some of the "white collar" class into the C. C. C. camps. I had the idea when I voted for the C. C. C., and I have entertained it ever since, that it was to take care of the young men who were in need, who were unemployed, and who could not find employment, and to take care of their families as well, because a portion of the money—in fact, $25 of the $30 paid to a C. C. C. enrollee—went to the family, as I understood, rather than to the boy. That, however, is beside the question; but it is important to know what policy is involved. Is it intended to create a haven? Is it intended to invite young men into the C. C. C. camps and protect them from the draft bill which has been passed by both Houses and which is now in conference? I have asked that question, but I have been unable to obtain an answer, though some Senators have stated to me that, of course, that was not the policy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator understand that the draft bill which has been recently passed by both Houses, and is now in conference, exempts from registration or service the young men who are in the C. C. C. camps?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I do not.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not, either.

Mr. GEORGE. But I am coming to that point now, if the Senator will permit me. I do not so understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Neither do I.

Mr. GEORGE. Had it done so, I would not have voted for the law, and I would oppose it now; but if the policy of the administration is to do it, I dare say they will be exempted.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield at that point, I have never heard any suggestion, intimation, or hint from anyone in the administration that any such purpose was in the mind of anybody.

I will say to the Senator that, so far as I am personally concerned, I voted against his amendment. I did it for reasons which I then expressed, that I did not believe that the C. C. C. boys, who were taken very largely from relief families, ought to be the first to be trained.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not criticizing the Senator for his vote, nor am I complaining because the amendment was defeated, but by that illustration I am trying to emphasize the fact that I then desired to know what the policy was going to be with respect to the C. C. C. enrollees.

Mr. BARKLEY. I took my position on my own volition, without consulting anyone in the administration, in the War Department, or in any other executive department, or anyone else. I acted on my own conviction on the subject, which had no relationship to what anyone else thought about it. I felt, as I stated then, that it was a mistake to pick young men of the C. C. C., drawn from the poorer families, those on relief, and give them training first, because those trained first, if we have to get into war, will probably be the first to do the fighting. I felt that when we should undertake to train young men we should not pick out those as the first to train in any branch of the service, and my attitude on the subject was not understood to reflect the opinion of anyone else except myself, and I would disclaim that it did. Certainly I took my attitude without consulting anyone in any executive department in the United States, from the highest to the lowest.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. If I may break in at this point, if the Senator from Georgia does not object, there could not be any policy on the part of the Government to exempt the C. C. C. boys from registration and from service. In fact, it could not be done, because it would be directly contrary to the Selective Service Act itself. I think, however, that probably someone might assume that they would be exempt. There is in the Senate bill, and also in the House bill, provision giving the President the right to make rules and regulations governing classifications, and men can be deferred because of the classification, with regard to whether their work is more essential to the health of the Nation, to the agriculture of the Nation, or to some other activity. But that has nothing to do with exemptions from military training. It relates merely to deferment so far as classification is concerned.

It must be remembered that under any scheme of selective draft that is adopted we will not go below the age of 21 years. The enrollee in the C. C. C. camp may start, and generally does start, at the age of 17. His period of enrollment, if it continues as it has been in the past, is a 6-month period. So there would be eight 6-month periods of enrollment of the C. C. C. before the boys would even be required to register. Therefore that plan would not have anything to do with exemption from military training.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Conscription is not the only means of getting into the Army. The Senator from Utah knows full well that boys can enlist in the Army at 18 years of age.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He knows very well, because he served with me on the Committee on Military Affairs, that many thousands of boys are needed for the Regular Army, and that the Army is taking them at 18 years of age. The age limit in the C. C. C. is 17 to 23½ years.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I cannot see that there is any point in exempting the C. C. C. men from military service, if it is a voluntary arrangement. The boy in the C. C. C. elects to go into the C. C. C. If he elects to go into the Army, he cannot be in both places at the same time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But my point is that the authorities are carrying on a campaign to get enrollees into the C. C. C. camps, conflicting with efforts to get them into the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I cannot say as to that, because I do not know anything about such a campaign. I was merely trying to explain, if I could, that there could not be any exemption from registration given to C. C. C. boys because they were in the C. C. C. That is the point I wanted to make, if that has been bothering anyone.

Furthermore it should be remembered in regard to boys on relief, that during the consideration of the C. C. C. Act, which was renewed for another 2 years, the Senate and the House agreed to change the provision which made it necessary for the boys to be taken from families on relief. The wording was changed so as to provide that a boy must show that he is in need of employment, not that his family is in need of relief. The idea was that it was time to remove from the C. C. C. uniform and from the parents of boys in the C. C. C. camps the stigma which might be attached to service in the C. C. C. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the observations of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Kentucky. I am not complaining about what is in the law. There is nothing in the bills which have been passed authorizing the exemption or the deferment of the C. C. C. boys, nor do I know that that is the intent or purpose. But there are two legitimate grounds upon which the resolution of the Senator from Colorado should be looked into carefully, and not in a perfunctory manner. First, is it intended to create a haven in the C. C. C. camps for all men who have reached the military age fixed under the proposed compulsory military training law; and, second, is there necessity to burden the Government further by the expenditure of additional funds at this time through an increase in the C. C. C. camps?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is my understanding that the administration cannot go above the 300,000 figure which the law provides, no matter what sort of campaign may be undertaken to increase the number. I had not heard of any such campaign; it has not been carried on in my State, so far as I know. It may be that in some localities where the enrollment may fall short of what it is felt it should be, in order to fill up the full complement of the companies, or whatever the units are called in the different camps, efforts have been made to increase the enrollment. But I would doubt whether it was intended as competition with the Army in undertaking to get enrollees in the Army, and certainly, no matter what might be done in any community to get the complement filled, the total number of enrollees could not exceed, as I understand, the 300,000 provided for by the law.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President I wish I could be as certain as the Senator is about it; but I recall that we have voted a great many blank checks, and I do not know what may be undertaken in the expenditure of large sums of money for the spending of which Congress has given no specific direction. I know that it has been published in the newspapers—I do not know whether anyone else saw it or not, but I have seen it in the public prints—that it was intended practically to double the number of enrollees in the C. C. C. camps. It may have been a publication from some irresponsible, unauthorized source, I do not know, but I have been concerned about it, and I have wanted to know what was the purpose or policy back of it.

I know that at this time unemployment of able-bodied men in this country should be decreasing. Certainly it should be, in view of the vast expenditures of public funds which Congress has authorized for the national defense, as well as the general appropriations which Congress has been making. I also know—and I do not want to give any offense by this—that the Draft Act may be administered not according to the letter of the act. I know very well that it will be altogether possible to say that young men in the C. C. C. camps are now being trained in building bridges and doing Signal Corps work, that they are getting a form of noncombatant training which is essential to the Army and to the maintenance of the national defense, and that the authorities would rather that they be not interfered with. I do not know that that is the purpose, I do not charge that it is, but I say that I have been more than curious to know what is the purpose. I think Congress and the country have a right to know the policy back of any proposed increase in the C. C. C. camps at this time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to recall to the Senator's mind, if by chance it should have escaped him, the fact that the Senate increased the appropriation for the C. C. C. camps by $50,000,000 over and above the amount in the bill as it came from the House. That was done because of the statements which were made that great numbers of qualified young men were seeking to get into the C. C. C. camps, and without the added appropriations many camps must be closed, but now we find a campaign or a stimulus under way to bring into these camps men who heretofore were not regarded as qualified.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator's statement is correct. I am the last Member of the Senate who would object to the C. C. C. camps and the work being done in the C. C. C. camps. I have always believed it to be a very wise movement. I have no objection, of course, to the young men who enter C. C. C. camps not being disturbed, even by the draft law, if there is some sound basis for such a policy. I am simply anxious to know—and I believe we are entitled to know—what the policy is with respect to the C. C. C. camps. I know there will be many applications for entrance into the C. C. C. camps, if a camp is to be a city of refuge, a haven against the application of the provisions of the Military Training Act. I am sure of that.

Mr. President, I wish to make a further observation, and I almost apologize for doing so, because I am sure no one is especially interested in it. The second consideration I mentioned is one, however, which ought to concern the Congress, to wit: What justification is there for expending increased sums of Federal money to bring about an increase in the enrollment or to make possible the enrollment of a larger number of men in the C. C. C. camps? If I may be pardoned again, I wish to refer to the fact that some days ago we were advised, perhaps unofficially—we received the advice, nevertheless—that the appropriation for relief would be exhausted in the early part of next year, and that it would be necessary to increase by some considerable sum appropriations for general relief, and at about the same time it was suggested that there would be a great increase in the enrollment in the C. C. C. camps.

On the question of relief I have nothing whatever to say, because that must be determined when we reach it, and the relief appropriation should be made, as I hope it has been made, on the basis of the necessity for it, the desirability of meeting a call of that kind upon our organized society. But as for an increase in enrollments in the C. C. C. camps at this time, it is hardly conceivable that it is justified. It cannot be justified from the experience of anyone in this body who knows anything about what is going on in his home State or section or community. With few exceptions, by and large, there are available fewer young, active men in every community in the country, so far as I know, in the average agricultural industrial State at least, than at any time within the last several years. There is no necessity for increased expenditures for the C. C. C. The military conscription bill will call for the registration of everyone from 21 years of age up to 30 years of age, or 44 or 45 years of age, depending upon the language of the bill as it is finally approved. So there is afforded opportunity for honorable service in training under a law which I assumed, when I voted for it, would be equally and equitably and fairly applied to all classes of our fellow citizens.

Now, Mr. President, with a diminishing demand for relief, especially among the young men, men who are able to go into C. C. C. camps, with an increased demand outside of Government for the services of more young men, with an increased demand within the Government for the services of more young men within the military age limit, why this effort to increase the enrollment in the C. C. C. camps? Why this encouragement?

Mr. President, the Treasury of the United States is in not too good condition. No one wants to say anything about it because the facts have ceased to make any impression upon the public mind. But one day down the road we must meet the problem. We propose to increase the enrollees in the C. C. C. camps. We talk about increasing the relief expenditures of the Government. We propose to authorize another $500,000,000 to the Export-Import Bank for the purpose of lending money to countries in the Western Hemisphere without any intelligent idea of what is going to be done with the money. We are simply traveling along, spending more and more and more money.

We have recently acquired bases in various islands off our coast—in some instances a long distance off our coast—for the purpose of establishing air bases at least, and perhaps naval bases—I do not know. Everyone approved that action because it was regarded as a necessary step under modern conditions for the complete defense of the Nation. But we have had no treaty covering the project, and in the acquisition of those bases we have assumed, and will of necessity assume, some of the most momentous international obligations this country in all its long history has undertaken. Yet there is not to be any treaty or anything of the kind in respect to that matter. Now that it is suggested that we acquire these bases and spend the money necessary to prepare them, before we adjourn perhaps there will be a bill of $900,000,000 or a billion dollars for that purpose on top of other expenditures for military defense.

Then what are we going to do? Out of the goodness of our hearts, and because we want our South American and Central American neighbors—and our neighbor on the north—to be on perfectly good terms with us, and to aid willingly and actively in the defense of the Western Hemisphere against any power which may wish to invade it or to violate the Monroe Doctrine, we propose to let all the countries in the Western Hemisphere share in these bases and use them.

What does that mean? Mr. President, it means beyond all doubt one of the most complicated, one of the most far-reaching, one of the most important international engagements this Nation ever entered into; one fraught with more possibilities for good—and, if we say good, why not be candid in saying equal possibilities of evil, for the two go hand in hand. Yet has anyone said anything about a treaty? Under the fear that the United States is to be invaded, under the fear that our Nation is open to attack, under the constant appeal that we must forget reason and every single duty resting upon the Congress of the United States but one, we must not open our mouth about these things.

Mr. President, there is another day ahead of us, and the Democratic Party will be compelled to answer whether it is the party of economy, whether it believes in it, whether it wants to practice it, or whether it is the party of waste, waste upon a large scale, whether it is the party that wants to stay within the Constitution, to pay decent respect to the simplest democratic processes, and handle the most important businesses that ever can come before this Nation in the way they ought to be handled, or whether we should forget all these things because we believe we are in danger. Should they be forgotten? If we were in actual danger, Mr. President, is there any warrant for the assumption that the Congress of the United States would not grant every power and take every step necessary to the defense of the country, by acquisition of bases in the oceans on either side of the Western Hemisphere, and by invitation to other nations to participate in the use and occupancy of such bases when they were completed? Is there any doubt that Congress would grant such power if there were any reason why the power should be granted? We may know in a general way of the general reasons for a particular policy; but is there any sound or justifiable reason why we should not proceed to determine our policy in the way in which it should be determined?

Mr. President, there is not much difference between willful and wanton waste and outright corruption. They go hand in hand. They march down the same road. They end at the same destination.

If we may not make an inquiry about the expenditure of public money, and if we may not know what the policy is with regard to the expenditure of public money; but if, on the contrary, day after day we must be met with requests for increased appropriations of public funds to carry out purposes which may be very wise and very desirable, but about which we know nothing, although they may be very clear in the minds of many persons, we are the most wasteful Congress that ever was assembled in the whole history of the Republic.

Mr. President, we cannot throw away public money and save this Nation. It is not merely a question of becoming bankrupt. The question is far more important than that. We cannot, out of the Public Treasury, out of the pockets of the taxpayers, make vast grants of public money in the name of any cause and preserve the Nation. The waste of money is bad enough. Increasing taxes on our industries and on our individual citizens who pay taxes may be bad enough; but that is not the worst of it. The profligate use of public money leads to—aye, it is within itself—public corruption. The very heart of it is corruption; and this Republic cannot stand that kind of strain any more than can any other government.

What do we do? If an appeal comes to us for $500,000,000 or $1,000,000,000, we grant it. Hardly anyone questions it. Last week, on a bill appropriating more than $5,000,000,000, there was not a yea-and-nay vote. Although some Senators asked for it, they could not obtain it. I did not ask for it, because I knew how I would vote upon it. Does that indicate that the Congress is trying to protect not merely the money of the people but the political integrity and morality of the people of the United States?

We may go on increasing the C. C. C. camps at a time when, Heaven knows, they should be on the decrease; we may go on spending money for any purpose proposed, without very much inquiry into why the money is being spent, and with no knowledge of the underlying or basic reason or policy which is to be advanced; but we cannot indulge in such activity and leave a strong, free people to uphold free institutions.

In June of this year we passed a tax bill which added a cold billion dollars to the burden on the bent backs of our taxpayers—individuals, copartnerships, and corporations. We are now engaged in the preparation of another tax bill which, next year and the year following, will add another cold billion dollars to the burdens of the American taxpayer; and we are not balancing our account. If we were, we should have a different situation; but we are not balancing our account. We are simply taking a step in that direction for the purpose of putting our accounts in proper shape and setting our house in order. No one will object to higher taxes for the purpose of national defense. All our citizens join in saying that we should make that sacrifice. But, Mr. President, it is a mere matter of calculation that when the bill now in the hands of the Finance Committee finally becomes law, the effective tax rate on corporate incomes—and the rates on all others will be in proportion—will approach dangerously close to 33⅓ percent. Could we give any man a business, take 33⅓ percent from it, and ask him to operate it? If he were capable of running it, would he have it? Would he not know that the business was doomed?

The same thing applies to the aggregate industry of this country. When the cost of government, or civilization, becomes so great that business cannot struggle through as a free enterprise, we are approaching some other end; and we are dangerously near it whenever the total effective tax rate in the country approaches 33⅓ percent out of every dollar of earnings made by our people.

Should not that fact give us a little pause? Is not that a good reason why the resolution of the Senator from Colorado should go to a committee which will immediately ask, "Why this increased expenditure? What is the purpose and the policy back of it?" However commendable may be the particular bill now before the Senate calling for an additional appropriation of $500,000,000 to be loaned to the governments, banking institutions, or nationals of other countries in the Western Hemisphere; however good its purpose, is it not reasonable, with a tax rate of more than 30 percent upon the income taxpayers of this country, to ask, "Is it wise to do it? Is it advisable to do it? Is it necessary to do it? Will the good effects outweigh the possible evil effects?"

Mr. President, all my life I have been an optimist. I have never indulged in any pessimism so far as my country is concerned. I may be altogether mistaken in having the slightest misgivings as to whether everything will work out for good in the end; but I cannot for a moment see conditions in that light.

Some months ago the Secretary of Agriculture conceived the brilliant idea of a Western Hemisphere cartel. Back of that idea lay the philosophy of the Secretary of Agriculture; namely, the control of production of the farms. Back of that idea lay the long-time dream of the Secretary of Agriculture. Not only must we have regimentation of the farms in the United States, but there must be some sort of international agreement whereby the cotton-producing and wheat-producing countries of the world may all be brought into harmony and agree to restrict production, and therefore arrive at beneficial and profitable prices for wheat and corn. That purpose lay back of the cartel idea. The idea was not very favorably received. Now, we have a proposal for an increase in the capital of the Export-Import Bank, for perfectly laudable purposes so far as they are expressed on the face of the proposal.

I have listened patiently and attentively to ascertain what would be done with the $500,000,000. I do not know in detail, but I do know that, in part, it would be used to provide for the marketing of agricultural products grown in the Western Hemisphere outside the United States. That is a fair statement, Mr. President. It is the cartel idea; it is the cartel theory. I have already shown what is the philosophy back of the cartel theory. It is the regulation of production, the control of production by law. Perhaps it is a good philosophy, but, in order to make it entirely effective, of course, competitors in other parts of the world must likewise be controlled.

It may be asked, What has that to do with the Export-Import Bank capital? Mr. President, I will tell you what it has to do with it. When the Producers of wheat and cotton in Central America and in South America become our debtors they will be politely asked to consider the terms on which we extended the credit; they will be politely, but very effectively, persuaded that it is proper and wise for the South American and Central American countries to reduce their wheat production; to reduce their cotton production; to reduce their production of other commodities, and the same old theory back of the control of production in the United States will be put into practice. The difficulty is that we have not sufficient money to do likewise all around the earth. We may get by with it in this country, but it is a pretty heavy drain on us here even to supplement, out of the Government Treasury, the greatly reduced income of the hog raiser, the wheat raiser, the corn raiser, and the cotton raiser, to such a point as will permit the farmers to live and enjoy whatever meager prosperity they may have. But when we come to do the same thing all around the world—and, while we merely start out with one hemisphere, we can extend our operations—when we come to do the same thing outside the United States, then, Mr. President, it becomes too costly a program, as I think, to permit the United States Senate to conclude rightly that we can afford it.

Oh, I know this is a national-defense measure. I know very well that we must do this now because we must sustain our neighbors to the south and to the north, all for the common security of the Western Hemisphere. I know it is now based on the ground of national defense, Mr. President; but, after all, a philosophy that was not born of the exigencies of national defense in a military sense is back of this program.

If Argentina becomes a debtor of the United States, and has the prospect of an increased advance from the Federal Treasury, it may be assumed that Argentina will listen to the suggestions we may wish to make with reference to production and distribution of the products which the Argentine people make and which are, of course, competitive with ours in whole or in part.

Mr. President, I do not believe in the doctrine, the philosophy, the principle back of the theory that by reducing the production of wealth thereby wealth is increased. I myself have never been so confused, I hope, as to assume that greater wealth can be produced or that a nation can become wealthy by the restriction of the production of wealth. I hope, Mr. President, at least, that I have not become so confused as to think of the mere money price which for a day or a year or a season may be received for a product as representing value.

Mr. President, true value is in the service rendered and in the commodities produced by labor, the result of the combination of the hand, the head, the purpose, and the heart of men who are making things. The more labor profitably employed, the more employment and service we have in this Nation, the greater the wealth we are producing.

The answer that, somehow or other, the products of labor have not been equitably or equally distributed, and, therefore, we must restrict the production of wealth in order to advance the price of those things that are below the average price, is the poorest answer that any intelligent government, in my opinion, ever made to a pressing problem. It is simply no answer at all; it is merely a temporary expedient; and it does not seek a real remedy.

Mr. President, I have great regret in not voting for this particular bill. I have the utmost respect for Mr. Jones, who has been the managing head, at least, to the Export-Import Bank; I have the utmost respect for those who in other departments of the Government have been associated with him; I have the utmost confidence in his judgment; but, Mr. President, I think I know the ultimate purpose back of this bill, in part, at least, and I think that I appreciate the utter futility of a movement or purpose of that kind. I think also, Mr. President, that I appreciate the fact that, day by day, as we pile up debt upon the Public Treasury, as we assume greater and greater financial risks, we are approaching a point where the situation will be all too evident to all of us who dare take the time to look or to reason or to listen.

I think also, Mr. President, that the very policy itself is one fraught with the greatest danger. The extension of credit to our South American friends will invite a demand for greater credit, and when the time comes when we must either refuse or reduce the credit, we will find ourselves in a much more unhappy position than we would occupy if we never embarked upon a program of this kind.

To extend our own commerce, yes. If that were the purpose of the bill, I would gladly support it. I would go further than most men in this Chamber to extend our own commerce, whether of manufactured or raw products. I would certainly go as far as anyone. I would do more than that, Mr. President; I would even be willing, if necessary, to subsidize travel in Central America and South America and make it possible for a class of our citizens to visit those countries and to become acquainted with them, to make friends with our neighbors to the south.

The money spent by the tourist trade in Central America and South America would furnish the dollar basis for credit in the United States and would give to Central American and South American peoples the purchasing power for more and more of our products.

Anything, Mr. President, that has for its real objective the expansion of our own commerce and trade may be justified, if we are able to do it, but to undertake a program of this kind, that has back of it the philosophy which I have feebly tried to express, is a venture to which I do not wish to be a party. I would rather go back to the people of my State and say that I declined to make possible the use of $500,000,000 out of our Treasury in Central America and South America, even if it shall become necessary ultimately to assist in the military defense of Central America and South America.

It is most unfortunate, Mr. President, as I think, that a measure of this kind and other similar measures cannot be considered on their true basis of value, that is to say, upon the merits of the question, aside from the fear and apprehension, real or imaginary, that we are about to be engulfed in military campaigns to defend the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to refer to the discussion which took place a while ago as a result of the submission of the resolution of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

I thought I knew then, and I so expressed myself, that there could not possibly be any increase in the enrollment of young men in the C. C. C. camps beyond the 300,000 authorized by the Congress. In order that I might ascertain and give the Senate the benefit of the information growing out of this discussion, I called up over the telephone Mr. McEntee, who is the head of the Civilian Conservation Corps, and inquired of him about the program. I, of course, advised him that the statement had been made on the floor of the Senate that a campaign was on to increase the enrollees in the Civilian Conservation Camps all over the country and, of course, that the suggestion had been made that it was in competition with the War Department, which is trying to enlist men in the Army, and that the inquiry had also been made whether the C. C. C. camps were to operate as a haven against enrollment in the Army or against the administration of the draft insofar as they are concerned, and I learned that these are the facts:

It is true that not only do the C. C. C. authorities not intend to increase the enrollments above the 300,000 authorized by law, but they do not consider that they have any authority to do it even if they wanted to do it, and that the only authority for any increase in the number above 300,000 would be an amendment of the law on the part of Congress. They do try to keep the number up to 300,000. They have two enrollment periods—one in July and one in January—at which times most of the men go out because of the expiration of their 6 months' service in the C. C. C. camps, but there are some who go out between January and July. In order that the C. C. C. authorities may keep the enrollment up as nearly as possible to 300,000, they have an intermediate enrollment period in October and in April.

The C. C. C. authorities now have in the various camps 285,000 men. They desire to take in another 15,000 in October, so that the entire enrollment will be the 300,000 authorized by law; and all they are attempting now to do is to bring to the attention of eligible young men in various parts of the country the fact that there are these vacancies in the present camps, amounting to 15,000. If they get the 15,000, that will carry them until January, when one of their regular enrollment periods will approach; and, because there will be more enrollees whose 6 months' service have expired, the C. C. C. authorities will, of course, attempt to refill the various camps with eligible men, so as to keep the enrollment as near the numerical strength of 300,000 as is possible; and that is what Mr. McEntee says they are doing, in order to fill the gaps.

In addition to that not only are the C. C. C. camps not a haven of refuge, but already, assuming that the draft law will become effective soon, the C. C. C. authorities have given to the War Department information as to the location of all the camps in the United States, as to the numerical strength in those camps, and have set up machinery to cooperate with the War Department in the registration of all those eligible for registration between the age of 21 and whatever the maximum age may be, whether 31 or 45 or some figure between the two; and not only are they attempting to set up machinery to cooperate with the War Department for registration but they are also attempting to set up machinery for the administration of the act under the jurisdiction of the local boards which are to have charge of the selection of those eligible for service in the various training camps of the War Department where they are to train for the period of 12 months.

I feel that the Senate as a whole and particularly the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and other Senators who have engaged in the discussion will be glad to know that there is nothing unusual about this program. It has been going on during the entire 8 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The unusual part about the program is that on August 14 the Director changed the interpretation of the law relative to eligibility of the enrollees. That is what we wanted to inquire about.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; according to my interpretation of the law, there is nothing strange about that. The Director was giving an interpretation, based upon the act of Congress, that no longer was eligibility determined by the fact that the family was on relief, but it was determined by the fact that the enrollee himself needed work, or was out of employment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Oh, no; the law of 1937 changed the eligibility as to the family, but by interpretation on August 14 the Director of the C. C. C. camps completely changed the understanding as to the enrollees who are eligible. It is not on the basis of need at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. He did not change his interpretation so as to violate the law, or to go outside the terms of the law, as I understand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That may be.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is nothing in the law as it is now written which indicates how impecunious the family must be in order to make one eligible for enrollment in the C. C. C. camps.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am quite sure the Members of the Senate, when they passed the act in 1937, never for a moment thought that all the boys in the United States, regardless of their financial standing, could enter the C. C. C. camps. I am sure they did not, but under the interpretation of the law as stated by the Director every boy in the United States, regardless of whether his parents are millionaires or in what financial condition they are, may become an enrollee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, all the boys in the United States within the ages of 18 to 25 could not get into the C. C. C. camps because they can take only 300,000, but if a young man whose family is not on relief is out of work and cannot secure employment, I presume both Congress and the Director took it for granted that that boy was properly eligible to be taken into a camp and given the sort of training that the C. C. C. enrollees obtain. I do not know how many of those boys would be taken in. I have no figures as to the proportion. I am satisfied that it would be a very small proportion because, as a rule, unless some young fellow desires the particular type of training that he can get, physical and otherwise, in the C. C. C. camps, I think he would have no particular incentive to go in simply because of the pecuniary situation, if he did not need employment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The law of 1937 changed the original law from the need of the boy's family to the need of the individual boy. Now the Director of the C. C. C. camps has changed it so that the matter of financial need does not any longer enter into the question at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not seen the new regulations, and I am not in a position to discuss them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am sorry I have not the regulations here. I let the Official Reporter take them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have given the Senator the information that was conveyed to me by Mr. McEntee, and I am satisfied the Senate will be glad to give it the consideration to which it is entitled.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. So far as I am concerned, I am very happy, indeed, to have any information, because I have been anxious to know the facts. I think the failure to indicate the real policy and purpose of an increase at this time, coupled with the speculation which arises out of that fact, might reasonably be calculated to do one of the very best services we have established serious injury. I am very happy to have the information.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we all realize that we cannot as a rule obtain full information as to the reasons why anything is done in the executive branch, or even in the legislative branch, by more or less casual notice we take of newspaper comments or newspaper articles, which very rarely can, in the very nature of things, give the background for action that is contemplated or is taken.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say about that subject. I do not desire to consume the time of the Senate discussing the bill now before us. However, I do wish to take occasion to make one statement. With much the Senator from Georgia has said I find myself in great sympathy. I think it would have been desirable on the part of all of us if we could have avoided the necessity of doing some of the things we have been required to do, not by any pressure from individuals or agencies, but because of the pressure of events over which we had no control, and over which we now have no control. It would be a wonderful thing if we could take ourselves back even beyond 1929, if we could wipe out the last 10 years, so that there would be no collapse of our financial institutions, so that there would be no collapse of our industrial fabric, so that there would be no unemployment in the United States. It would be a wonderful thing if we could have slept through all these years and not have experienced the things with which we have come in contact. But that was not to be. We had to live through them, and we are compelled to live through conditions which now beset us—conditions which we did not produce, conditions over which we had no control, and over which we have no control now, because we are the victims of world events and world conditions, and we must take note of that fact, and we cannot escape it.

One of the reasons why Great Britain is now in her dire distress and extremity is that the people of Great Britain were more anxious to balance their budget and to keep down taxes than they were to prepare for what is now happening, with England and the greatest city in the world as the object of attack. I do not draw any irrevocable, inflexible comparison between the situation of Great Britain, which is only 20 miles across the English Channel from the continent of Europe, and the situation of the United States, which is 3,000 miles from that scene. But I dare say that if the people of Great Britain could call back 4 years, when a few voices crying out in the wilderness, were trying to persuade the people of Great Britain that they were in danger, the actions of the British people and the British Government would have been entirely different from what they were and are, and the results of their actions would be entirely different from what is happening today, and we would not now be harrowed by the daily news that helpless men, women, and children, and the property of men, women, and children, which has been in existence in some instances for centuries, are being ruthlessly destroyed because England was not ready for the emergency although it has always seemed to me that any sensible man or any sensible people with their eyes open should have seen what was on its way.

I wish we could balance our Budget. I have been, frankly, one of those who have voted for appropriations which kept it out of balance, much as I desire a balanced Budget, much as I regret to have to vote in favor of increased taxes. As the Senator from Georgia knows, we have been working most of this session, at one time or another, on some form of increased taxes, and I agree with his calculation that a bill we have heretofore passed, which will raise a billion, and ultimately the bill we are now considering, and which we hope to take up in the Senate before the end of this week, will probably raise another billion by the end of this year. At least, I hope it will.

It would have been a wonderful thing if we had not had to do this, but regardless of our regret and our remorse, regardless of what we might have done in years gone by that was different from what we did, we are faced with a situation which we cannot ignore, and I think we are bound to conclude, as desirable as balanced budgets and low tax rates are, that there are some things more valuable; there are intangible values, imponderables, incalculable equations in the history of every nation, which cannot be measured by any yardstick of dollars and cents.

I think we are now in the midst of one of those situations. We could very well sit by and say, "What is the use? We are safe. It is true that all of Europe is being dominated by a certain school of thought which has been able to carry itself forward by military prowess and genius and superiority. It is true that there is still a little island over there which is putting up a game fight, and may win. But all that matters little to us. We are safe; our institutions are beyond approach and beyond danger. Our economic life is subject to no encroachments from any source in the world."

We might still sit under our own vine and fig tree, we might still enclose ourselves within our own shells and not move out or recognize conditions. But we cannot do that, we have not done it, and we are not doing it. The American people are not willing to do it; they are not willing to have their representatives here do it. It is because the American people have not been willing for us to do that that we have voted $15,000,000,000 for our national defense.

I am convinced from my contact with those whom I represent in this Chamber in part, that the American people are ahead of us in their desire to protect our institutions. I do not mean that the men in Kentucky, Georgia, Pennsylvania, New York, Delaware, and Colorado are more interested than we are, more patriotic than we are, but I think probably we have been a little more cautious, we have been a little more tender-footed in our approach to this problem than the great masses of the people have been as they have noticed what has been taking place in the world.

We have gone pretty rapidly when we did take hold of the power; we have gone much further in the past few months than any of us anticipated we would have to go or would go; but we have been driven by the force of events; we have been driven by an avalanche of world conditions which we did not produce and which we could not prevent in spite of all our efforts.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, with reference to the bill now before us, I suppose it would be impossible to write into the law the details of every sort of loan which might be made and every contract which might be entered into between the Export-Import Bank and those who would become the debtors of the Export-Import Bank. But that is no more true in regard to these loans than it has been with regard to all the loans made by the Export-Import Bank, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and all the other lending agencies which we have set up.

We do know that, as a matter of fact, South America and Central America should be our natural customers, they should be a part of our economic life no less than they should be a part of our hemispheric and defensive life, as we have in recent months emphasized. But we do know that, although South America and Central America should have been our customers all the time, they have not been to as large an extent as they would have been or might have been if our Nation and our people and our financiers had been in a position or had been willing to grant to them the same sort of credit which has been granted to them on the part of other nations.

Reference has been made to the fact that some of these countries owe us money which they have not paid; and that is true. They owe us that money very largely because in the boom days American sellers and agents of bond houses and banks went out and persuaded the American people to invest their money in South American and Central American securities. They did the same thing with respect to domestic securities, and I doubt very much whether what the people have lost or may lose on account of what we have loaned to Central America and South America will be half as much as they have lost or will lose because they were persuaded to buy domestic securities on the assurance of the same agencies which sold them the South American and Central American securities. The Export-Import Bank has been making loans to some of the South American and Central American countries, and there exists today an amount not exceeding $20,000 of overdue paper owing to the Export-Import Bank on account of loans heretofore made.

The trade between South America and Central America and other countries has been disrupted because of the war. Those countries have not been able to sell their products to European nations, and there are millions upon millions of dollars, if not hundereds of millions of dollars worth of their products which are now piled up, without a market for their sale. It happens that in many cases the markets of the world, which have been receiving products of South America and Central America, have likewise been receiving products of the United States, and when the war shall end, no matter how, every nation with a surplus that cannot be disposed of domestically including the United States, will be looking for markets in all parts of the world.

The prices obtained in foreign markets may depend to some extent, and probably will, upon the degree of salability of these surplus products, and upon the ability of a particular nation to compete with other nations in the world market in order that it may dispose of its surplus, or there may result such a dumping of products on the world market as to drive down the prices not only of products of South American and Central American nations, but of products of the United States as well.

Mr. Jones, in his testimony before the committee, having in view that possibility, made this statement:

> We might in some instances lend for the carrying and orderly marketing of their surplus agricultural products in order to avoid the necessity of selling at sacrifice prices.

If the nations of South America and Central America are required to sell their surplus products at sacrifice prices because they cannot carry them and feed them to the market as the market will absorb them, of course our products will suffer a like decline in price, and therefore we will sell our products in the world market in competition with the Central American and South American countries, and they will be selling in the world market in competition with us, and it is, of course, impossible to imagine that we can sell our products in the world market at a price higher than the South American and Central American nations can sell theirs.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator think that we could, at a discount of $500,000,000, and a good deal less, sell our products in the world market at a fair price?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think so, and if the Senator has in mind the possibility of appropriating to American producers $250,000,000 or $500,000,000, instead of lending it to South American and Central American countries, I doubt very much if he would vote for such a bill if it were presented here in behalf of the American producer.

Mr. TAFT. I think that on the whole I approve the theory of export subsidies, and for an export subsidy infinitely lower than $500,000,000 I believe we could accomplish twice as much as we could by trying to hold up the world price of commodities coming from 20 different countries in South America and Central America.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I assume the Senator believes that, but sincere as he is in his statement, I should have to have additional evidence before I would be convinced of the accuracy of his theory.

I quote further from Mr. Jones:

> Some South American products, particularly wheat, corn, meat, and cotton, come in direct competition in world markets with products of the United States, and it is in the interest of American producers that cutthroat competition be avoided where possible.

That is what I have been talking about.

> Temporary aid in carrying such surplus will contribute to orderly marketing and lessen the necessity of barter arrangements which, once undertaken, are difficult to stop.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator illustrate how that is to be accomplished? I am interested in the statement that Mr. Jones made as to how cutthroat competition is to be avoided by the loans. I am interested in a little further explanation, if the Senator can give it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I read from page 1 of the bill:

> (1) To assist in the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economies, and the orderly marketing of the products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere by supplying funds—

And so forth. I assume under that language and it is undoubtedly so contemplated, that loans will be made in South and Central America to enable those who are holding products to hold them still longer in order that they may not be required to dump them on the world market below a fair price.

Mr. ADAMS. Would that have the effect of increasing further production?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so.

Mr. ADAMS. We saw in the United States when we took off the market certain products that we stimulated further production. I believe we should be a little careful not to aggravate the disease.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I agree with the Senator that we must be careful, and the Export-Import Bank must be judicious in making the loans. But if an individual or a group of individuals have on hand surplus commodities which have been already produced and awaiting some orderly market, I doubt very much whether the lending of money to them in order that they may carry the commodities still further, without selling them at cutthroat prices, will induce them to produce more of the same products and pile up additional surpluses.

Mr. ADAMS. Unless the effect of the loan was to keep prices up at an artificial level. If the prices were to be kept at an artificial level, production would be stimulated.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it is intended to keep prices at an artificial level, but to keep them at a normal level instead of allowing them to go down so abnormally and artificially low as to bring about demoralization of markets all over the world in which our people are economically and financially interested.

Mr. ADAMS. I am interested in the mechanics of how it will be worked out.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; the mechanics will have to be worked out by the Export-Import Bank itself.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] said that prudence and care was necessary in management of this matter, and I agree with him entirely; but the question I want to ask the Senator is this: Is it not true that Jesse Jones is one of the most careful, one of the most prudent, one of the most level-headed businessmen we have ever had in charge of any department? Is that not well known to everyone? Has not the record of the management of the bank shown that Mr. Jones is a prudent and careful businessman, and that losses have been exceedingly few and far between?

Mr. BARKLEY. The tribute paid Mr. Jones by the Senator from Tennessee is well deserved, as we all know. Regardless of anyone's views as to the wisdom of the proposed legislation, I think we all have confidence in the business acumen and ability and judgment of Mr. Jones, who has been head of all these lending agencies.

Mr. ADAMS. I thoroughly agree in the encomium on Mr. Jones, but are we in such a situation that the whole economic program depends on the continuance of Mr. Jones in his present position? If the program is sound, it should not depend on one man.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not contend that Mr. Jones is the only man in the United States who could operate this lending agency, nor do I think he would contend that he is the only man who could do so, but he is the man who has done it, and he has done such a good job that it is really difficult for us to visualize the possibility of finding another man who has done as good a job as Mr. Jones has already done.

Mr. ADAMS. We are spreading him out rather thin, are we not, by giving him another job?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would take more than the secretaryship of the Department of Commerce to thin him out very much.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I concur in the compliment paid to Mr. Jones; but is not this the first time we have authorized Mr. Jones to make loans without adequate security, and, by eliminating the requirement for adequate security, are we not virtually instructing Mr. Jones that under the policies which we are now launching we have a "political" purpose—I use the expression in respect to our international relations—rather than the purpose of sustaining the collection record which has heretofore been so excellent?

Mr. BARKLEY. The question of adequate security which, in one of our laws amending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, was described to be such security as to be reasonably expected to produce repayment, may not apply in all the loans that are to be made under the bill. We have gradually been getting away from the rigid provisions contained in the original law, which required adequate securities of almost the same nature as the securities required by a commercial bank.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. There is absolutely no change, so far as the requirements with respect to security are concerned,

From the time we first established the Export-Import Bank, there has been no definite requirement with respect to any particular kind of security. So we are not changing that at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is nothing in the bill which changes the policy.

Mr. WAGNER. We are not changing the policy at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. All the bill does is to increase by $500,000,000 the lending ability of the Export-Import Bank for the purposes stated in the bill; but it does not in any way change the provisions with respect to security.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will be Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Another question has been bothering me in connection with the pending measure. Is there anything in the provisions of the bill as drafted which would prevent the use of the money loaned to enable the countries to which it is loaned to market their surplus production in competition with our own products? May they not sell them anywhere in the world?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is nothing in the bill which attempts to prevent other countries from selling their products wherever they can; but there is a specific intention and a direct suggestion in the bill that money may be loaned in order to enable countries to avoid the necessity for selling their products in an unfavorable market, and therefore affecting our economy as well as that of the entire world.

Mr. GILLETTE. At the same time, there is nothing to prevent their use of the money to finance the marketing of their surpluses in competition with our products.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the purpose for which each loan is made will have to be worked out within the terms of the law, between the country, or agency, or national and the Export-Import Bank; but I do not suppose there is anything in the bill which specifically refers to that situation. However, it is inconceivable to me that the Export-Import Bank would make loans to any South or Central American country primarily and exclusively in order to enable that country to market its products in competition with ours.

Mr. GILLETTE. However, that might be the effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would all depend on the contract.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. A short time ago the Senator read the testimony of Mr. Jones, in which he emphasized that this authority would protect American agriculture against the terrific drop in the foreign market because of surpluses existing in other countries. So, whatever contract is made will protect American agriculture. Therefore, provision would have to be made for the proper protection of our agriculture.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I will say to the Senator from New York that with respect to security, we are absolutely dependent upon the provisions of the request which Mr. Jones submits for the approval of the President.

Mr. WAGNER. As stated by Mr. Jones, it is clearly the intent of the legislation to protect American agriculture.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am sure of that.

Mr. WAGNER. We must trust the administration to somebody.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not desire to take further time, but I wish to call attention briefly to the fact that during the first 10 months of the war our exports to South and Central America constituted one-fifth of our entire exports to all the nations of the world. Our gain in those 10 months, compared to the corresponding 10 months of 1938 and 1939, amounted to 43 percent.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator realize that that circumstance arises from the fact that European supplies have been cut off?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I realize that.

Mr. TAFT. The same thing occurred in the World War; and it is the inevitable result, which will last as long as the European supply is cut off.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is true; but what I am contending is that we ought not to lose that trade when the war is over. We ought to be in a position to keep it. We ought to be in a position to send our products into Latin American countries after the war is over, and not simply depend upon their inability to buy elsewhere because of the war.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator realize that unless we buy South American products we cannot hope to sell our products to South America? If we buy from South America only 35 percent of our imports, in the long run we cannot expect South American countries to buy from us more than about 35 percent of their imports, no matter what means we take to promote our exports.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize, of course, that we cannot continue to sell to other nations without buying from them. Not only is that true of South and Central America, but it is true of every market. We cannot continue to sell to them and not buy anything from them; but we can buy from them things which we do not ourselves produce, or which we do not produce in sufficient quantities to meet our needs.

No doubt it will be a surprise to many Senators to realize what an undeveloped market there is in South American countries for American products. The State of Pennsylvania alone has almost as much mileage of good roads as has the whole of South America. There is a market for road materials and machinery. The State of Pennsylvania has three times as many automobiles registered as has all South America. Although Brazil alone is larger than the United States, there are more automobiles registered in the State of Pennsylvania than in all South America. There is a wide market for the products of American industry.

Last year one store in the city of New York held a special sale and sold one-fourth as many radios as are sold in all South America in an entire year. That is not a bad prospect for a market. There are only two and a half to three million radios among the 120,000,000 people of South America, while we have 40,000,000 in the United States.

I mention those as only a few of the things which South American countries do not produce, which they will buy from us in return for things which we do not produce, such as rubber, tin, certain types of iron ore, and things which we do not produce in quantities sufficient for our own use.

I have been reliably informed that the German Reich, anticipating that the war would be over in time for it to carry out its contracts, had made contracts with various South American countries to begin the delivery of certain German products on the 15th day of September, which is next Sunday. I think the resistance of the British Empire has brought about some miscalculation in Germany's ability to deliver such products. But the point is, are we, the largest, richest, and most populous country in the Western Hemisphere, while we are trying to bring about Western Hemisphere solidarity which will protect our interests and those of our neighbors, willing to sit by and permit this infiltration and disintegration to go on under our very noses without taking steps to counteract it or taking advantage of the situation for our mutual benefit in the northern and southern continents?

I have been reliably informed that the Hitler government has made advances toward certain South American nations by holding out the prospect that when the war is over Germany will have innumerable pieces of military equipment of various kinds which she will not need, and that she has even offered to give to some of those countries as much as $20,000,000 worth of military equipment, which she could very well do.

That raises the question whether or not, in the interest of Western Hemisphere solidarity, the cooperation which has been brought about in the conferences at Montevideo, Habana, and Lima—conferences which have been fostered by our great Secretary of State, Mr. Hull—has brought about a better understanding among the Western Hemisphere nations and has dissipated the suspicion which has existed for such a long time, that all we are interested in is taking something from them and giving them nothing in return. In my opinion a wonderful opportunity is presented to make good on our professions of friendship and our willingness to cooperate and help coordinate our economic and industrial life, having in mind at the same time the political repercussions which we cannot ignore in these various relationships.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I understand that the Senator desires to increase American trade, and he says that the good-neighbor policy has done so. Is the Senator aware of the fact that from 1917 to 1930, inclusive, our trade with South America was bigger every year than it was in 1939? Is the Senator aware of the fact that the ordinary methods, through assistance to private enterprise, have invariably succeeded better than Government assistance in the promotion of Government loans in South America?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not concede the accuracy of the Senator's last statement; but even with the increase in our exports to South America during that period, they were infinitely lower than they might have been if there had been the same degree of cooperation between our country and those countries as has been indulged in by other countries which went in and got the lion's share of the market.

Mr. President, I have no desire to take further time. For the reasons which I have stated, and many others which might be assigned, I am in favor of the bill and opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, and hope it will be rejected.

INVESTIGATION OF ENROLLMENT METHODS, CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I did not wish to interrupt the Senator from Kentucky while he was speaking with reference to the Civilian Conservation Corps matter. I shall take only 3 or 4 minutes at this time to attempt to keep the record straight with reference to that appropriation.

To those Members of the Senate who believe that boys should not be recruited at this time for the Civilian Conservation Corps, I wish to say that the President of the United States asked for $50,000,000 less than the Congress appropriated for that corps.

When the appropriation bill went to the House, it was pointed out that it meant a reduction of 273 camps. From the information we received in the Appropriations Committee, persons in the communities where the camps were located who were interested in the continuance of the camps immediately brought pressure to bear upon their Congressmen. The estimate was for $230,000,000. The House Committee reported the bill at $230,000,000, and on the floor of the House the appropriation was increased to $280,000,000. The House added to the bill $50,000,000 more than the President had asked for. The Senate Appropriations Committee reduced the appropriation by $25,000,000. When the bill came to the floor of the Senate, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] led the fight for an increase; and the Senate, by a vote of 43 to 14, restored the full amount which had been appropriated by the House, which was $50,000,000 more than the President of the United States had estimated for this particular service.

We may as well be frank with each other. Whenever an attempt was made to reduce the amount of money, a demand for the full amount came from the communities where the camps had been established throughout the country. From the different communities where soil-conservation projects and forestry projects were being maintained by the Civilian Conservation Corps there came the demand for the full amount, and Congress provided the funds which brought about the recruiting of the organization up to the number of men referred to in the discussion here today. If we complain of anybody, we must complain of ourselves if anyone thinks too many boys are being recruited.

The House added $50,000 to the bill, which the Senate Appropriation Committee reduced to $25,000,000. The Senate decided that they would be just as fair as the House had been, and added the other $25,000,000, thus restoring the $50,000,000 which had not been estimated for by the President.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. Is not this the stiuation? There has been no criticism about the C. C. C. camps as far as they have operated. They have done a great job; but the time when that money was voted and when they considered the number that would come into the camps was before the crisis developed, and before there was any thought of conscription, or any thought of calling for an increased number of volunteers. Is it not also true that when we were talking about the preparedness program we said that while we were voting all this money, we expected that there would be savings in other lines, such as the C. C. C., the W. P. A., and other activities of the Government?

Mr. BYRNES. There is not any doubt that when the President submitted his Budget he used substantially the language which is now used by the Senator from Wisconsin. He based his action on the ground that inasmuch as he was asking for an increase in the Army and Navy he would ask for a reduction of $50,000,000 in this particular appropriation. The Congress said, "Mr. President, we heard you about the increase for Army and Navy; we will grant that, but we will grant this, too;" and we added the $50,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have just received a letter from Mr. McEntee enclosing a memorandum which he thinks is the memorandum which the Senator from Colorado referred as a campaign for the enlistment of C. C. C. enrollees. I should like to read Mr. McEntee's letter. It is only two paragraphs.

Mr. BYRNES. I will yield the floor, and the Senator may do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. The letter is as follows:

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, D. C., September 10, 1940.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: This is the memorandum which I believe Senator JOHNSON is talking about. It was forwarded to all Civilian Conservation Corps State selecting agencies for their guidance.

The corps never has carried on a recruiting campaign. We are not carrying on one now. There are always more applicants available than there are vacancies.

Sincerely yours,

J. J. MCENTEE, Director.

I should like to have printed, in connection with the letter, the first paragraph of the act establishing the Civilian Conservation Corps, approved June 28, 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established the Civilian Conservation Corps, hereinafter called the Corps, for the purpose of providing employment, as well as vocational training, for youthful citizens of the United States who are unemployed and in need of employment, and to a limited extent as hereinafter set out, for war veterans and Indians, through the performance of useful public work in connection with the conservation and development of the natural resources of the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions: Provided, That at least 10 hours each week may be devoted to general educational and vocational training: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall continue for the period of 3 years after July 1, 1937, and no longer.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, awhile ago, when I rose to ask that the resolution of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, I had in mind not a delay in the investigation, if it is necessary, but that if any committee should consider the resolution, certainly the committee which helped to draft the law, and to which the original bill was referred, should have jurisdiction.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has just referred to the memorandum which forms the basis of the complaint of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON]. I call the particular attention of Senators to the fact that there is very little difference between the so-called new ruling made by Mr. McEntee and that which existed just prior to that time.

It will be recalled that when the C. C. C. law was first enacted, the only enrollees eligible were those young men on relief and war veterans. In 1937 the law was amended so that enrollees did not have to be on relief. The law provides that—

* * * C. C. C. is established * * * for youthful citizens * * * who are unemployed and in need of employment.

Several regulations were made following the passage of the 1937 law. One provided for the enrollment of young men from families who were in need but whose names were not on the relief rolls. Later another modification of the existing regulations was made so as to permit the enrollment of young men from families whose incomes were below the normal standard of living in the community of the applicant's family.

Now let us examine the new ruling that forms the basis of this discussion. I quote from the memorandum of Director McEntee:

For the purpose of C. C. C. selection the phrase "Unemployed and in need of employment" shall be understood to cover unmarried junior applicants otherwise qualified by age, citizenship, fitness, and character; not in attendance at school, nor on temporary vacation therefrom; not possessing other regular or full-time employment, and who need the employment, the job training, the educational, and other opportunities available in the Civilian Conservation Corps.

In the same memorandum appears a definition of "need," and I read from the memorandum:

The word "need" used in this connection has its customary meaning of inability to provide such opportunities out of his own or his family's resources.

Mr. President, that language should make it plain that if the parents of an applicant are able to give their son the same facilities he can obtain at the C. C. C. camp, he will not be eligible. How can it be argued that the doors are thrown wide open for all applicants, no matter how wealthy their parents may be? Permit me to further point out that applicants must show their own inability, out of their own resources, to obtain such facilities in order to make themselves eligible.

Again permit me to point out that I just spoke to Mr. McEntee, and he stated that it is the policy of his department, that where there were two or more applicants, to take in the enrollee whose family was most in need. Therefore, as I have just pointed out, I can see little difference in the new ruling from what existed prior thereto.

Mr. President, further debate is not necessary. The memorandum of Director McEntee is clear and concise and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, D. C., August 14, 1940.

From: J. J. McEntee.
To: W. Frank Persons.

It is important that the meaning and scope of the change in Standards of Eligibility and Selection for Junior Enrollees, as announced on July 17, 1940, should be fully understood and uniformly applied during the October and later enrollments.

I appreciate the fact that, with very few exceptions, this change in regulations has been accurately publicized by the State and local selecting agents. It remains to make certain that the public shall become fully and accurately informed. This objective will require careful and continuous attention on the part of each of our State and local representatives.

Prior to the recent change in eligibility standards, enrollment in the junior contingent of the corps was limited to young men whose families were on relief, eligible for relief, or whose incomes were below the normal standard of living in the community from which the youths were to be enrolled.

During the early years of the corps enrollment was limited strictly to young men on relief and war veterans, the latter group constituting about 10 percent of the C. C. C. The act of June 28, 1937, extending the life of the Civilian Conservation Corps, opened the way for the enrollment of young men who were not on relief. This law simply stated that "the Civilian Conservation Corps is established for the purpose of providing employment, as well as vocational training, for youthful citizens of the United States who are unemployed and in need of employment."

Immediately following passage of the 1937 act, the entrance regulations of the corps were revised to permit the enrollment of young men from families who needed aid but whose names were not on public-relief rolls. Later these regulations were modified to permit the enrollment of a third group which consisted of young men from families whose incomes were below the normal standard of living in the community in which the applicant lives.

The latest modification in the regulations defining the terms "unemployed and in need of employment" reads as follows:

"For the purpose of C. C. C. selection the phrase 'Unemployed and in need of employment' shall be understood to cover unmarried junior applicants otherwise qualified by age, citizenship, fitness, and character; not in attendance at school, nor on temporary vacation therefrom; not possessing other regular or full-time employment, and who need the employment, the job training, the educational, and other opportunities available in the Civilian Conservation Corps."

It is important to have in mind the new definition of "unemployed and in need of employment." This new definition is the heart of the new regulation. The final clause of the new definition specifies that in order to be eligible the applicant must "need the employment, the job training, the educational and other opportunities available in the C. C. C." The word "need" used in this connection has its customary meaning of inability to provide such opportunities out of his own or his family's resources. In other words, while it is not necessary that the family be in a relief status or unable to maintain a normal standard of living in order that the son shall be eligible for enrollment, it is still the intent, as indeed the statute requires, that the enrollee shall "need" the employment and vocational opportunities of the corps. If such opportunities are fully available to him because of his own or his family's resources, he is not within the regulations and under the statutes eligible for enrollment.

The new regulation does remove a restriction upon selection of desirable and qualified young men. It opens the door to enrollment to a new group of unemployed youths who have energy and ambition and who need the opportunities for work and training which the corps provides. It is vital that the vacancies in the camps should be filled by young men who will make the most of those opportunities.

It would be a splendid thing if every young American could be given the opportunity to serve for 6 months or a year in the healthful, outdoor atmosphere of the C. C. C. camps. The discipline, the orderly routine of camp life, the training facilities, the constant medical attention, and the inspiring leadership found in every C. C. C. camp could not help but leave their imprint upon every youth who enrolled. The opportunity to be of service to the Nation, especially in these times, should appeal to every young American.

We have moved, logically, one further step in the direction of selecting applicants on the basis of their own need and fitness for C. C. C. opportunities. We have, at the same time, moved further away from the application of an arbitrary standard of family income as a basis for selection.

During the October enrollment selecting agents throughout the country should apply these principles with care so that we shall obtain a group of youths who are eminently fitted to profit in exceptional degree from the fine training opportunities of the corps.

In conclusion, I wish to emphasize my hope and expectation that during the October enrollment we shall have, and make use of, the fullest opportunity to select enrollees on the basis of their personal qualifications.

J. J. MCENTEE, Director.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot conclude the consideration of this bill today, as we had all hoped to do.

I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the pending bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the committee amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the limitation of time, I do not believe we can get a vote on the amendment tonight.

Mr. TAFT. That is agreeable to me.

JESSE H. JONES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the House has just passed a joint resolution, which I ask to have considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 602) to authorize Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, to be appointed to, and to perform the duties of, the office of Secretary of Commerce, which was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, may continue in such office and be appointed to, in the manner now provided by law, and may exercise the duties of the office of Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That the total compensation to be paid him as Secretary of Commerce and as Federal Loan Administrator shall be that provided by law for the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not wish to object to the joint resolution, since I have the highest respect for Mr. Jones and think he is one of the ablest men in the public service. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that Mr. Jones already probably has more power than any other man in the Government, with the single exception of the President. He has unlimited power to lend money to anyone, to any industry in the United States, or refuse to lend. We gave him unlimited power to invest Government money in any Government plant which manufactures any form of supplies or any other kind of material which has the remotest relation to war. I do not think that, with the exception noted, any man in the United States ever has enjoyed so much power. I have no great objection to giving Mr. Jones the additional power to act also as Secretary of Commerce, but I think it is an extraordinary precedent, which is justified only by the character of the man, and which I hope may not be repeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of William E. Rhea, of Missouri, to be land bank commissioner in the Farm Credit Administration, vice Roy M. Reen, resigned.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of several deck officers to be aides (with relative rank of ensign in the Navy) in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Public Health Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc. That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, September 11, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, Maker of all things pure, Author of all life and Judge of all men, abide with us in the fullness of Thy mercy and wisdom. Do Thou possess our hearts and minds, enabling us to resist evil and overcome difficulty. Amid turbulent conditions and mental disquietude, Oh, speak to men everywhere, without qualification or exemption: "I am the way, the truth, and the life"; touch the deep powers of their souls. To our fathers' God, we humbly pray for an overcoming faith in truth and freedom; from ocean to ocean may our land own Thee as Lord. Oh, protect, preserve, and bless the soul of our Republic; for our country's weal we humbly appeal to Thee. Father of mercy and love, abide with our Speaker and grant that the Congress may ever cultivate a free, brotherly, and wholesome interchange of thought and be led to receive the injunction of the Psalmist: "Hope thou in God." In the blessed name of our Saviour. Amen.

The journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2009) entitled "An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4164) entitled "An act to provide for the common defense by increasing the personnel of the armed forces of the United States and providing for its training"; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. REYNOLDS, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. MINTON, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler. The speech exceeds the limit a little bit, and I have an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal tomorrow and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the legislative program of the day I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MACIEJEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article entitled "It's a Wonderful Privilege To Be an American."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may correct my remarks of Saturday last, commencing at page 5509 Appendix of the RECORD, and to further extend and rearrange and renumber the questions and answers in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two short editorials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make two insertions in the RECORD, first, on Federal-aid highway apportionment for 1942 and 1943, and also a letter relative to highways.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein remarks I made yesterday before the House deficiency appropriations subcommittee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therewith a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article relative to a book by Albert Bushnell Hart, professor of government, Harvard University, entitled "School History of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include two articles, one relative to a book by William Backus Guitteau, director of schools, Toledo, Ohio, entitled "Our United States"; and the other about a book entitled "Burke's Speech on Conciliation," edited by O. H. Ward, Taft School, Watertown, Conn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

SIX YEARS OF BACK INCOME TAXES FOR EMPLOYEES PAID WITH FEDERAL-AID FUNDS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to the fact that under a 1934 ruling by the Treasury Department and a section of the revenue bill of 1940, all State employees who are paid by Federal funds in a way that they are considered paid directly or indirectly by the United States or any of its agents or instrumentalities will be subject to retroactive taxation on their income-tax returns back to 1934. This, I have been told, will include employees of State highway departments, unemployment compensation commissions, and other agencies of that character. No penalty, other than interest, attaches if payment is made before March 15, 1941. Before that date, Congress should study the situation, Mr. Speaker, and determine the equities in the matter.

I have a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury on the matter and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may place this letter in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that this last request of mine is slightly over the two and a half pages or two pages, but I have an estimate here from the Public Printer.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the estimate?

Mr. THORKELSON. Two pages, $90.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Montana has used thousands and thousands of dollars of space in the RECORD. I do not know what he puts in the RECORD, because I have never read one word of it, but the gentleman had three requests yesterday and now he wants two more and he desires to set aside the rules of the House. I think it is time to call a halt. The taxpayers are paying this money. Why is the gentleman not satisfied to cut out some of this matter to come within the rule?

Mr. THORKELSON. Your own New Deal has cost the taxpayers over $51,000,000,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Never mind about the New Deal. Now we have a rule that governs the RECORD and for the time being I am going to object, because I would like to see the gentleman bring his remarks within the legal limit.

Mr. THORKELSON. They are within the legal limit.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman just said it was over the limit. He states the remarks will cost $90 additional.

Mr. THORKELSON. These remarks are within the legal limit.

Mr. COCHRAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

GOLD

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if you take the daily statement of the Federal Government issued by the Secretary of the Treasury September 6 you will find that there is $20,971,382,767.25 worth of gold buried down at Fort Knox, Ky., and in the New York assay office. What good is that gold? Seventy percent of the world's gold held by whom? Held by the Federal Government. What good is it going to be? Why do you not make distribution of it to the people of this country as formerly to individuals and to banks? It is not any good as far as the Government is concerned to own 100 percent of the world's gold and bury it in the earth, and I say it is worthless stuff. Great Britain went off the gold standard 9 years ago. France went off the gold standard 4 years ago. On February 1, 1934, when you devalued the gold dollar, you then paid $20.67 an ounce for gold, and you increased it to $35; you made a profit of $3,000,000,000, for you had on hand $4,034,867,780 in gold at $20.67 per ounce. Then you said it was worth $35 an ounce, and you then had $7,018,263,295 in gold, gold, gold, gold. Folly, folly, folly. New Deal blunders. Who made the profit? The foreign countries made the profit out of most of their valueless gold. Now our Nation owns it, and unless we see that it gets some use it is worthless stuff. I say we should permit the people to own it and get some use at the hands of our own people, at least, for other nations have no use for it. It is now a beacon light of dictators to acquire a part of it, and it may be one object of attack by a dictator to get a part of it. It requires an army to stand by to guard it, a great cost daily to our Government. This Treasury statement also reveals that we are going in the red millions daily. We have created the greatest national debt in the past 8 years than any period in our history. We have not been within one and one-half billions of dollars of a balanced Budget.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEMKE, by unanimous consent, was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POLITICAL FORECAST

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it seems that I have developed into a political forecaster. I am the only Member of the House who told you a year in advance that Wendell L. Willkie would be a candidate for President on the Republican ticket.

Now, then, since he seems to change his position every time he goes on the radio or into the press, I am constrained to suggest what should be his next change. He has already come out for rural electrification, after fighting it for years, and, according to this morning's paper he has come out for the draft to be put into effect at once, and against the voluntary provision. I make the bold prediction that if he is at all consistent his next change will be the most appropriate one, that is, to come out for President Roosevelt for a third term. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert a radio address which I gave last night over WMAL and also an excerpt from the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUSING IN CONNECTION WITH NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 594.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 594

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi has so ably stated the purpose of the bill, and so completely, that it does not leave a great deal for any of the rest of us to say. Sufficient to say that this bill provides for housing units in our national-defense program, $150,000,000. It has been sponsored by the War Department, by the Navy Department, and by the Council for National Defense. Admiral Moreell appeared for the Navy Department, Major Wilson for the War Department, and Mr. Carmody, Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, for his agency. Anyone reading the hearings cannot but be convinced that these facilities are needed. For several years I personally have followed the work of Mr. Carmody. I do not believe there is a Member here who does not know that Mr. Carmody has handled with ability every task that has been entrusted to him, carried it out in an able, honest, and fair way. I am particularly pleased that Mr. Carmody will be in charge of this, because it will assure that fairness, efficiency, and honesty will govern in the carrying out of this work.

There has been little if any opposition on the part of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. This bill was unanimously reported by the Rules Committee. From my personal experience and observation of the situation at the Savanna, Ill., proving ground, which is close to my home city, I know they need additional facilities there. In a statement by Major Wilson which appears on page 65 of the hearings he says they need 200 units at Savanna, Ill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHNSON], in whose district is located the Rock Island Arsenal, states they have asked for 1,800 units at Rock Island; and at Rantoul, Ill., in the district of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHEAT], they have asked for 470 units.

Personally, I have heretofore been violently opposed to the general U. S. H. A. and their program of slum clearance in which they have spent and wasted so many billions of dollars—these gentlemen and I have been opposed to that sort of thing, but we are convinced that in these congested localities where they are bringing mechanics and others to work on the national-defense program there is an acute shortage and great need for additional facilities.

I hope the rule is granted without delay and that the resolution itself will pass.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I understand that under this national defense housing program it is planned to go into communities, and I am concerned about its effect on the communities. Will the local authorities have anything to say at all about the type of housing? I want to make this clear. These national-defense plans have gone out of the larger cities into more rural areas. I have in mind the small town of East Hartford, a very beautiful old residential town. It would be unfortunate to have the Federal Government go in there and build the same type of housing, for example, that they build under the U. S. H. A. program. I believe that the authorities who will be in charge of this housing program should be subjected to local restrictions so that they may not go in and play havoc with existing localities.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I do not believe the operations under this bill will interfere with local real-estate people who own apartments and homes. It is planned to provide these facilities where congested areas make it necessary. I am sure proper judgment will be used.

Mr. MILLER. Will they have to live up to the local zoning regulations?

This bill does not state that. This bill, however, provides that the Federal Government in lieu of taxes shall pay an annual sum.

Does not the gentleman believe it would be well to amend the act so the Federal Government would have to respect the local zoning restrictions and not, for instance, be allowed to erect an apartment building in an area restricted to single houses?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I would think that would be one of the considerations.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I call attention to section 10 in response to the question of the gentleman from Connecticut, which reads:

* * * This act shall not deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over such property.

Would not the gentleman conclude that would be interpreted to mean that the Federal Government subjects itself to the civil jurisdiction of the community to establish zoning ordinances and such things?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I would say that was a proper interpretation.

Mr. KEEFE. I think that is what it means.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Section 9 provides:

The Administrator may enter into any agreements to pay annual sums in lieu of taxes to any State or political subdivision thereof.

This was inserted in the bill on the theory that the local authorities would have to furnish police and fire protection and that the Federal Government should reimburse them for this extra and added work.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I find some language in this bill which is very difficult for me to understand. It appears in section 1 of the bill that the Federal Works Administrator, acting through the Public Buildings Administration, is authorized to do thus and so. In Rear Admiral Moreell's testimony on page 5 of the hearings, I notice where he states that the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department has developed standard floor plans for single-family and two-family units which it appears will cost around $1,993 per house.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Based on what I have been able to find out about the governmental agencies, in building these dwelling units, family units, that $1,993 figure is the lowest I have been able to get any information on anywhere for living units of the type referred to.

If the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department is in position to build family units or single-dwelling houses at around $2,000 each, why does this bill turn this dwelling-unit proposition over to the Federal Works Administrator and carry in it provisions authorizing him to spend from $3,000 to $4,000 per family unit, which, as I understand the bill, is exclusive of the expense of administration and the acquisition of public utilities and community facilities? Where is there any Government agency that can begin to build houses at as low a cost as the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department indicates it can, according to Admiral Moreell's testimony? Can the gentleman give us any information on that at all?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. All I can say with regard to that is because it will be necessary to build some of these units in Alaska and other places where it is much colder and there will be a greater cost. They have not limited Mr. Carmody to the smallest amount. I believe the gentleman from Michigan will agree that Mr. Carmody has in the past kept very low the cost, and there will be no question about him doing this in a cheap, economical manner.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I may say to the gentleman, I will never agree that Mr. Carmody can build houses suitable for these employees at as low a figure as $1,993. I do not believe he will do it, and I think those costs will certainly exceed the $3,000 to $4,000 limitation in the bill.

May I ask the gentleman about this testimony, also. On page 7 of the hearings, I understand from Admiral Moreell's testimony that machinists, mechanics, and skilled men who have been brought here to Washington to work at these high wages which are paid them, and I am not kicking about those wages, are leaving Washington and refusing to work on the ground, as he puts it, they cannot find a place in which to live that they can afford to pay for. If our Government clerks who are drawing from $1,150 on up as high as they go can live in these houses in Washington and pay the rent, why cannot these skilled mechanics pay the rent which they have to pay in Washington, and why do they leave the city as the admiral said? I think that testimony needs some expanding.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I read that carefully, as well as the discussion between the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] and the admiral, where they disagreed a great deal. I do not know who would be better able to know the needs of these people than Admiral Moreell would be, and I do not know why he would say that if it were not true.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. As a member of the committee who listened to the testimony at these hearings, may I say that Admiral Moreell did not know what he was talking about when he spoke of the scarcity of homes in the District of Columbia. If the navy yard skilled workers are leaving the navy yard in Washington because they cannot obtain housing facilities, as the admiral indicated, that is a valid reason why the Government should use the expansive and expensive Greenbelt housing project, to which Uncle

Sam now has title, in order to provide housing for those navy yard defense workers. I would suggest that before any more skilled navy yard workers leave Washington, that the admiral advise them to buy a few of the Washington newspapers in which they will find many pages of advertisements which reveal that many homes are available for sale and for rent, including apartments, rooms, and houses.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Every Member of the House knows that rents are very high in the District of Columbia. Every Member of Congress practically has had this experience. If these skilled mechanics who come here to Washington to work in the navy yard find they must pay more rent here than they do perhaps in industrial cities back home, naturally they feel, what is the use of paying more rent in Washington when I can go back home in my own district and live perhaps by paying $15 a month less rent? That is one of the reasons for Admiral Moreell's testimony along these lines. If you consider it from that angle, I do not think we should criticize the admiral's testimony on that point.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] stated that it is difficult for him to believe that the Navy can construct a house for $1,993. The proof of that is in the fact that already 50 houses are 60 percent completed, and the cost will not run more than $1,993, and, according to the testimony, will run less than $1,993 per house. The fact that it is actually being done below the estimate of $1,993, with the houses practically 60 percent complete, I think, is a complete answer to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in the first place I made no such statement, and the gentleman can refer to my original remarks. If he does he will find he is entirely in error. I referred to the testimony with reference to the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department, pointing out that they claimed they were building them for $1,993 and I raised the question why this bill carries an allowance of three to four thousand dollars per unit, transferring the job to the Federal Works Administration, when the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department can build them for $1,993. In no way have I said they could not build them for that, because I know they can build these houses for that amount. I have built some houses myself.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am sorry I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The admiral states on page 9 of his testimony, as follows:

> Yes; we are dealing with realities here. These mechanics come here to Washington and try to find a place to live. They cannot find a place to live and they leave. It is hard to get a good mechanic to stay here unless he can find a decent place to live.

Now, I know something about rental costs in this town, and I know something about what is available, because I make it my business to go around and look. If we do not understand what it costs these people to live in Washington, we do not understand our job. So if you will watch the grocery stores and the cost of rents, you will know what is going on in the average man's mind from an economic standpoint.

This bill carries provisions in section 6 with reference to moneys to be derived from rentals or operation of property acquired or constructed. What rate of rent is to be charged for these houses that will be built? Are we going to put up $3,000 or $4,000 houses and rent them to these skilled mechanics for $15 or $20 a month and let the taxpayers of the country bear the burden, or are they willing to pay what Government clerks, for instance, have to pay? I think we need a lot of information on this bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I understand that it is to pay for itself, and after the defense program is completed this property will be sold to private individuals. Is that correct, may I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], the chairman of the committee?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes. May I say to the gentleman that it is absolutely impossible to fix a certain standard of rentals because these buildings will be different in character, owing to their location, and the same rental would not apply to all.

May I say with reference to the District of Columbia that it is contemplated that very little of the amount authorized in this bill will be used in the District of Columbia. The purpose of this bill is primarily to provide housing for civilian workers out at the various plants and establishments where we are preparing for our national defense.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. As listed on page 65. That gives a good example of the different units and places they are to be built.

Mr. LANHAM. On page 14 of the hearings you will find a statement with reference to some of the Navy needs. On page 65 of the hearings you will see a statement with reference to some of the Army needs. May I say that the great bulk of these needs is being supplied through the $100,000,000 appropriation made just a few days ago in the defense measure. About 93 percent of that appropriation of $100,000,000 has already been allocated in 31 States and in the Territories to carry on particularly this Army and Navy construction. There is in that, in addition to the figures shown by the Army and the Navy, more units for the Army than are printed in that table, and approximately 120,000 units for civilian workers. This bill is intended primarily to take care of these civilian workers scattered throughout this land.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield in order that I may ask my colleague a question?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Does this bill include housing for any troops?

Mr. LANHAM. This bill provides, of course, that there may be housing for enlisted men in the Army and Navy because, although that will be looked after primarily under the $100,000,000 appropriation made the other day, there may be some of the enlisted men or employees of the Army and the Navy who will be delegated to carry on some of the work under this construction.

Mr. THOMASON. Does this bill then carry with it the authority for the erection of more buildings, either temporary or permanent, on existing army posts?

Mr. LANHAM. No. That was the principal purpose of the $100,000,000 that was appropriated the other day, $93,000,000 of which has already been allocated.

May I say that it is the purpose of the Government to recoup, certainly, a very large part of this money by disposing of these houses, many of which will be temporary in nature, after the emergency has passed. The latitude in the costs of the dwellings involves two or three different features. In the first place, in isolated communities where there is a plant away from a town or because temporary dwelling units will be constructed, they will not be expensive. In a congested area in the suburbs of a city close to a plant, for instance the shipbuilding industry at Newport News, where the buildings can be sold afterward for dwelling units in that community, a little better type of construction should be had because we want to recoup as much of this money as we can for the Treasury.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I may say in answer to the gentleman that on page 5 Admiral Moreell states:

> The Bureau of Yards and Docks has made a survey of naval-housing requirements to determine the number of units needed. This survey indicates that there will be approximately 18,000 dwelling units required for enlisted personnel and 48,000 units required for civilians.

That gives the gentleman an answer.

Mr. THOMASON. In case the necessity exists there is nothing in this bill, however, to prohibit the War Department from using some of this money for necessary housing, whether it be either temporary or permanent?

Mr. LANHAM. There is not.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that it would be better to have the Navy Department undertake the building of these houses, inasmuch as they could do it more reasonably?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am not sure of that. I believe that with Mr. Carmody working in conjunction with the National Defense Committee—and it is contemplated that they will work in coordination—perhaps that will be better than having the Navy do it, because this construction is going to be done all over the country. In addition, I would say the Navy Department already has a big assignment of immediate work to do.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Buildings can go up at Fort Devens in my district, an Army fort?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is possible under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Of course, this appropriation has to do more with construction for civilian workers.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; but it could be used for those in the Army?

Mr. LANHAM. Parts of it could; yes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Is it the idea that these buildings are for people who are to be called into certain places where there is a lack of labor as well as a lack of housing?

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct.

Mr. KELLER. What is the justification for doing that, when situations exist like that in my district, where there are 28,000 people on relief? I am asking the Army and the Navy to consider giving some work there, showing them that we would not have to build a single solitary house. We are spending $26,000,000 a year to keep the coal miners of 6 counties, mostly, from starving.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is a separate question for the gentleman to take up, perhaps, with the War Department but not in connection with this matter.

Mr. KELLER. What I want to call the gentleman's attention to is that there is no sense in building houses for men who already have houses and there is no sense, insofar as I am able to see it, in putting these works where men will be called in who have not houses when you can put them where the men are and where they have houses. When men are on relief and crying for work, why not put the men there? That is a matter for this Congress to consider, certainly.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Pass another Guffey Coal Act and you will drive all of them out of work.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. Does this constitute any part of the civilian housing program?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Not to any big degree at least, but, of course, any time you build houses, in a way it does affect the general program, but the ones who are supporting this measure are certainly not for the United States Housing Administration, where they are spending billions of dollars in direct competition with real-estate owners who own apartment buildings and houses.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Is it contemplated under this bill that the rents to be charged will be comparable with the rents on privately owned houses in these various sections?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is the understanding of everyone I have discussed this with.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], made an exceptionally fine point. Out in the great Middle West we have many cities in which reside the best of mechanics, cities which have the best of transportation, and factory facilities and plenty of homes in which to house workers in the defense-expansion program. We have just received a report from Milwaukee, Wis., a large industrial city, where we have thousands of homes which are now available and new ones being constructed. We have many vacant manufacturing facilities and thousands and thousands of available skilled and unskilled workers. It is absolutely absurd to have the Government go into an expansive and expensive socialistic housing program in order to furnish homes in the name of national defense when we have homes and industries available in and adjacent to the large industrial cities in which reside many skilled mechanics, as well as unskilled workers, many of whom have been unable to find a job for the past several years.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LANHAM. Of course, it will be the policy of those in charge of the administration of this act to use available housing whenever they can find it, but I do not think it is for us to determine the policy of the Army and the Navy as to where certain of these plans should be located. That is a matter of national defense, and you cannot pick up some item of national defense and just move it here, there, and yonder. There is a specific place and a strategic place for it, and they are scattered all over this country.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman. For instance, they may let a contract to build some ships and, if that contracting company wants to build them in Connecticut they certainly should not be compelled to build them out in Indianapolis.

Mr. LANHAM. To be sure, and I can cite another instance quite in point. For instance, housing is contemplated here for workers at a powder factory that is being established. That cannot be in any city or in any town. It has to be in a secluded, isolated district, and the housing will have to be available. You cannot take a plant of that kind, with the incidental risk that always attends the operation of such a plant, and place it in some of these congested sections where housing may be available.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, this bill is before the Congress primarily because the National Defense Commission asked that it be here.

Mr. LANHAM. Both the National Defense Commission and the Army and the Navy.

Mr. MICHENER. I am leaving out the departments. This is a bill that the National Defense Commission has asked Congress to pass in aid of national defense.

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. It does seem that inasmuch as this legislation is asked for, and inasmuch as the purpose is to have private industry and private initiative furnish these homes, if and when private initiative can or will, then I do not see why we should be quibbling about it. It is necessary that we have these homes for these defense workers.

Mr. LANHAM. The testimony is to the effect that private capital and private industry will be invited and urged to do as much of this as they can, and there is one incidental feature of it that may be attractive to private industry.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman mentioned powder plants. Let us keep the record straight. Our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury is called upon to furnish hundreds of millions of dollars in the form of subsidies to erect new powder and munitions plants and still I have here a Washington paper, the Evening Star of July 3, 1940, which states that 132 carloads of our Army's TNT was recently sold and sent to a belligerent foreign country 3,000 miles across the sea. We are now asked to appropriate from our almost bankrupt

Federal Treasury many millions of dollars to provide housing for workers who are to manufacture some more TNT.

We are asked in the name of national defense to spend millions of dollars under this bill to provide homes for additional workers in the navy yards and private shipyards after voting billions of dollars to provide additional ships for our United States Navy. And still the New Deal brethren sell 50 of our essential naval vessels to a foreign belligerent nation, 3,000 miles across the sea, in violation of international law and the law of the United States.

This same course is followed with reference to artillery, rifles, airplanes, and everything else which a nation at war needs. In view of the record it would appear proper to change the title of this bill so that it would be truthful. The title should properly state that it is a bill to raid our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury to the tune of $150,000,000 in order to increase the defense and offense of foreign belligerent European nations.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman ought to be gratified by the provision in this bill that allows us to recoup much of this money by the sale of this property when it has served its purpose.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. GEHRMANN. There is no doubt that we need additional housing facilities, but I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] and my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] that we do have a lot of facilities that could be utilized. In my own district we have one of the largest Du Pont powder plants in the country. They employed over 4,000 people during the World War. They are not expanding that plant now. There are hundreds of vacant houses all around that neighborhood. I do not know why they could not increase the orders and use those facilities before they waste time and money for new plants.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I think the War Department and the Navy Department will take those things into consideration. Naturally, I feel that the expenditure of the national-defense program should be allotted as far as possible to the different localities.

Mr. GEHRMANN. I would like to mention one more thing, and that is shipbuilding. We have one of the largest shipyards on the Great Lakes located at Superior. During the war they had three shipyards operating 24 hours a day. There is not a single ship being built there now, and I have used every possible means to inform the authorities of these facilities. We have hundreds of expert shipbuilders there. They are gradually drawing them out of that country and bringing them into these concentrated areas where they do not have housing. I know they cannot build a big battleship, but they did build all kinds of ships up to 500 feet in length, which the Navy needs, such as mine sweepers, mine layers, and all kinds of auxiliary ships. They are not building a single one there now. They always say, "We are going to use those facilities." Why could they not use them when they are now ordering hundreds of that type of ship that could be built and we have the men there and we have thousands of empty houses?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CROWE. Will the gentleman yield? I wish to make an inquiry.

Mr. SABATH. I gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CROWE. I wanted to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that, for instance, a powder plant that would be constructed at an isolated place, naturally, there would not be housing adequate to take care of the workers in that plant, and that would be one instance where it would be necessary to acquire housing to take care of the people who would work at that plant, somewhere near the vicinity.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is right.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I am glad to yield to my friend.

Mr. KELLER. May I suggest the gentleman is entirely wrong and I will show that he is wrong.

Mr. SABATH. I will say that wherever a powder plant is to be erected it must be erected miles and miles away from the populated sections, and consequently there are no housing facilities there. Housing facilities must be provided. For instance, if I am not mistaken, there will be a powder plant erected somewhere near the district of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE], in Kentucky. I am informed that there is no housing within 20 or 25 miles of that site. Consequently there must be some housing provided.

Mr. KELLER. What plant is the gentleman referring to?

Mr. SABATH. A powder plant.

Mr. KELLER. Where?

Mr. SABATH. At Charleston, Ind.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The President, in an address to the Congress, stated that facilities would be placed in the Midwest, where they would be safe from attack, and would be at advantageous positions geographically. If the gentleman's statement is correct, it is not essential that adequate housing be at the places where these powder plants are to be erected, but under this bill, if passed, powder plants may be erected and the housing may be supplied by the Government at the site of the plants. Is that correct?

Mr. SABATH. That is what is intended.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. One more question.

In my particular section of the Middle West a survey has been made for the purpose of determining whether adequate housing facilities exist. That has been named as a condition precedent to the establishment of a powder plant in any given area. If this bill is passed and if adequate housing does not happen to exist at any particular point, the Government can make up that deficiency under this bill by erecting the housing itself. Is that not correct?

Mr. SABATH. Correct. The gentleman is right.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. So that in the event housing does not exist, that is not a bar to the location of a powder plant in the Middle West?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is right.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will permit me to go on, I may yield to him later.

Mr. GORE. Will the gentleman yield to me just there?

Mr. SABATH. I wish to make a statement, but I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I wish to say that I have worked with Mr. Palmer, who has charge of the housing for the National Defense Commission, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is definite need in several places for housing for defense workers.

This, of course, is not a subsidy proposition. You may recall that I opposed continuation of the United States Housing Authority on the 60-year subsidy plan, but this is an entirely different matter. It is an answer to a need which is urgent, and I for one expect to support the rule and to support the bill.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman, because I know he has devoted a great deal of study and attention to the housing needs of the Nation. I am pleased to know that he is in favor of the bill. In fact, Mr. Speaker, any Member who is thoroughly familiar with the provisions of the bill cannot help but support and vote for it.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had this bill before it for 2 or 3 weeks. It studied the bill, amended it, and tried in every way to properly and adequately safeguard the interests of the United States. I feel that the administration of the bill has been placed in safe and competent hands. I join with the gentleman from Illinois in expressing faith and confidence in the competency of Mr. Carmody, the Federal Works Administrator, under whose jurisdiction, with the collaboration of Mr. Palmer, who was also mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], the work will be carried out.

It is essential that workers in the plants having to do with national defense should have adequate and proper housing facilities. I recollect, as I am sure most of you do, how during the war contracts were awarded so fast and to such an extent that thousands upon thousands of workers in the plants were without housing facilities. We must not permit a repetition of such conditions.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] has called our attention to the advantageous availability of the Middle West in connection with our defense program. I agree with him wholeheartedly that it is absolutely necessary for proper defense that some of the new activities should be brought to the Middle West and our few such existing plants there be enlarged; and I am assured that will be done. In many places of the Middle West, however, housing will be imperatively required.

I am not going to consume any more time, except to say, as did the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], who presented this rule, that we must properly safeguard the workers in this important preparedness program. Moreover, we must not ignore the general public, the people of America, including especially the workers, who may not be so fortunate as to work with and for the Government. We must not lag in our successful endeavors to improve the conditions of the workers of America, regardless of where they are employed, because we must have a contented and satisfied people with a strong and enduring morale. Not only do we need hundreds of guns, vessels, airplanes, and such things, but we must have trained men to use them, we must have men who will energetically and efficiently support the Army and the Navy. I believe, consequently, we should not retard the initiation and progress that have been made toward providing proper housing facilities for all the wage earners of America whether they are engaged on Government or private work.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. SCHULTE. It is contemplated building in my district several thousand tanks, which will employ between 2,000 and 3,000 men in that great area. It is a foregone conclusion that there is not anyone in that particular district who can finance all of the housing that will be needed to take care of these 2,000 or 3,000 families if we do not get some assistance from the Federal Government. Is it not a known fact that unless we do provide these additional houses, the owners of present properties will increase the rent from 25 to 30 or even 40 percent on the tenants who now occupy them?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is right. It is from just such people, big property owners, that opposition to the housing and slum-clearance program has come; and their opposition has been grounded on a fear that the Government program would force them to reduce rents or prevent them from raising rents as they desire. It was for that reason they unjustly and unfairly belittle and attack the United States housing program.

Under the able direction of Mr. Carmody this program will be supervised efficiently and costs will be minimized to the fullest extent consistent with good business practices.

The statement has been made that Rear Admiral Moreell, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department, did not know anything about general living conditions. I do not know whether he knows anything about living conditions in Washington. While I have had contacts with the admiral only 3 or 4 times, by all the eternal verities, I never met a more efficient, capable, and harder-working officer and engineer than is Rear Admiral Moreell. If he does not know all about housing in the District, that is probably the only thing with which he is not familiar. He, as a representative of the Navy Department, has recommended this legislation; a representative of the office of the Chief of Staff of the War Department has recommended this legislation, and the National Defense Council has recommended the legislation. There should be no question, in my opinion, as to the immediate passage of the bill. I hope, however, that the Federal Works Administrator will be given the power to use any and all present agencies in the prosecution of this program. This is one condition I have insisted upon and still insist upon. With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be given permission to revise and extend the remarks I shall make on this bill and to include therein certain excerpts and quotations from other documents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain excerpts from documents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HOUSING IN CONNECTION WITH NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H. R. 10412, with Mr. BOEHNE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there has been some confusion and misunderstanding with reference to the terms and the purposes of this measure. There appeared before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds representatives of the Navy Department, representatives of the War Department and of the Council for National Defense, urging the necessity for the construction provided in this measure, and also accentuating the point that speed is essential. It is essential for more reasons than one, but there is one which will readily occur to you, and that is that with winter coming on it is important to obviate at these plants and establishments any likelihood of a recurrence of the epidemic of flu or other diseases which occurred during the World War. Let us not permit that to happen for the lack of proper housing.

In the defense appropriation bill considered a few days ago, $100,000,000 was appropriated primarily for the use of the Army and the Navy for housing at their regular establishments. Of the $100,000,000 so provided for defense housing by H. R. 10263, approximately $93,000,000 has already been tentatively allocated for the use of the Army and Navy in approximately 110 locations spread over 30 States, Hawaii, Panama Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, and Guantanamo in Cuba for the urgent needs of the Army and Navy, and providing approximately 10,000 units at naval stations or Army posts, with an additional 16,000 off the reservations to care for the families of defense workers whose housing requirements would not otherwise be met.

In this measure, we consider primarily the needs of our country with reference to housing for civilian workers, and laborers who will be employed in various capacities in connection with plants that have been established, plants that are in operation and plants that will be established and that will be in operation in proper preparation for our national defense. Some of these are in isolated localities where no housing is available; some of them are in localities more or less congested where little housing is available, and it is the purpose of those in charge to use all of the available housing that can be fitted into the picture of the program of national defense, but it will not be adequate, nor will it be adequate, according to the representations made before our committee, to use the funds provided in this bill and the funds which have been provided in other measures. In other words, these various measures represent the minimum necessary for proper and adequate housing in the matter of national defense.

In order that there may be no possibility of scandal or reputed scandal that mansions have been erected under this measure here, there and yonder, the committee and those in charge of the defense program thought it wise to incorporate a maximum amount for any individual dwelling unit. This amount differs, of course, with reference to the continental United States and some of our territorial possessions, because it can readily be seen that in Alaska, for instance, and perhaps in Hawaii, where transportation costs are greater for materials, and where climate has quite an effect upon the character of building that is necessary, there will be more need for structures which will cost more money than in some parts of the continental United States. There is established an average of $3,000 per unit.

It is the expectation of those in charge of the work that this building cost will fall far below that figure so far as the construction of these buildings is concerned. From the standpoint of cost, it is estimated now that they can be built for approximately $2,000 to $2,200 per unit; however, in isolated instances there may be circumstances which will make it necessary to increase the expenditure above $2,000 or $2,200. For instance, in sections of certain cities that will have to be used because they are available to existing plants or plants to be constructed the dwelling unit will have to be of a little finer character than in some isolated community.

When we bear in mind that it is the purpose to recoup as much of this money as possible by disposing of the property as soon as the emergency has passed, it can readily be seen that a certain character of dwelling will be necessary in certain localities to insure not only a decent dwelling and quarters for the workers in those localities, but for a fair opportunity to dispose of the property when the emergency has passed. Although these houses can be built at the present time for less than the amounts specified in this bill, may I call attention to an excerpt from an article which appeared recently in a magazine in this country that goes rather thoroughly into matters of this character. This magazine was published in September of the present year and there appears this excerpt from the War Industries Board report of 1917–19, which graphically recalls the rise in commodity prices which then took place. This is the excerpt from that report of the War Industries Board:

An average weighted index of commodity prices during the war years shows that from a level of 100 in 1913 they rose to 144 by December 1916, and by March 1917 they had reached 156, and within a month jumped 14 points higher. Some individual commodities were increasing even more rapidly. By March 1917 the average price of metals was 247 in comparison to the 1913 standard of 100, and by July had reached a peak of 333. Foods rose from 142 to 167, clothing from 157 to 187, and chemicals from 159 to 180 during these first 3 months of American participation.

We cannot anticipate, in view of this past history, just what increases in building costs may arise during the operation of this act. Consequently, it would not be wise or prudent to fix the maximum cost at what the maximum cost would be at this time. There must be some leeway.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. Has the gentleman any information as to whether or not there has been any appreciable rise in building costs within the last couple of months, say, since this program has been initiated?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not know that there has been, but I know that the testimony before the committee is that at present they can construct these buildings for an average cost of $2,000 to $2,200; in some instances a little more than that, but at that average cost, and they expect to do that. However, they must have some leeway by reason not only of conditions in prices of materials that may change, but also with reference to conditions in certain localities.

Mr. TERRY. For instance, I was in Alaska recently, at Anchorage and Fairbanks on a trip inspecting the Army air bases there, and I found that the housing condition in those cities is very acute. There are not sufficient quarters for the officers and the families of the men.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say to the gentleman that it is contemplated under this bill that some construction will be done there. Of course, it will be readily understood that that is the reason we placed a little higher limit of cost outside of the continental United States.

Mr. TERRY. I was going to say that prices there would probably be a great deal higher than in continental United States.

Mr. LANHAM. They will be, and for that reason we make that allowance in the bill.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. The bill as written does not specifically refer to housing for workers engaged in building ships for the Maritime Commission, which is, of course, a part of the national defense. I understand, though, that the bill is broad enough in its terms to cover those workers. Is that correct?

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman and I have discussed that matter, in which he has a very proper and solicitous interest. I consulted with those in charge and was advised that it does include housing of that character, without specific provision for it.

Mr. COLMER. I thought that was the case but I merely wanted to make a record of it. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me bring this to your attention, and under leave to extend my remarks I shall insert this statement in the RECORD. These are reported needs for defense housing by States, after deducting the need which is taken care of by the $100,000,000 appropriated in H. R. 10263, which is the defense appropriation measure that was before us a few days ago. The information I am giving here comes from the National Council of Defense. All figures are necessarily approximate. They exclude some 40,000 additional needed dwelling units which the Army has reported it will require, but which have not yet been specified, and also exclude an unknown immediate volume of industrial defense housing in the larger cities. I may say that the 40,000 additional housing units for the Army are not included in the statement by Major Wilson for the Chief of Staff on page 65 of the hearings. These are States in which at present such housing is contemplated, and the present need, including the 40,000 further units needed by the Army, is estimated at 160,000 units.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

These are the States, and in this statement will be seen the number of units provided for each of these States in the defense appropriation bill passed recently and the balances that remain:

Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, California, Canal Zone, Colorado, Connecticut, Cuba, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, Philippine Islands, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Virgin Islands, Washington, and West Virginia.

	Total need reported Sept. 10, 1940	Need to be taken care of by H. R. 10263	Balance

Total	109,555	27,308	82,247

So it will be seen that this is not a measure designed for any particular part of the country. Some of these various establishments for strategic reasons will have to be put inland, and consequently this is by no means confined to our seaboards, but has to do with our country in general, allowing each part of it to participate in this important matter of national defense in accordance with its qualifications and the resources available.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I am particularly interested in naval housing on naval reservations. Do I correctly understand that such a housing program will be carried on under the Navy Department, or is a separate and independent agency going to carry on that work?

Mr. LANHAM. Under the appropriation bill recently passed, the Army and the Navy were authorized to use $100,000,000 in carrying on their necessary construction, and they were permitted by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], which was adopted, to use any agencies of the Government in carrying out that construction.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is outside of this bill?

Mr. LANHAM. That will be outside of this bill by reason of the fact that the greater amount of funds under this measure will be used for civilian workers.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. But not on naval reservations?

Mr. LANHAM. The provision in the bill with reference to the purposes for which it will be used appears in section 2, that—

> The term "persons engaged in national-defense activities" shall include (1) enlisted men in the naval or military service of the United States; (2) employees of the United States in the Navy and War Departments assigned to duty at naval or military reservations, posts, or bases; (3) workers engaged or to be engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense.

Consequently some of the men of the Army and some of the men of the Navy could be used in carrying out this work. I may say in that regard that it is the desire to use every agency that can be used. It is the desire to use private industry, insofar as possible, and private capital, insofar as it can be attracted to this construction. The thing of prime importance is getting this thing done; consequently every pertinent agency that can be of advantage to that end will be employed.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is what I have in mind, where the Navy at the present time has a very excellent set-up to carry on a housing program within their own reservations.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Why should not some of this money be set aside for use by the Navy without any interlocking?

Mr. LANHAM. They have that under the $100,000,000 we appropriated in the defense bill. They have that authority absolutely.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And there will be no interference at all with that?

Mr. LANHAM. Not unless they decide to interfere with themselves, because it will be left to their discretion.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. I realize that every regulation and restriction cannot be written into the act, but I wonder if the chairman of the committee can assure us that local zoning laws and building codes will be respected.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that those from the Departments who appeared before the committee said they were very anxious to do that and to comply with all local recommendations possible, and that in many instances their own requirements would be quite in excess of those of the localities where they would be established.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes more.

But they did not want to write specific stipulations into the bill because the circumstances differ so in the various places, but it is their desire to conform with them just as far as possible, because there is a provision in this bill that where land is taken from the States and the counties and various localities, in order to get fire protection and police protection and other municipal protection, taxes shall be paid to the municipality or to the State—no higher, of course, than would be paid under ordinary circumstanes—and there must be cooperation between the local authorities and the authorities designated in this measure in order to carry out efficiently and harmoniously the purposes written into it.

Mr. MILLER. I am sure that explanation will satisfy everyone.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska and Mr. LEWIS of Colorado rose.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield first to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. As I understand it, any of the Federal agencies might be utilized in carrying on this work.

Mr. LANHAM. To this extent, it is provided in the bill, first section, that it is necessary for the President to determine that an acute shortage of housing exists or impends which would impede national-defense activities before any operation is done. And it is provided that the Federal Works Administrator, acting through the Public Buildings Administration, which we have known heretofore as the Procurement Division and which has its staff and facilities, and has had them through the years, doing construction in every State and Territory, shall be primarily in charge of this work.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. My question following that is whether it is contemplated that there is any possibility that the Federal Government will be called upon for a rental subsidy should the United States Housing Authority be delegated the work of constructing some of the projects.

Mr. LANHAM. Nothing of that kind is contemplated.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will it be possible for the United States Housing Authority to take over some of these projects and carry out their subsidy program?

Mr. LANHAM. In my judgment, it would not. For instance, I call the gentleman's attention to section 8, with the amendment that the Committee has suggested:

In carrying out the provisions of this act the Administrator is authorized to utilize employees and facilities of the Federal Works Agency and other Federal agencies, and of any local public agency, with the consent of such agency, and any funds appropriated pursuant to this act shall be available to transfer to any such agency in reimbursement therefor.

In other words, to the extent that the Federal Works Administrator would take facilities or personnel from these organizations, he would reimburse them for the facilities and the personnel used. That is the extent of the authority.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] has just referred to the zoning regulations and the gentleman from Texas has answered that, I believe, very fully. How about fire regulations, and sanitary regulations of the local communities?

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman will note that in section 11, by a committee amendment we have put in this language:

The Administrator is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and shall establish reasonable standards of safety, convenience, and health.

It is the purpose of those who will have charge of the operation of this measure to cooperate in every possible way with municipal authorities, because they want their fire protection, they want their police protection, and other sources of security that can be afforded by the cities, but they do not wish to establish any particular standard by reason of the fact it would not fit all cases.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I understand that fully. I just wish to be sure there shall be no violation of the fire regulations, or of police regulations, or of the sanitary regulations, or of the building regulations of the particular community in which these projects are to be established.

Mr. LANHAM. The speed of this program will depend very largely upon the harmonious spirit of cooperation existing between the two.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Before the gentleman gets away from this controversy concerning the United States Housing Authority, am I correct in this, that this is a national-defense measure; that this is not one of those social reforms or uplift measures?

Mr. LANHAM. May I say in reply to my friend, the United States Housing Authority has a very different function from the functions set forth in this measure. The function of the United States Housing Authority in the first place is slum clearance and in the second place to afford decent dwelling units for low-income groups at a reasonable rental.

Mr. MICHENER. You mean that is the purpose of the act—not what they are doing?

Mr. LANHAM. That is the purpose of the act. That is not the purpose of this act. Any slum clearance that might be included in this act would have to be purely incidental, because most of the work will likely be done in isolated communities where there is no housing available, and it is not the purpose of this act, either, to afford dwellings for low-income groups except from the standpoint of housing during the time they are working for national defense, and except insofar as the houses may be available for sale for living quarters when the emergency is passed.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. I am interested in the committee's amendment to section 8, which provides that in carrying out the provisions of this act the Federal Works Agency and other Federal agencies and any local public agency may be used. Is not this language so broad in its scope that they could take in almost every one of the thousands of such local housing authorities which have been promoted by the United States Housing Authority, and in the administration of this act they would be given full authority to make whatever expenditures were necessary in the upkeep, maintenance, and operation of these projects?

Mr. LANHAM. As a matter of fact, where they can use the personnel or facilities of those local housing authorities which know more about the local situation from the standpoint of housing than anyone else, it seems to me that that authority should be given; that they should use their facilities and their personnel to the extent that it is necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The gentleman will see from the testimony of Mr. Breen, of Boston, in the hearings that some very interesting information was given by him which it was indicated by those from the Department could very well be used.

Mr. MONRONEY. There are no restrictions, then, to eliminate the local housing authorities from operating in an unlimited way on the maintenance and operation of these projects temporarily to be built?

Mr. LANHAM. The maintenance and operation is in the hands of the Administrator under this act.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I think it might be reassuring, perhaps, to some of the Members to know that every cent spent under this bill would be under the direct control and supervision of the Public Buildings Administration, acting under the authority of the Federal Works Administrator, so that other authorities will only contribute their facilities and perhaps their personnel, but all money spent will be under the Public Buildings Administration, which was formerly under the Treasury Department, and construct really all the buildings for the Government throughout the entire United States.

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct. Mr. Reynolds has been at the head of that Division for some time, and I think many Members of Congress have found that he is most efficient and well versed in construction in every section of our country.

Mr. DARDEN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. DARDEN of Virginia. Did I understand the gentleman to say earlier that it is the purpose to sell these houses after the emergency has passed?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; to sell all that they can; to dispose of them. Of course, there may be some temporary houses that cannot be sold.

Mr. DARDEN of Virginia. On the matter of limiting the cost, some of these houses are going to be built next to military reservations throughout the United States. Would it be wise to limit them to temporary houses?

Mr. LANHAM. As a matter of fact, I think that will be reduced to the minimum, because I think that most construction of that character will be carried on through the $100,000,000 in the defense appropriation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes in order to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have two or three brief questions which can be answered briefly. Following the suggestion of my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], page 2, subsection (b), there, it seems to me, quite explicitly authority is given to the proper officials to disregard any community laws which may exist, and by that I refer to plumbing codes, sanitary codes, fire restrictions, and so on. The right by this bill would be taken away from those municipalities, in my opinion, to see that their regulations were carried out. It must be taken into consideration that the proposed housing must certainly be within the vicinity of some large centers. Otherwise they would not be needed around the industrial centers. I also find in the same paragraph that right is given to override community facilities. That may mean electrical; it may mean transportation; it may mean fire prevention. Does not the gentleman think that is taking away from the municipalities and communities long-established rights?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not think so, in the spirit of it. It is very difficult, the gentleman will understand, to put into exact language something that will meet every circumstance and situation. The very thing that those in charge wish to avoid is conflict between themselves and the various municipalities and States, because, to use the parlance of the street, that would throw a monkey wrench into the whole procedure.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does not the gentleman think that a change in the exact language of the bill would be preferable to the way in which it is now worded? It absolutely takes away from the municipal authorities their rights, as established by their different codes.

Would it not be possible to use a term like "cooperate" or something of that sort instead of deliberately taking it away from them?

Mr. LANHAM. Personally, I do not think so because I think that, if there should be some slight difference or misunderstanding when they are trying to work this thing out, they ought not to be forced into some arbitrary settlement.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman realizes, does he not, that the official is acting upon a code?

Mr. LANHAM. I think we have done the right thing in this bill. We have confidence in their expressed intention to economize in every way possible, because that goes to the success of their program.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman realizes, of course, that the official acts upon a code, not personally; he is directed by a code.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes to answer these gentlemen, then I must reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. As I understand the bill it authorizes $150,000,000.

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. Section 5 of the bill, page 5, provides:

> Where any Federal agency has funds for the provision of housing in connection with national-defense activities it may, in its discretion, make transfers of those funds in whole or in part to the Administrator.

Is it contemplated that these transfers of funds may be in addition to the $150,000,000 authorized by this bill to be appropriated?

Mr. LANHAM. I think they would have to be in addition to the $150,000,000 if any such funds were transferred, because nothing is contained in this bill for those agencies.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman have in mind what particular agencies have funds that it is contemplated might be transferred under section 5?

Mr. LANHAM. Personally, I do not.

Mr. KEEFE. What is the purpose of the paragraph?

Mr. LANHAM. We have tried to put in this measure provisions that are sufficiently broad to prevent any bar to the speedy completion of these projects.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I may say here that the Army and the Navy each have some money for housing, and they could transfer it to the Administrator.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, recently an official of the State of Kentucky told me he had built several houses with septic tank, closed-in porch, creditable toilet facilities, running water, and so forth, at a cost of $400. The gentleman must be aware that when he sets $3,000 as the average price that the whole $3,000 will be spent. There is no provision in the bill that it cost less.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say in reply that Mr. Carmody is a man very much interested in economy; and I may state further that it was brought to the attention of the committee that Mr. Carmody had completed a project at 50 percent of the estimated cost. It is the purpose to hold this down just as much as possible, but in view of the fact that we cannot foresee the future or foresee what advances may come in the cost of materials or what other exigencies may enter into the picture, we must allow a certain leeway. We must have decent housing for these various civilian workers.

Mr. LUCE. But you can put in the bill something to encourage building according to recognized standards.

Mr. LANHAM. That is quite in the spirit of this act. Furthermore we want houses of a type we can dispose of when the emergency is passed. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, all of the discussion regarding this bill is very interesting. I have not had the time to make a study of it. All I know is that in line with other legislation that we have passed during this session of Congress it requires a very considerable amount of money, and in the days to come when some of the younger Members are here and some of the older Members are gone, somebody may in the confines of this legislative hall hear in something like a ghostlike whisper, perhaps, the voice of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] echoing, "Where are you going to get the money?" [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, when the Congress passes the conscription bill and the excess-profits tax bill, it may think that its work for the session is done, but, in my opinion, a task of great magnitude and importance still remains. I refer to the urgent necessity of raising additional revenue with which to carry on the military and civil functions of the Government.

The Secretary of the Treasury has stated that Federal expenditures during the current fiscal year will exceed $12,000,000,000, of which some $5,000,000,000 will go for national defense. The estimated revenues are fixed at only $6,300,000,000. This means that on top of the $27,000,000,000 of deficits already accumulated during the last 10 years we will add this year the further stupendous sum of $5,700,000,000—the largest peacetime deficit in history. This figure does not take into account such expenditures as may be made in connection with calling out the National Guard and in putting the conscription program into effect, which probably will add another billion dollars.

The total appropriations and contract authorizations for national defense already aggregate approximately $15,000,000,000. How are we going to provide for this tremendous expenditure? We have not the money in the Treasury, nor does the Government even have the power to borrow that sum.

Last June we were forced to increase the authorized national debt by $4,000,000,000 in order to get the earlier part of the defense program under way. We limited the use of this borrowing to national-defense expenditures, and we passed a billion-dollar tax bill to provide for its amortization over a 5-year period. But we have done nothing as yet about amortizing the rest of the defense expenditures. True, an excess-profits tax bill is pending, the purpose of which is to prevent the creation of any new war millionaires out of the defense program, but the revenue from this tax will not pay for national defense. It will raise several hundred millions annually, depending upon the provisions of the final bill, but do not forget that we are faced with a deficit this year of $5,700,000,000, and more likely $6,700,000,000. The unfinished business of Congress clearly is the necessity of putting the Nation's financial house in order.

Our present financial situation is not due to the defense program alone. It is merely a continuation of the same old trouble we have had for the last 10 years of being afraid to face the facts regarding national finances. The necessity for huge defense expenditures has simply aggravated that problem. We need more taxes, not only to pay for national-defense expenditures, but to pay for the regular running expenses of the Government. We would still have a deficit this year, even if the present world situation had never developed. And then, do not forget that when we have finally balanced revenues and expenditures we still have to give some thought to paying off the huge debt that has been piled up, now aggregating forty-five billions, which constitutes a continuing threat to national solvency, and which is a first lien on the future earnings of every man, woman, and child in America, and of generations yet unborn.

During the hearings on the excess-profits tax bill before the Ways and Means Committee, the Under Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bell, made the following very significant statement:

> We will have about $300,000,000 of borrowing power at the end of this fiscal year.

That is, even with the $4,000,000,000 additional which was authorized under the defense tax bill, and which brought the national debt up to $49,000,000,000.

Mr. Bell continues:

> There is a statement attached to the Secretary's prepared statement showing that you already have on the books a national-defense program of $14,700,000,000. We are going to exhaust about $5,000,000,000 of that this year. So that you will have a program, if you enact no more legislation except that contained in the President's message of July 10, of $9,000,000,000. And to the extent that such balance is not offset by additional revenue that may be collected under existing tax laws as a result of improving business conditions, you will either have to have a debt increase or additional taxes to finance that.

There we have the picture, Mr. Chairman. We are faced with a $9,000,000,000 increase in the debt next year unless the Treasury receives additional revenues. Of course, I realize that we cannot possibly raise enough in new taxes to put our Government on a pay-as-we-go basis at the present level of expenditures. However, it is also true that we cannot go on borrowing and borrowing without limit, unless we are willing to run the grave risk of national bankruptcy. The solution lies in taking a position between the two horns of the dilemma; in other words, in authorizing limited additional borrowing and in raising the necessary revenue to amortize the additional debt over a reasonable period of years. Then, after the present emergency is over, we will have to give some thought to paying off the accumulated debt.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this Congress should not consider its work done until it has directed the Ways and Means Committee to conduct a thorough study of our whole internal-revenue system with a view to recommending additional revenue legislation in January. The committee, in its study, should give consideration not only to possible new sources of revenue, but also to the matter of revamping our existing taxes so that they will produce the greatest possible revenue without discouraging business enterprise and without imposing more than his fair share of the burden on any taxpayer. For years we have been promised a thoroughgoing revision of tax structure all along the line, but for one reason or the other—mostly lack of time—we have never had anything more than a piecemeal revision. As a consequence we do not have a real revenue system, but only a conglomeration of individual laws and conflicting policies. With our sources of taxation now all but exhausted, and with the need for tremendously increased revenues facing us, it is high time that we took the time to give our revenue system the overhauling it needs. [Applause.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROWE].

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting this legislation, housing for national defense, because I think it is in line with the program that has been adopted by this House and by the Congress in recent months. This plan is to erect buildings to house workers engaged in industrial plants. For instance, a powder plant may be constructed not at some city but generally near some small village or town or far removed from any town or city in a location which is suitable for a powder factory. There will not be adequate housing to take care of the people who will work in that factory, which will be near enough to it so that they can go back and forth night and morning. So naturally housing must be constructed.

It is true there are some H. O. L. C. houses here and there, perhaps quite a number of them in the country, but if they are not accessible to the factories, of course they cannot be used for that purpose. National defense transcends all things else. Factories must be logically placed. Locations must be carefully selected. All housing now unoccupied should and will be used.

Now, concerning the expense of these buildings, for one thing they will be constructed under Mr. John M. Carmody and Mr. Reynolds. We know something of the work of Mr. Carmody and Mr. Reynolds. I had some experience with Mr. Carmody several years ago in my district when we set up a yardstick for rural electrification. He constructed lines and used native materials and local labor and cut the price per mile 50 percent. The Jackson County Rural Electric Membership Corporation under Mr. Carmody made a model plant, saving many thousands of dollars. He and Mr. Reynolds will do this job at the least possible expense consistent with suitable performance. I am confident that in this housing he will reduce the price to the lowest possible dollar. There will be no scandal in any buildings that are constructed in this program.

If we need national defense, of course, we need housing to house the people working in national-defense factories. If we do not need this housing, then we do not need national defense. I have not yet found anyone who has told me that we did not need national defense, and adequate national defense. I recently conducted a poll on that question in my part of Indiana and I found that 98 or 99 percent of all those interviewed believed that we did need abundant national defense. If we need it, then we need housing for the workers, because without that we would bring on an epidemic of sickness and a scourge of disease by not having proper housing facilities. Without proper housing, heat, water, and sanitation, epidemics are liable to spread throughout the country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, my main interest by this motion is to get some additional information. If the chairman of the committee will help me out a few minutes, I think we can clear up all the questions I have.

If the first place, I wish to ask the chairman if this bill calls for $150,000,000 to be used for this purpose in addition to the $100,000,000 previously provided for?

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman has reference to the $100,000,000 in the appropriation bill we passed recently?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct.

Mr. LANHAM. This is an addition to that. However, it is principally for a different purpose.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On page 8 of the testimony I find where Admiral Moreell makes this statement:

> Well, if we took care of all the needs, Congressman SCHAFER, as indicated by the survey, the $150,000,000 would not meet it.

The question in my mind is, what additional needs not covered by this bill and the previously provided $100,000,000 does the admiral have reference to? In other words, should we expect within the next 6 or 8 or 10 months, based on our present defense program, another bill asking for fifty or one hundred or one hundred and fifty million dollars to make up this deficit to which the admiral refers? Can the gentleman give up any information on that?

Mr. LANHAM. As a matter of fact, I hope nothing further will be necessary after this bill has been enacted. However, the statement has been made by those in charge that all of the funds available for housing will not be sufficient to meet the need, and it is going to take strict economy. For instance, in addition to the housing needs set out for the Army on page 65 of the hearings by Major Wilson, the Army estimates it will need 40,000 additional units. Then there are 120,000 units needed in the matter of the civilian workers, which will make 160,000 units needed at this time. The gentleman can very readily see, inasmuch as that is exclusive of the $100,000,000 appropriated the other day, that it will take quite a bit of economy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This is some of the information which I desired to develop. In other words, I understand from the chairman's statement that the 160,000 living units will be required in addition to the 65,950 set forth on page 15 of the hearings. Is that correct? You have referred to 160,000 dwelling units that will be needed.

Mr. LANHAM. That page has to do primarily with the Navy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Please do not misunderstand me. This is what I am trying to find out. What do you say is the dwelling-unit need for the Army and the Navy, based on the two pages I have referred to in the hearings?

Mr. LANHAM. I think they are substantially as set forth in this bill. I do not know of the other, because I am not advised as to just what the needs of the Navy Department are concerning these details.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will yield, I will give you the information.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, wait a minute, please.

Mr. LANHAM. I am advised that 40,000 more units will be needed for the Army than is shown on page 65 of the hearings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We have had reference here in the hearings and in the statement of the chairman to 160,000 units.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Are the 65,950 units referred to on page 15 of the hearings included in that 160,000 to which the chairman has referred?

Mr. LANHAM. They are not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That would give a total in round figures of 226,000 units now in sight, as I recall. According to my quick calculations, on a basis of $3,000 per living unit, that calls for $678,000,000. In other words, we are approaching three-quarters of a billion dollars in this program.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will in a moment. In other words, the $100,000,000 that has been appropriated, plus this $150,000,000 here authorized, would be only the first step—only a drop in the bucket. It is proposed to spend almost three-quarters of a billion dollars by the Government in the housing field.

F. H. A. FACILITIES AVAILABLE

It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are making a mistake in not arranging for this job to be done through the facilities of the F. H. A. insofar as that would be possible. Certainly most of this building could have been financed in that manner by private capital. It would be just as reasonable to grant private investors amortization privileges in connection with the building and operation of these houses as it is to grant them to those who will build the plants and manufacturing facilities to carry on the defense program and where there will be employed those workers for whom the housing is being provided. Certainly, in every way possible, we should encourage investment by private citizens and relieve the Federal Treasury in every way possible of the terrific drain now imposed upon it.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said in the last few moments about the cost of this program. It is a part of the program for national defense. That program is to prepare and train men to defend America, to provide instrumentalities of defense, to build ships, airplanes, and other equipment for defense. That program means to be ready for any emergency. For my part, if this building program costs $250,000,000, or even $1,000,000,000, it will be cheap, if by means of that preparation it will save the lives of any of the boys of America. If our program of national defense will so prepare us that America will not be attacked, any sum, however large, will be money well spent. I wish to call attention briefly to certain housing conditions in my district in connection with the defense program.

The gentleman from Wisconsin has referred to the present ownership of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. That plant is in my district. I do not know where that ownership is and I do not care. I know that until within the last few months the plant was owned by the Huntington heirs, and I know that that stock has been on sale recently under the approval of the Securities and Exchange Commission. What matters is that that yard builds ships. That is what concerns me. It is the largest plant in this hemisphere, and one of the largest in the world. During the first World War it was engaged practically in its entirety in building ships of war. At the present time at least one battleship and several airplane carriers are being constructed at that yard, and I understand six or seven more carriers will be built under a contract just made. You must build ships where the plant is prepared to build them.

You cannot build your shipways on the Mississippi River or construct airplane carriers at inland points for service on the ocean. You must adopt and use existing facilities or the program cannot go ahead. I was at Newport News in the last war. I know the difficulties then. I know that throughout the Nation when influena came it levied a frightful toll. I know that we must have additional facilities at Newport News for the men who will be brought in to help build these ships. They will be skilled men from districts throughout the United States. They must work there in order to help carry on that great work within the shortest period of time. I do not want your men there without adequate preparation for their comfort and health. Otherwise they will not stay and the work will not proceed. Whether the facilities are permanent or temporary does not concern me, but they must be facilities of such magnitude—they must be facilities so prepared—that we shall not have as applicants irresponsible, unskilled men, or men who may desire to obstruct or commit sabotage. We must have the best men that can be found to carry on this work, and this work is needed. In order to procure and retain the men you need, you must have the facilities contemplated by this bill.

Fort Eustis is in my district. It embraces an area of about 12,000 acres of land owned by the Government, formerly used but later reserved for temporary emergencies. Fort Eustis needs these facilities for buildings must be replaced. Langley Field needs facilities such as are provided here.

If this work is to go on, we must provide, immediately, the homes in which the workers are to stay. You cannot and you should not conscript labor. It is necessary to prepare homes where the workers may live in comfort. I saw those temporary facilities in the time of the World War. They were necessary then, but they are vastly more necessary now. Consider for a moment the city of Newport News. Every house is occupied. There are no empty houses. They must be provided. We were prepared normally to take care of less than 10,000 shipyard employees; 12,000 men are employed now. In order to carry forward the work the country needs, the personnel must be increased immediately to 18,000. You cannot wait. There must be action now. We can build the ships you need if you help us to house the workers. Tomorrow will not do; it must be done now. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BALL].

Mr. BALL. Mr. Chairman, I have profound affection for the gentleman from Wisconsin, I admire him, I admire his forthright attitude; but I think that at this particular time he is a little bit on the wrong track. I am not going to refer to a Milwaukee newspaper. The gentleman referred to a long and remarkable speech of Abraham Lincoln's. In return I should like to refer to something that Lincoln said that we might all burn into our hearts at this minute. Lincoln said:

> I do the very best I know how, the very best I can, and I mean to keep on doing it until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won't amount to anything. If the end brings we out wrong 10 angels swearing I was right would make no difference.

Mr. Chairman, we are confronted with an emergency. We have voted billions of dollars for national defense and we have been somewhat heedless in our way of doing it. We have not thought too much of how we were going to do it. We are now confronted with the problem of housing these people, of finding suitable places for them and their families to live. I firmly believe this bill meets the need. The gentleman from Wisconsin said something about Newport News. Yesterday afternoon I was in Newport News. I saw that great plant which has recently expanded and is about to expand again, and I saw, too, the monument erected by the founder of that great plant, Collis P. Huntington. If I recall rightly, he said, and it is embossed there in stone:

> We build ships here. We build good ships here, at a profit if we can, at a loss if we must, but always good ships.

That, I believe, is the spirit of that splendid plant.

In my own district we have problems. We have a rapidly expanding industry there, and I know what these people need and the houses that they must have to live in. I believe the pending bill honestly tries to face the problem and to handle it in an efficient and sensible way.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time in which to ask several questions of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds which have risen in my mind relative to this bill. I appreciate the little colloquy we had earlier in the afternoon, but there is further information I would like to have. On page 7 of the bill, section 8 reads as follows:

> The Administrator is authorized to utilize employees and facilities of the Federal Works Agency.

Under the interpretation of this particular section, is it possible to employ W. P. A. labor in this construction?

Mr. LANHAM. Well, it says, "any Federal agency" or any "local public agency," and I suppose the Administrator would be authorized under this to utilize employees or facilities of any agency.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am thinking of an intended housing project under this bill in my own district in Connecticut, where there is unfortunately quite a large W. P. A. registration. I am wondering if it would be possible under this bill to employ some of those W. P. A. men, or men on relief, at the expense of organized labor or skilled workmen who are not enrolled on the W. P. A.

Mr. LANHAM. As a matter of fact, there are certain services that the W. P. A. workers might well render. However, it is the policy of those in charge of the administration of this measure to use the prevailing wage scale and not in any way to militate against either skilled or unskilled labor insofar as they can carry out their respective functions.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman cannot give me assurances that such will not be done. He simply believes that it will not be the course of procedure?

Mr. LANHAM. I may say that there would be no objection to putting an amendment in this bill with reference to the prevailing-wage proposal, but the gentlemen who are to administer that and who appeared before the committee stated that it was their intention to do so any way and that that was their policy.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. I think the gentleman will find that this work will be done generally by contract and these contracts are drawn to protect the Government's interest. In view of that fact I cannot see how it would be possible to use W. P. A. labor because they have to have skilled labor to build these buildings. This legislation permits the Administrator to utilize such help, as, for instance, experienced mechanical, engineering, or other men affiliated with W. P. A. works who have had to do with construction and building. It does not have any reference at all to using any part of that employee personnel.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the gentleman's reply has given me the assurance I want.

Mr. LANHAM. Of course, it is not intended to use the unskilled men to take the place of the skilled, but there will probably be work of some character for all kinds of labor.

Mr. AUSTIN. If I may, I would like to ask the gentleman one other question. At the beginning of the gentleman's address this morning with reference to this bill I understood him to say it was the purpose of the committee and the wish of the committee that when these men, these employees, men from the Army and Navy as well as civilians, enter these houses, suitable facilities will be provided, by which I presume the gentleman means heat, lighting, possibly hospital accommodations, an adequate water supply, and all of those things? I presume that is what the gentleman had in mind.

Mr. LANHAM. That is what I had reference to, decent housing in reference to health, sanitation, and so forth. In the selective-service bill the other day there was an amendment adopted by the House, and it was the gentleman's amendment, that these draftees should not be placed in the various camps until such facilities were made available. That is one of the very things that makes speed necessary in connection with this civilian housing program.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, the details of the measure now before us and the general plan of operation have been explained quite completely, I think, by the previous speakers, so I just want to make a general observation or two.

This bill provides for the authorization of an appropriation of $150,000,000 for emergency defense housing. It is not contemplated that the $150,000,000 will be in any way sufficient to take care of all the defense housing necessitated by our preparedness program. The fact of the matter is that it is expected that private capital will take care of practically two-thirds or perhaps a much larger percentage of the necessary defense housing, and we will not need to put further Government money into it. The chief function, as I understand, of the coordinator of the advisory commission of the National Council of Defense is to cooperate with the different private and semipublic agencies all over the country in order to get enough housing for these emergency purposes, but in spite of all that attempted coordination we can easily see that in certain instances and in many instances it would be impossible to get private capital interested in housing. Therefore, it leaves us with two avenues open. One is to give private capital a subsidy so that this necessary housing can be built, and the other is for the Government itself to go into it.

In connection with the efforts of the Coordinator, I call your attention in the hearings to the various communications and telegrams coming from the United States Association of Real Estate Boards, from the National Association of Building Owners and Managers, and from the National Association of Housing Associations, showing that they have been cooperating in every respect with the Coordinator here in order that we can get enough defense housing. I believe I can say without any fear of contradiction that each of these agencies has done everything it possibly can to help in the defense program, and in effect approves the proposition that is now before us. Therefore, this $150,000,000 will by no means take care of all the emergency housing, but we are hopeful that that will be all the Government will have to invest in addition to the $100,000,000 that has already been appropriated.

All of you know that the Committee on Appropriations came in here before an authorization had been passed by this House with a bill appropriating $100,000,000. The Advisory Commission went before the Committee on Appropriations and proved the urgency of the proposition, so that the Committee on Appropriations itself was convinced of the necessity for this action even before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds acted upon it.

In this measure we have thrown around the governmental agencies some restrictions, some safeguards, so that the money will not be spent carelessly or recklessly and so that they will not go on a wild spending spree, or anything like that. We have also provided in this bill for the Government to recoup to a large extent all the money that is being spent.

All of us who have had any experience with the Treasury Department or the Public Buildings Administration know that they are very conservative when it comes to spending money and that they get a dollar's worth for every dollar spent.

Mr. Chairman, this House has passed in the last several months every emergency defense proposition that has been presented to it that has had any merit whatever. I feel certain that the members of this committee should be convinced beyond the question of a doubt that this is another necessary defense measure. I believe it will be helpful in the preparedness program. I think it is practical, I think it is economical, and I have no compunction whatever about giving the bill as it now stands my wholehearted support. I hope it will be passed without any question. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House to provide housing facilities for persons engaged in national-defense activities, and their families, in those localities where it is found that an acute shortage of housing exists or impends which would impede national-defense activities, has my wholehearted support. I commend the chairman and members of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for having so quickly recognized the seriousness of the situation and provided the remedy that is contained in this bill.

The Members of Congress who live in industrial areas where much of the work is now being done to build up our national defense are aware of the need of legislation of this character. It is my privilege to represent a district which includes some of the most important national-defense industries to be found anywhere within the United States. I refer to the great shipbuilding plant at Camden, the munition works and oil refineries along the Delaware River that constitute some of the greatest industries of their kind to be found anywhere. Similar industries including the Philadelphia Navy Yard are located on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware River. In addition to this is the immense R. C. A. plant, also located in Camden, N. J., which is engaged in producing many intricate and important devices for use in the operation of aircraft. This is only a limited description of the importance of this industrial area with respect to our national-defense program.

Already plans are being laid to have three shifts of workers each day in the shipyard at Camden and at others in that locality. This means that the number of workers will run into thousands. They are coming to this great shipbuilding area from all over the country. The same is true in other shipbuilding centers in other parts of the country. These new workers with their families must be properly housed. The housing facilities now existing are not sufficient. If something is not done it will mean distress to these workers and their families, or it will mean that they will not be able to take up the work in this important part of our national-defense program.

During the last war we had a most distressing experience in the Camden, N. J., area, resulting from lack of sufficient housing for the influx of workers that came into our city. As a resident of that city I was in a position to observe the unsatisfactory conditions that resulted. Rents went sky high. This in itself was sufficient to bring about much distress, but it was even more serious than that because there were not enough houses to take care of the people. Families were doubled up and others required to live under conditions that were neither wholesome nor proper. Shipyard workers were not the only ones who experienced the inconvenience of living in improper quarters and paying exorbitant rents. It affected the whole community. The conditions became so unbearable that it became necessary for the Governor of New Jersey to take cognizance of the situation and direct the county prosecutors to take action against real-estate profiteers. I was prosecutor of Camden County at that time and the task was in my hands. It was only when aggressive action was taken that we were able to break down the exorbitant rents that were being charged. But even this did not relieve the distress that was incident to lack of sufficient houses. This latter condition was only relieved when the Federal Government, through a housing agency that was set up, built two villages in proximity to the shipyards to house the workers.

With respect to the present and increasing need for housing facilities in the Camden and all other shipbuilding areas I direct attention to the testimony of John Green, international president of the Industrial Union, Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, given before the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at a meeting of that committee held on September 3 last. Mr. Green said:

> My principal purpose, Mr. Chairman, in coming here today is to tell the Members of Congress that there is a serious and urgent need for a cheap, comfortable, and well-planned housing for workers in defense industries, and to ask that action be taken immediately to remedy this situation.

Continuing, he said:

> Rents are being raised in some cities so rapidly that workers are deprived of the benefits of the steadier employment which the defense program has afforded them. In some cases landlords are grossly exploiting wage earners in defense industries, not merely by exorbitant rent raises but by forcing tenants to make their own repairs. And in every city where workers are busy on defense orders you find the old home-buying racket revived. Workers are being forced by threats of eviction, or of rent increases, to begin buying homes which they don't want, or which they cannot afford to pay for.
> As a result of the scarcity of decent homes at fair rentals in almost all industrial centers, workers are being forced to double up or take in boarders. This creates much overcrowding and an unhealthy and uncomfortable situation all around.
> My union, like so many more, has been obliged to accept the responsibility for recruiting many new workers in order to increase output by having three full shifts on all jobs. I will not go into the difficulties of finding skilled mechanics for defense jobs but must say that in many cases it will be absolutely impossible to get the people we need most just because housing conditions are so bad in the cities where shipyard workers have to live.

And then, with respect to the effect on wage and other labor conditions, he said:

> My union cannot be responsible for recruiting new workers from now on unless we can hold out some definite promise to these men that it will be possible for them to bring their families with them and be able to live in decent surroundings and that all their earnings will not go to the landlords. I emphasize this further fact: That the labor movement has been asked to avoid industrial disputes during the period of the emergency. Unions have been asked, as patriotic citizens, to refrain from asking for wage increases at this time.
> The Camden local of my union will undertake negotiations with its employer for a new contract within a few days. As a responsible leader of a responsible union, I wish to be reasonable and moderate in my demands. But how can I tell my members in Camden to be reasonable when rents are going up and when they are being obliged to lay out all they are making to buy homes they do not want in order to find a place to live?
> The real-estate board in Camden will admit, I believe, that rents have gone up at least 10 percent in the past few months. It is our observation that rents have actually gone up more than that. How in the world can a negotiating committee for a union tell its members to be patriotic when a condition of this sort exists?

In emphasizing the need for additional housing facilities in the Camden area, he said:

> Another point I want to drive home is that you do not get the whole picture by reading figures about rents.
> The fact to bear in mind about cities like Camden is that there are today absolutely no vacancies in homes that workers can afford to rent or to buy. There are almost no vacancies, of any kind, at any rentals, high or low, in Camden. We are not asking for subsidies or guaranties such as have been asked for by many corporations before they would take defense orders or build ships. We are only asking that the Government use its facilities to help us get the things that we as workers must have if we are able to do the job that the Government and the people want us to do.

The morale of industrial workers in defense industries is a question that cannot be overlooked. It is a problem that the Members of Congress must not overlook. It is a problem which must be dealt with quickly and concretely.

This testimony of Mr. Green based upon a careful survey that was made by him shows plainly and forcibly the need for legislation, such as that which is now before us, to provide adequate housing facilities for workers engaged in the national-defense program. Mr. Green spoke not only in the interest of the workers but also with a keen desire to have our defense work proceed with the fullest efficiency. I wish the time allotted to me was sufficient to read his entire testimony to you. Every line and word is important. It should be read in its entirety by the membership of this House.

I do hope that the Members will realize that the need is urgent. The condition that is being created is similar to that which we experienced in the World War. With each day it grows worse, and will continue to do so until the Federal Government takes hold of the problem and does something about it. The bill now before the House is a step toward that end. It should have the support of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOODWIN].

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Chairman, in the course of my remarks this afternoon I will endeavor to outline and touch briefly on salient facts concerning our highly concentrated population and industries and how a readjustment of the situation would benefit our national defense and our future well-being as a nation.

Many times when traveling through the eastern part of our country, especially the middle East, I have wondered what would happen in case of a military invasion. That thought first occurred to me when, as a boy, I saw the great preparedness motion picture, The Battle Cry of Peace, shown throughout the country in 1916. During the last 2 years we have seen the air arm of the military forces of all nations grow in strength and reach. Even so, it is highly improbable that a foreign foe could land troops in America by air sufficient for occupation and give them the very necessary protection and support. But it is conceivable that a hostile force could—at least in the not too far distant future—strike such continued nuisance blows at this vital and defenseless area that they would be highly effective.

Effective, why? Well, for a number of reasons:

This area, the Middle-Atlantic Seaboard, embraces the area of greater New York, Providence, Boston, the rich industrial, densely populated valleys of the Connecticut, the Susquehanna, and the Delaware, including Greater Philadelphia, and Wilmington, Baltimore, Washington—our National Capital and shrine—and the Hampton Roads area. In this part of the country we do not have very many highways, no auxiliary bridges and tubes, at the best no surplus of traffic arteries in proportion to the vehicles and the population; nor do we have too many rail lines, and one of these—the electrified one—is particularly susceptible to paralytic attack for very obvious reasons. Furthermore, all of these cities are located in terrain that is not, by nature, friendly—in many sections it still resembles a vast wilderness. Should these traffic arteries be smashed or badly harassed, traffic of all sorts, including much of which would be vital to our national defense, might easily find itself in a condition of chaos.

It should also be remembered that a vast section of our populace is rapidly becoming cliff dwellers; or would it be better to say, apartment house occupants? Well, it is pretty much the same, anyway. All of which leads up to one big fact, which is that in our already heavily over populated area the situation is becoming increasingly acute.

This high concentration of population calls for a high-powered system of supply—a system that functions in normal times without a hitch. But do you remember the play which a year ago Orson Welles had on the air? In the play itself you no doubt recall that New York and Philadelphia were cities of the dead not because the Martians had obliterated them but because of pestilence which came all too easily to the trapped, beleaguered populace. Think also of what happened to Rotterdam and what is happening to London today.

Stretching back beyond the seaboard are other vast industrial areas and large cities. These are only slightly less vulnerable to attack and for similar reasons. Not until one gets more than 600 miles inland is their any marked difference in the problem. Only in Ohio and westward do we have the flat, open country, a network of main and auxiliary traffic arteries—rail, pipe line, highways, electric lines—a multitude of small towns, many with their own small industrial plants, surrounded by much tillable soil so that the area is largely self-supporting. True, in these States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Illinois, some of the same problems of excessive concentration of population exist as on the coast but to a much less vital degree.

These problems are not unique, in fact they are the result of very normal conditions and trends, factors that have existed for many years both here and abroad.

Today we are living in a new era. Transportation has speeded up; our people are even more literate, much more widely read, and more keenly alert to happenings outside their own neighborhoods. It is now possible for us to live out in the country, up to 20 miles or so from the factory where we work, or from our business; live where the children can have a yard with green grass to play on; where the air is uncontaminated with industrial gases; where the water is pure and sweet; where the living is reasonable and wholesome. In many localities with their small but busy industries, living is even more convenient. It is not necessary that our people live in these crowded congested surroundings with many social problems.

Did you read the excellent speech made by Mr. P. A. Olson of Story City, Iowa, on The Advantages of Life in a Small Town and inserted in the RECORD under date of July 9? It is worth-while reading in this connection.

What does all of this have to do with national defense? First, the safety of our population; second, the safety of our industries, especially our essential ones; third, unraveling of many of our transportation problems and the lessening of the hazard of an attack (or sabotage) to our industrial system; fourth, a better and more wholesome life with more hope for the future; fifth, a more hopeful future for our local governments, freed from temptation to corruption and graft.

We must attack without delay the problem of our population and overconcentrated real-estate wealth. We should help those immeshed to unsnarl themselves and escape, that the entire country may be stronger and our defense forces can be deployed to meet an aggressor in any section. This will take profound thinking by practical people. It is a real defense need. The sooner it is solved, the better for all of us. Let us keep these things in mind when we vote on the pending bill, H. R. 10412.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CAMP].

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is any opposition to this bill from any Member of the House who is familiar with the bill and who favors national defense. On yesterday a group from this committee went down to Newport News and Norfolk. I wish that every Member of this House could be familiar with the condition that exists there, because I believe the same condition exists in every city or town in this country where the national-defense program is now going forward. At the great shipbuilding yards of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., they are now building some 8 or 10 large ships, one being a large battleship, one being an aircraft carrier, and others being cruisers. There are working in that great plant at this time over 12,500 mechanics and other workers. The city manager of the city, the members of the chamber of commerce, and other prominent citizens implored and begged us to give this matter our most solemn and careful attention.

They tell me there that every room, every garret, and every cellar within 10 miles of that place is filled, and so crowded that living conditions cannot be tolerable when winter sets in for a great many of these workers. The personnel manager of that plant told me that last month he employed 813 new skilled men of a certain class, I believe he said machinists, and that during the same month 512 of the same men left him because they did not have housing for their families. It is a question of housing at these places if the defense program can be speeded up at all. They expect to increase their workers to 18,600, but they cannot increase them now because they have nowhere for the workers to live.

I cannot understand the argument that has been made against this bill. If we expect to build ships we have to have a place for the men who build them to live. Anybody who wants to build ships will want those men housed, and I take it that opposition to this bill comes from those who are simply against national defense.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMP. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I do not believe any Member of this House is against national defense.

Mr. CAMP. I am certainly glad to hear the gentlewoman say that.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. But I do think that we have not——

Mr. CAMP. I yielded for a question, please.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. All right, I will ask a question. Is it fair to ask the members of the National Guard to leave their families and then let these men go down there and take their families with them at national expense to live in $3,000 Government-built houses and make high wages, $15 a day or so?

Mr. CAMP. The National Guard will be housed. I should like to reply to the gentlewoman in this wise. In my experience as a legislator, either in this Congress or in the State legislature, I have never referred to the fact that I served in the Army. I served in the ranks most of the time I was in the Army, over 2 years. No patriotic man expects to carry his family with him into the Army. That is out of the question, but those who are not drafted cannot be expected to be taken away from their homes unless you provide living conditions for them.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMP. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. The lady just mentioned that these men would get $15 a day. Does the gentleman know of any craft of men working in munitions plants or anywhere else that get an average of $15 a day?

Mr. CAMP. I never heard of it myself.

Mr. WOOD. The fact of the matter is that men in the building trades do not average $6 a day.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. In the last war some of them made $50 a day, and I know that.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMP. I must decline to yield further.

I want to say that the personnel manager of this plant said, "We need housing here for our colored helpers as much as for anyone else." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have always had, and I now have, a profound respect for the ability and patriotism of my good friend, the chairman of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. I have stood on this floor and fought to see that the men who are called to the service of the country have proper housing facilities. The one thing which I wish to stress in the remarks which I make now and shall make later is that I want to see this program of national defense, housing and otherwise, carried out without unnecessary waste or extravagance.

This emergency does not call for the useless waste of the taxpayer's money to achieve the desired objective of adequate national defense. When the United States entered the last war the Federal debt was only $1,000,000,000; now it is close to fifty billions, and even more than this vast sum, when contingent liabilities are considered. I insist that this is no time to throw away the taxpayers' money; but that whatever the exegencies require, whether housing, camps, hospitals, or cantonments, the sums appropriated be used for the purpose intended with as little waste as possible. I invite the Members to glance at the record of 23 years ago and see what it reveals as a warning to those who have brought in demands for more billions to be spent without restraint. The testimony of responsible persons given before investigating committees following the World War of 23 years ago shows a reckless disregard only equalled by the boondoggling, spendthrift, reckless waste of public money during the past 7 years. I would have you know that it is the same irresponsible undercover group that will, unless restrained, boondoggle away billions intended for national defense. Under the building program of 23 years ago, carload after carload of lumber, of hardware, of cement, and building material were dumped on the ground to rot, rust, and harden. Loads of finished lumber were dumped into mud holes for the purpose of repairing roads. Trucks were driven over lumber to destroy it. Finishing lumber and flooring in bundles were never untied, but according to the testimony of reliable witnesses, hauled away and burned. Colonel Oury testified that he employed his entire regiment of 3,000 men a week in carrying waste lumber off the drill ground. Tons of nails were hauled to the rivers and thrown away. Unbroken rolls of roofing materials were hauled away and burned.

Mr. Chairman, I say in the light of what the new dealers have wasted during the past 7 years and the resulting tax load now pressing heavily upon the shoulders of our citizens, they have a right to demand that this Congress shall protect them in the use made of the more than $14,000,000,000 made available for national defense. Real national defense calls for straight thinking and intelligent action. It requires the benefit of leadership that knows the value of a dollar because of experience of actually earning a dollar. The record of extravagance and waste of those who have spent over $60,000,000,000 in 7 years; who have made it necessary to place 10 tax bills on the statute books, while at the same time running huge deficits and putting the citizens further and further into debt, are the same persons who are to control billions of the money intended for defense.

Mr. Chairman, there is a very practicable question involved here. I feel that in view of the colossal debt of over $50,000,000,000 and faced as the people are with billions more for national defense that the President ought to cooperate with the taxpayers in their effort to shoulder the burden. Has the executive department cut expenses? I say to you that thousands of political appointees have been put upon the Federal pay roll, who in the present emergency, could be dispensed with. They are not of the indispensable type, except for political purposes.

Mr. Chairman, it is claimed that the Army officials should be absolutely relied on to make wise use of the billions appropriated. This is what we were told during the last war, but experience ought to measure our responsibility as stewards of the taxpayer's billions. Look at the record of the waste of money during the last war, even in the smaller items of expenditure:

There were ordered 41,100,152 pairs of shoes and deliveries made of 32,227,450 pairs, for 3,513,837 men.

There were purchased and delivered 500,326 double sets of harness and 110,828 single sets. There were 580,182 horses, of which only 67,948 were shipped overseas, and of the total number of horses 96,000 died.

The record shows that 945,000 saddles were bought, and yet there were in all only 86,418 Cavalry horses.

There were bought 2,850,853 halters, 585,615 saddle bags, 1,637,199 horse brushes, 2,033,204 nose bags, 195,000 branding irons, 1,148,364 horse covers. Those who purchased these articles did not forget to be well spurred, for the record shows that they bought 712,510 complete sets of spur straps, about 36 for each officer.

The taxpayers will willingly sacrifice now as they did then, but they will be in no mood to submit to political trifling in this matter of national defense. The people, including the 10,000,000 unemployed, will not see their birthright to liberty boondoggled away. The citizens now know that after the expenditure of $7,000,000,000 for national defense, they are without the planes, the tanks, the rifles, the uniforms, the heavy guns, the tents, and other equipment which such an expenditure should have made available. I stand ready to go as far as any Member on this floor for adequate national defense, but I shall exert every effort possible to prevent a repetition of the waste, fraud, deceit that characterized the political program of the World War of 23 years ago. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time on this side.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 9 minutes.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I feel sure that this House wants to cooperate with the committee and pass this legislation.

I have always lived in an industrial section, and I have been in the manufacturing business myself for over 30 years, and had worked in industry long before that. I know something of the problems of the man who has to work in industrial plants. I am somewhat familiar with the conditions around camps and shipyards and arsenals; and here in the last 6 months we have authorized appropriations of over $10,000,000,000 for a national-defense program. This is going to mean the enlargement of all the facilities that are owned by the United States itself, such as navy yards, arsenals, and other Government factories, in order to carry out this program. The enlargement of these industries means, naturally, an increase by thousands and thousands of the number of workers in these various organizations.

Surely, if this House authorized the expansion of these industrial plants, whether they are arsenals or navy yards, the Congress should provide, insofar as humanly possible, living facilities for the men to be employed.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the statement of the member of our committee from Georgia and the statement of our colleague the able and distinguished gentlewoman from Illinois, may I ask if it is not just as reasonable for the Government to provide housing facilities for the families of the members of the National Guard called into active Federal service and the drafted men who are to be forced into the active military service to serve for $21 a month, and not $9 a day and more which most of the navy yard and shipyard skilled mechanics receive? Why cannot these navy yard and shipyard workers in the national-defense expansion program, who will receive from $10 to $15 a day, leave their families at home, if they cannot obtain housing facilities for them near their work, the same as these soldiers who volunteer or are drafted and receive $21 to $30 a month have to do?

Mr. HOLMES. You know, my good colleage from Wisconsin is a great, big, jovial, good-natured, splendid Representative, and I think the world of him—otherwise I would not have yielded to him. There may be some merit in the statement which he has made, but, on the other hand, when we hire men from his district in Wisconsin—and this is still a free country—and when these employees that are in his district in Wisconsin decide they want to come to Boston or to Washington or go to Newport News or go to Springfield, where the Springfield Arsenal is located, or the Philadelphia Navy Yard, owned by the Government, or the Boston Navy Yard, owned by the Government, surely he would want us here in the East to provide suitable housing facilities, not only for the worker but also for the family, including the children of that worker. I know the gentleman would want that, and it is not a proper comparison, and it has not anything to do with this picture at all because we are faced here with an extreme emergency, and it is up to the Congress to pass this legislation and get the ball started and have this work go along.

I understand the President has already allocated approximately $50,000,000 on various projects. The other day we passed in the national defense bill an appropriation for $100,000,000 for Army and Navy housing. Now, primarily that will take care of activities connected with the Army and Navy—the expansion of those facilities. Here we have another situation, where we are asking private industry to double and treble its capacity. The National Defense Commission has already authorized and placed contracts doubling and trebling the capacity of those plants, so that they now must increase their capacity in order to fulfill the Government contracts and expedite that work as much as they possibly can. It will be found in the majority of cases where these expansions take place that there will be ample private capital to carry on a program of housing in connection with these industries.

However, if private capital fails in a community, the Government, through any one of its agencies can build these homes for the benefit of the workers who are working on Government contracts for national defense.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. Yes; I yield to the lady.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I wonder if the committee considered some provision by which homes surrounding those industries and not used by workers in the defense industries might be condemned at a fixed rate, to be bought by the Government. It seems to me that would be consistent with our program of conscription of men for the Army.

Mr. HOLMES. I do not want to be so rude as to say the Government will go in and condemn homes within an area where these plant expansions are going to take place. What are we going to do with the poor people who are living in those homes? Are we going to evict them and throw them out on the street? The committee gave that very serious consideration. We considered how best we could utilize the present dwellings and the present homes located in those districts. Certainly the lady would not want to embark on a program of evicting home owners and tenants.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Oh, that is a common Government program. We condemn for roads and all sorts of Government purposes. We frequently condemn all of a farm or all the farms all the way down a new highway.

Mr. HOLMES. Of course, that is a different proposition entirely.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Condemnation for any Government purpose is certainly a well-established custom and certainly defense is a Government function.

Mr. HOLMES. But the lady would not want us to go up to the Great Lakes station, for instance, and condemn the homes of people living around there——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

TITLE I

SECTION 1. In order to provide housing for persons engaged in national-defense activities, and their families, in those areas or localities in which the President shall find that an acute shortage of housing exists or impends which would impede national-defense activities, the Federal Works Administrator (hereinafter referred to as the "Administrator"), acting through the Public Buildings Administration, is authorized:

(a) To acquire (without regard to secs. 355, as amended, 1136, as amended, and 3709 of the Revised Statutes) improved or unimproved lands or interests in lands by purchase, donation, exchange, lease (without regard to sec. 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as amended, the act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 370), or any time limit on the availability of funds for the payment of rent), or condemnation (including proceedings under the acts of August 1, 1888 (25 Stat. 357), March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1415), and February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421)).

(b) By contract or otherwise (without regard to secs. 355, as amended, 1136, as amended, and 3709 of the Revised Statutes, sec. 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), or any Federal, State, or municipal laws, ordinances, rules, or regulations relating to plans and specifications or forms of contract, the approval thereof or the submission of estimates therefor) to make surveys and investigations, plan, design, construct, remodel, extend, repair, or demolish structures, buildings, improvements, and community facilities, on lands or interests in lands acquired under the provisions of subsection (a) hereof or on other lands of the United States which may be available (transfers of which for this purpose by the Federal agency having jurisdiction thereof are hereby authorized notwithstanding any other provisions of law), provide proper approaches thereto, utilities, and transportation facilities, and procure necessary materials, supplies, articles, equipment, machinery, and portable or demountable structures, interchangeable parts or units: Provided, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used, but this proviso shall not be construed to prevent the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract: Provided, That the average cost per family dwelling unit shall not exceed the sum of $3,500, exclusive of expenses for administration, land acquisition, public utilities, and community facilities.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 6, after the word "and", strike out the remainder of the line and the words "parts or units" in line 7, and insert "do all things necessary in connection therewith to carry out the purposes of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 12, after the word "Provided", strike out down through the word "facilities", in line 15, and insert "That the cost per family dwelling unit shall not exceed an average of $3,000 for those units located within the continental United States nor an average of $4,000 for those located elsewhere, and the cost of no dwelling unit shall exceed $3,950 within the continental United States or $4,750 elsewhere, exclusive of expenses of administration, land acquisition, public utilities, and community facilities, and the aggregate cost of community facilities shall not exceed 3 percent of the total cost of all projects."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM: Page 1, line 3, strike out "Title I."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, there is only one title in this measure. That crept in by an inadvertence.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: Page 1, lines 5 and 8, after the word "national", insert "the United States."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is self-explanatory. We are told that it is essential to authorize the expenditure of this $150,000,000 from our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury in the name of national defense, in order to have the Government of the United States compete in the legitimate field of private business endeavor, to wit, the housing business.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. I assume that the gentleman intends by the term "United States" to include the Territories?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Most certainly. The language of my amendment does include the Territories.

Mr. LANHAM. And United States possessions?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, yes; it certainly does. My admendment restricts this expansive and expensive Government in the housing business to providing housing which may be found necessary to expand and strengthen the defense of the United States and its possessions and Territories. As the bill has been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, any or all of the $150,000,000 authorized can be used to provide housing facilities for workers who are not engaged in United States defense activities, but who are engaged under a program to build and strengthen the offense and the defense of belligerent foreign European nations.

Mr. Chairman, we have been informed in the committee and on the floor of the House that the $100,000,000 carried in the recent appropriation bill for national-defense housing, and this $150,000,000 authorization will not come anywhere near providing the necessary Government housing for our national-defense workers.

My amendment should therefore be adopted in order that the funds taken from our almost bankrupt United States Treasury to provide housing facilities for workers on our country's national-defense program shall be used only to provide housing for defense workers who are employed in shipbuilding and other industries and producing for the United States national-defense machine and not engaged in producing warships, airplanes, implements of war, munitions of war, and war supplies for the defense and offense of some foreign European belligerent nation which is engaged in war.

In view of the fact that it is claimed by the sponsors of this bill that this authorization of $150,000,000 and the $100,000,000 recently appropriated will not come anywhere near providing the additional housing facilities which are needed for the national-defense activities of the United States, I do not see how there can be any valid objection to my pending perfecting amendment which will insure that the $150,000,000 will be entirely used in the defense program for our country and our countrymen and not for the defense or offense program of a foreign belligerent country.

With reference to the statement of a member of my committee, the gentleman from Georgia, I am going to offer some more perfecting amendments and I hope the gentleman will support them. The gentleman indicated that anyone who opposed this bill in its present form was not in favor of national defense. I am in favor of national defense just as much as the gentleman is and perhaps more so. I realize that perhaps the most effective thing we can do in the United States in the interest of our national defense is to protect and preserve the solvency of the Federal Treasury. No bankrupt nation can defend herself from within or without. No nation which is bankrupt or almost bankrupt can successfully fight a defensive war or an offensive war. May I say to the gentleman that we need more constructive action and less flag-waving talk with reference to providing a national defense and insuring the preservation of our Republic. Mr. Chairman, may I remind the gentleman from Georgia that we read in Holy Writ: "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." With refernce to our national defense, let us demonstrate that we have the works as well as the faith. Let us have sound, constructive action as well as flag-waving oratory.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia, in support of this bill, said that it would provide necessary housing for the colored helpers in the shipyards and other defense activities down South. I sincerely hope that in the housing program provided under this bill there will be no discrimination against and segregation of the colored defense workers down South as there has been under the New Deal United States Housing Authority in the Nation's Capital and in the States below the Mason and Dixon's line.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated that we should raid our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury to provide housing facilities for the colored helpers and workers in the Southland but thinks it highly improper because the gentlewoman from Illinois suggested that they could leave their families home if they could not obtain housing for them near their place of work the same as the members of the National Guard and those who are forced into the military service under the bill which passed the House on Saturday. These volunteers and drafted soldiers will serve their country for 21 and 30 dollars a month instead of the 8, 9, 10, and 15 dollars a day which many of the civilian shipyard and other defense workers receive.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that in the interest of our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury and in the interest of our own country's national defense that the gentleman from Georgia will rise and support this amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what reason the gentleman from Wisconsin could have had for offering this particular amendment. It seems to me to be entirely superfluous and to serve no purpose whatsoever. It can do no good. My objection to it rises because of the fact that none of the preparedness measures this House has passed so far have contained these words. Were we to adopt this particular amendment, it might put this defense measure on a basis different from the others we have passed. I hope, therefore, the Committee will not agree to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 21, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Page 3, line 23, after the words "the total cost of all projects", insert "The total cost of the land shall not exceed $1,000 nor more than 20 cents a square foot."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, possibly through inadvertence as the bill now reads no limitation whatever is imposed on the amount that may be spent for land. In my own district there is an arsenal. I suppose there is not within easy walking distance a square foot of land that could be bought for less than 20 cents a foot. If the law stands as it is now, those who own any vacant real estate in that city will immediately jack up their prices and the Government will be gouged.

In Charlestown, a part of Boston, is a navy yard. It is on a promontory covered by blocks. There is probably not a house there with a square foot of lawn. From Charlestown it would be necessary to go some distance in order to get land available at a reasonable price.

I myself live on land that is assessed at 20 cents a square foot. It is in a suburb and can be reached, as it has been reached by myself in conducting my own affairs, by the use of the trolley car or the steam railroad. Land can be bought for 20 cents a foot in a suburb easily traversed now by automobile or by railroad. If you have no limit at all on the price that may be paid for land, there would be immediately offered the Government at exorbitant prices nearby land at 40 cents, 50 cents, or even a dollar a foot.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALEXANDER. At 20 cents a foot, what does the gentleman compute that to produce per acre?

Mr. LUCE. We do not buy land by the acre up my way.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If you are in a suburban area, it may be undeveloped acreage. There are approximately 43,000 square feet in an acre, which would produce $8,660 per acre at 20 cents a foot. That should be adequate.

Mr. LUCE. That should be adequate. We do not want to go beyond that. This is simply to put a limit on the price of land, which does not now appear in the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In my previous remarks I touched on this very lightly, but, as I understand the gentleman's amendment and the language on page 3 of the bill, the language as presented by the committee amendment would permit the Administrator, if he is willing to do so, to put as much as $5,000 into the cost of a 25 by 100 foot lot on which to build a $3,000 or a $4,000 home.

Mr. LUCE. That is true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no limitation at all. The bill is wide open and I think the gentleman's amendment should be written into the bill without question.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The gentleman is an esteemed member of the Banking and Currency Committee, which considers F. H. A., national housing, and other housing legislation. I am frank to recommend his amendment, since the testimony before that committee has clearly shown that one great opportunity for corruption and for waste of public money has come from the buying of options upon property adjoining any housing project.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALEXANDER. To carry the thought that I brought up a moment ago a step farther, let us take the average city lot which usually runs about 50 feet wide and about 100 to 150 feet long.

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In other words, if you have a lot 50 by 120, it will contain 6,000 square feet. At 20 cents a square foot that would give you $1,200 per lot. It seems to me that should be quite adequate.

Mr. MASON. It is more than adequate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], and he is a most able and distinguished gentleman, for whom I am sure we all have a most affectionate regard. However, the amendment he has offered will, in my opinion, militate against the accomplishment of the purposes designed by this bill in the acquisition of real estate.

In the first place, if we put in a limitation of 20 cents per square foot, then every piece of land offered to the Government will be priced at 20 cents per square foot, while a great deal of land can be bought for very much less than that figure. In that regard it would be a limitation that would cost the Government additional money.

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to tell in the various localities what land will cost. May I say that in my previous remarks I indicated the various States in which this construction would take place. The 120,000 dwelling units as contemplated for civilian workers under this measure are to be located in localities in these various States, and to specify those localities in advance, or to get the names of those places into the public record would bring about, I think, the very situation which the gentleman from Massachusetts has sought to anticipate by his amendment; that is, the publicity with reference to these places will immediately lead to speculation in land which would result in costing the Government more money. Under the circumstances, it is not wise to place this limitation in the bill, because the maximum would likely become the minimum. People would ask for their land, where this land was needed, the maximum, then we would have to resort to condemnation proceedings or something of that kind.

In the second place, we must leave the matter to the discretion of those who are to administer this act and we must manifest some confidence in them. It is no easier to say what your land standard of value shall be than it is to say what your standard shall be for the rental of dwellings, insofar as a uniform price is concerned. I think it would really militate against speedy construction which is urgently needed and desired if a limitation of this kind were placed in the bill, and in my opinion it might even cost the Government more money.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is the gentleman not underrating the ability of the Government experts who will be sent out to negotiate for this real estate? Has the gentleman ever dealt with any of these Government buyers?

Mr. LANHAM. I am not underestimating their ability.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the gentleman should have more confidence in the representatives that the Government sends out.

Mr. LANHAM. We do have confidence in them, and that is the reason we do not wish to bind them to a limitation which might lead to the expenditure of more money than would otherwise be necessary.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. I understand the bill limits or sets up a standard that an average home shall not cost more than $3,000.

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct; and we do not expect them to cost that much.

Mr. MASON. If we set up a standard by which the lot upon which a $3,000 house is to be built shall not cost more than $1,000 or $1,200, it seems to me we are setting up a standard that ought to be adopted and that we should not go beyond that.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say to the gentleman there are certain isolated sections where land will not cost anything like that; but if you set that standard up in this bill, those who own this land will say, "Give me 20 cents a square foot for the land."

Mr. MASON. Then by the same argument, when you set up a standard of $3,000 for the house, in certain localities the house could probably be built for $1,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MASON) there were—ayes 22, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. As used in this act (a) the term "persons engaged in national-defense activities" shall include (1) enlisted men in the naval or military services of the United States; (2) employees of the United States in the Navy and War Departments assigned to duty at naval or military reservations, posts, or bases; (3) workers engaged or to be engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national defense; (b) the term "Federal agency" means any executive department or office (including the President), independent establishment, commission, board, bureau, division, or office in the executive branch of the United States Government, or other agency of the United States, including corporations in which the United States owns all or a majority of the stock, directly or indirectly.

SEC. 3. The sum of $150,000,000, to remain available until expended, is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of this act in accordance with the authority therein contained and for administrative expenses in connection therewith: Provided, however, That the Administrator is authorized to reimburse, from funds which may be appropriated pursuant to the authority of this act, the sum of $3,300,000 to the emergency funds made available to the President under the act of June 11, 1940, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 588), and the sum of $6,700,000 to the emergency funds made available to the President under the Military Appropriation Act, 1941, approved June 13, 1940 (Public, No. 611).

SEC. 4. When the President shall have declared that the emergency declared by him on September 8, 1939, to exist has ceased to exist (a) the authority contained in section 1 hereof shall terminate except with respect to contracts on projects previously entered into or undertaken and court proceedings then pending, and (b) property acquired or constructed under this act shall be disposed of as promptly as may be advantageous under the circumstances and in the public interest.

SEC. 5. Where any Federal agency has funds for the provision of housing in connection with national-defense activities it may, in its discretion, make transfers of those funds, in whole or in part, to the Administrator, and the funds so transferred shall be available for, but only for, any or all of the objects and purposes of and in accordance with all the authority and limitations contained in this act, and for administrative expenses in connection therewith.

SEC. 6. Moneys derived from rental or operation of property acquired or constructed under the provisions of this act shall be returned to the appropriation authorized by this act and shall be available for expenses of operation and maintenance, including administrative expenses in connection therewith.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 25, after "therewith", insert "and the unexpended balance of the moneys so deposited shall be covered into the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year as miscellaneous receipts."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this bill to provide housing for defense workers is, of course, an important and necessary piece of legislation. I presume it will pass the House with hardly any dissent at all. There are one or two remarks I want to make in connection with its consideration, however.

It has been provided in the bill that construction work shall be under the Federal Works Agency, which probably means under the Public Buildings Administration. Had we still intact, as we ought to have, the organization of the P. W. A., the handling of this matter would be much easier than it is, in my judgment. There was an organization all set up ready to go, able to do all sorts of jobs that are going to be important in connection with national defense. In the last year between 9,000 and 10,000 competent, experienced, trained, and loyal persons have had to be let go from that organization because we did not have the foresight to say that it should have been continued, and now, without in any way saying "I told you so," I would just like to remark that I offered an amendment to the bill last year which would have continued it, and I think it should have been done.

The second thing I want to speak about is this: While we are thinking about national defense we would do well to consider also the question of the morale of the American people. The spirit of those people is going to depend in large part upon how convinced they are that their Congress still cares deeply about what happens to them. It seems to me that it is a shame that there has not been reported out a rule for a bill to provide just a $5,000,000 appropriation to enable the payment of necessary subsidies which would make possible $150,000,000 worth of loans for low-cost housing projects under the United States Housing Authority. I think that should have been done long since. I think it ought to be done before we adjourn.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. As a matter of fact, one of the necessary elements of a strong government is a sound, affirmative morale on the part of the people.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Exactly. I thank the gentleman.

I know what the criticisms against the United States Housing Authority have been, and on the basis of it being understood that I am generally very much in favor of this slum-clearance program, I can paint for you a rather ridiculous picture of the financing provisions. For example, Congress first authorizes the sale of so many hundred million dollars worth of bonds—we will say for the sake of argument $500,000,000 worth of bonds—by the United States Housing Authority. All right; the Housing Authority goes out and sells those bonds. Most of them are sold to banks. The banks buy them with demand deposits which they write up on their books when they purchase the bonds, the bonds being eligible collateral for the issuance of Federal Reserve notes, so that the banks really exchange a certain number of dollars of the Nation's credit for bonds of the United States Housing Authority whose face value is the same number of dollars. To put it more simply, the banks just create the money with which to buy the bonds.

Then with the credit obtained by the sale of the bonds the United States Housing Authority makes loans to the local housing authorities which are secured by the bonds of those local authorities and on which there must be a rate of interest paid equal to, I believe, half a percent more than the going Federal rate which, of course, is paid by the United States Housing Authority on the bonds it has outstanding. Then, in order to be sure that the United States Housing Authority gets its money back, Congress makes appropriations and subsidies are paid to the local housing authorities equal to the going Federal rate plus 1 percent, over a 60-year period, which is approximately enough to liquidate both the interest and principal. These loans obviously are secured by the fact that the lending agency, that is, the Federal Government, guarantees to pay to the borrowing agency enough money to enable the borrowing agency to pay the lender back again. In addition, the loan is secured by the property, namely, the houses that are to be constructed.

Under such circumstances the credit involved in these loans rests directly upon the power of appropriation of Congress plus the value of the property itself. Therefore I should like to know why the bonds were sold by the United States Housing Authority in the first place and what necessity there is for the sale of those bonds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. These bonds that were sold by the United States Housing Authority were, after all, a means of inducing the banks to create credit or check-book money for the use of a Government agency. The original creation of money is a function of sovereignty and should always be performed by government anyway. Hence, where secured loans are to be made the Government of the United States is, by its very nature, always in possession of the credit necessary to make such loans. Now, if these bonds had not been sold by the United States Housing Authority, but if the financing of these enterprises had been carried on exactly like a private bank would have done it, then you would not have had to charge the local Housing Authority 3 percent interest on the loans to them. If you had not had to charge them 3 percent interest on those loans, then you could have cut your subsidy in three, or maybe less than that, and it would not have been necessary for Congress to have made the appropriations that everybody kicks about to make the subsidies to the local housing authorities.

When all is said and done, what happens is that the subsidies that Congress appropriates under the United States Housing Authority are in reality eventually paid to the private banks which originally bought the bonds of the United States Housing Authority, as a subsidy to those banks for the creation of credit for the use of an agency of the United States Government.

My contention is that we ought to be able to short circuit this thing and to see clearly that it is altogether possible for a sovereign government to make loans from the credit that it commands through its taxing power and through its power to create money originally. We ought to be able to make secured loans against the construction of real property of substantial value without having to go into debt through the sale of bonds to do it. If you did that, this United States Housing Authority program would evidently be one of the easiest things to finance, one of the clearest things to do, and one of the things that would meet with the least opposition, perhaps, of any program we have.

I can make the same argument with regard to farm-tenancy loans and agricultural loans of every sort. I do believe, Mr. Chairman, that as we face this problem of national defense we had better give consideration to the recapturing of the power of the Government of the United States to make use directly of the credit of this Nation.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. The gentleman's statement is a statement of facts, and indicates that the present set-up and structure of the United States Housing Authority is not working—that it is a huge joke.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But it can work very easily, and on the construction side I should say it is working very well. My contention is that an utterly unnecessary financial burden is being carried. Most of the arguments against it are not the right arguments. Most people get up here and argue that it is extravangant and that it costs a lot more money than it should. They say we are paying for these houses three times over. The same argument can be made against any project that is financed by the sale of interest-bearing bonds. But we hear it used only in the case of the United States Housing Authority. I believe the real truth is that some people do not want this slum clearance to go forward, but they make a lot of arguments that they could use quite as well against road building or anything else that is financed by an interest-bearing public debt. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Early in this discussion I tried to ask a few questions and get over one idea to this House. To start with I want to say that I am for this bill. I have been for every other defense bill that we have had, and I am going to be for every other defense measure that we may have hereafter. That is the way I feel about it. It is worth whatever it costs, because America is worth saving, and that is what we are undertaking at this time.

The thing, however, that induced me to ask questions was this: In the twenty-fifth district of Illinois, which I have the great honor to represent, there are in six coal counties alone, one of them in the district of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS], 235,000 people altogether. That is the number of all the inhabitants in those six coal counties. In 1926, 34,700 miners were employed constantly. This year they are employing on very slack part time 15,000. In other words, during that interval 19,700 miners have lost their jobs. We are spending in southern Illinois alone $26,000,000 a year to prevent starvation. I asked here quite recently for the whole of $400,000 to complete the Crab Orchard project, which had been misrepresented by men who knew nothing in the world about it and who were unwilling to learn. That was denied by the Appropriations Committee and by this House, and through that denial we lost our opportunity of getting a munitions plant to be paid for by the British and French Governments at that time.

I am suggesting simply this, that where a condition like that exists, it seems to me like nonsense and worse if we do not put some of these preparedness projects into a section where employment is so terrible as it is in these coal counties. We can save to start with if they give us one of the large or even one of the fair-sized units required at the present time, by cutting in two immediately the $26,000,000. We can save $13,000,000. We can provide also, little by little, for getting entirely out of the hole and going on to permanent prosperity in that great district. These six counties have produced 1,147,000,000 tons of coal since 1882, when we began to keep a record, and a great many millions more before that.

I am standing here saying to you that what the Government ought to do and what this body ought to do is to set it forth as a policy that where there are conditions of that kind we direct our representatives in the Army and the Navy to use that labor to do away with unemployment. I am saying to them, "Here is a place where you do not have to build a single solitary house; we are already housed; we have our houses and our schools and our homes. We want jobs. We know how to work with machinery and we want to work. We are not wanting W. P. A. or anything else outside of pay for a man's work, and it seems to me no section of the United States needs it so badly or has a better right to practical consideration. And I am standing here suggesting to this House that it ought to be one of the expressions of this body when we pass this bill or any other bill that requires employment of great numbers of people in the United States, to give employment where it is needed most. We have got the houses. All we want is the work, and nothing else; but we want an opportunity for work. We have the roads, we have a way of getting anywhere you may wish there, and we have in addition 40,000,000,000 more tons of coal there available under present mining conditions—enough to last us thousands of years. Put these war babies where they will do the most good. [Applause.]

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I only do this to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In my own district is located the Puget Sound Navy Yard, in which there is an acute housing condition. I am glad to see this bill because, as a matter of fact, the workmen have been sleeping in the city jail there. That is how acute the condition is. About 2 months ago, under the United States Housing Authority, the President allocated the sum of about $2,000,000 through that Authority, to build housing projects in the city of Bremerton. This bill provides a new administrator for further housing projects in these navy-yard districts. Would there not be some duplication of authority there?

Mr. LANHAM. No; I do not understand there would be because the housing that is to be put up here for these civilian workers is to be additional to any housing that is already available, and it is the intention to employ any existing housing that may be available and therefore there would not be duplication.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Under this bill, suppose there was a housing project—and there are several in process of construction now in some of these navy yards, and suppose some more defense housing units were built, the Administrator under this Authority could well say, if the Housing Authority is managing those properties, "You go ahead and manage them just like you have before and manage the new ones," could they not?

Mr. LANHAM. It is not the function of the Administrator under this measure to be interfering with whatever the Housing Authority is doing under its functions, and under the law establishing those functions. This is to be additional to any housing that is now being done by other agencies. As far as the Army and Navy are concerned, they act in conjunction with the Council of National Defense, with reference to the necessity for all of this housing.

Mr. MAGNUSON. What I am getting at is this: In some of these navy-yard districts there will be housing projects completed before any housing project under the authority of this bill could be completed. It is conceivable that there will be two housing projects side by side. In that kind of a situation, what about duplication of the management?

Mr. LANHAM. One will be completed, under your statement, before the other begins.

Mr. BLAND. But they could utilize the same agency, could they not?

Mr. LANHAM. Under the terms of this measure the Administrator is authorized to use the personnel or facilities of any of these housing agencies, if that is the information the gentleman wishes to get.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. You are going to build housing facilities at plants that are manufacturing for national defense?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Now, let us take an airplane plant, for instance, in a big city, where there are 50,000 vacant units throughout the city. Are you going to permit them to leave those units vacant and build around that plant?

Mr. LANHAM. It is not the purpose to do that. They said they wanted to use all available housing before beginning any housing construction of their own.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The people in my district are very much disturbed about that because there are a great many vacancies in a great city.

Mr. LANHAM. I would suggest that whatever construction is contemplated in the gentleman's district, he bring these available facilities to the attention of the Administrator and the Council for National Defense, in order that there may be no duplication, because it certainly is and should be the policy to use all available housing, where workers can be used, at reasonable rentals, that are now in existence.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. You are speaking of U. S. F. H. A. housing facilities, which are for people of small income.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Which have been allocated recently for those areas.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. That would be absolutely impractical, in my judgment, for the people who administer that, to undertake this, which is under another department of the Government.

Mr. McGRANERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McGRANERY. Would the gentleman accept an amendment to the bill which would provide for the utilization of these local housing authorities, where they have already been established, so as to prevent any duplication?

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman has the bill before him with the committee amendment, he will see that in section 8 there was an effort made to do that. That is, to the extent of utilizing the employees and facilities, not only of the Federal Works Agency, but all other Federal agencies and of any local public agency.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGRANERY. Will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. Do I take it that the gentleman understands the language as in the amended bill would authorize these local housing authorities to carry on this work where they are already established?

Mr. LANHAM. It would authorize the Administrator, under this measure, to utilize the personnel and facilities of these various housing organizations, and reimburse them to the extent that they used their facilities and personnel. That is the authority as far as this bill is concerned. The statement was made before our committee by those sponsoring this bill that they wanted to use every available agency, and they must depend, of course, upon the circumstances of any particular place. They want to get as much private capital and industry into it as they can. They want to use whatever is available, but all to be under the direction, necessarily, of a responsible head, who will be the administrator mentioned in the bill.

Mr. McGRANERY. I have in mind a situation today which is most confusing. The commandant at the Philadelphia Navy Yard may say he would like to have it at a particular site. The local city council, which is also interested from a tax standpoint, may want some other site. And we have a local housing authority, established by law in Philadelphia, that has, for the past 5 years, made a complete survey of the entire housing situation in and around the city and they have all the data available at their fingertips as to just where housing projects should be established, and would be most beneficial in carrying out this program from a standpoint of national defense.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say to the gentleman right there, a few days ago we passed a defense bill carrying an appropriation of $100,000,000 to be used by the Army and Navy, and my information is to the effect that that practically takes care of the needs of the Navy. By the terms of that very legislation the Navy is permitted to use any agency that it pleases in carrying out that construction.

Mr. McGRANERY. That provides for housing within the navy yard. We are talking about two different things, I believe.

Mr. LANHAM. I think if the gentleman will read the amendment which became a part of the law and which was offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] he will find that it does not apply exclusively to the navy yards but also to the plants around and in connection with it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is what I was going to clear up. That rider to the defense bill is being used by the Army and Navy in these Army and Navy vicinities where there is a navy yard or an army post.

Mr. LANHAM. That is right.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In my case, in Bremerton they are using the local housing authority, under the United States Housing Authority, to build these units.

Mr. LANHAM. They have that authority under the law.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. The purpose of this bill is to add additional units in other places where housing needs on account of the defense program are acute.

Mr. LANHAM. That is right. When the defense measure was before us and that amendment was pending, I made a few remarks on the floor of the House in which I expressed the desire and what I think is the purpose that the money would be used by the Army and the Navy for their own establishments or for those needs that were in such proximity to them that they must have them if they were to carry on, and they were authorized to use any of these agencies in the expenditure of those funds. My understanding is, the information I receive is, that the Navy is getting what it needs in that regard for the construction which is now taking place.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Was it not intended that under this bill it would be possible for various agencies to be called in, especially when they had the knowledge and experience and were already working and preparing plans at sites that had been agreed on?

Mr. LANHAM. To the extent that is indicated in section 8 of the bill, the Administrator can use their facilities and personnel and reimburse the agencies to the extent they can be helpful.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, whether relating to the acquisition, handling, or disposal of real or other property by the United States or to other matters, the Administrator, acting through Public Buildings Administration, with respect to any property acquired or constructed under the provisions of this act, is authorized by means of Government personnel, selected qualified private agencies, or public agencies (a) to deal with, maintain, operate, administer, and insure; (b) to pursue to final collection by way of compromise or otherwise all claims arising therefrom; (c) to rent, lease, exchange, sell for cash or credit, and convey the whole or any part of such property and to convey without cost portions thereof to local municipalities for street or other public use: Provided, That any such transaction shall be upon such terms, including the period of any lease, as may be deemed by the Administrator to be in the public interest: Provided further, That any lease authorized hereunder shall not be subject to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412).

Committee amendment:

Page 6, line 19, after the word "interest", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That the Administrator shall fix rentals, on projects developed pursuant to this act, which shall be within the financial reach of persons engaged in national defense."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD to the committee amendment: On page 6, line 20, after the word "fix", insert the word "fair."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the gentleman from Michigan intends by his amendment that the rentals to be fixed shall be fair to both workers and Government.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct.

Mr. LANHAM. That is the intention of the committee amendment, and I see no objection to the adoption of the gentleman's amendment, for it merely clarifies the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment, as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: On page 6, line 25, after the period at the end of line 25, insert "Provided further, That funds authorized under this act can be made available to the United States Housing Authority for loans or grants to local municipal housing authorities for the erection of permanent housing projects: Provided, however, That projects built with such funds shall be used to house workers in defense industries and establishments during the emergency."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order against the amendment because if the point of order is sustained against this amendment as offered to section 7, it will not be sustained under the rules of the House when I offer it to section 8. Now, let us get at some facts. I ask the particular attention of Members from Boston, Philadelphia, and other large cities which will have increased shipbuilding and other national-defense activities.

This bill proposes to erect Government housing projects, permanent and temporary, at a cost of $150,000,000. Do you believe that it is good, sound business practice to erect in Boston, Philadelphia, or Chicago or other large centers temporary housing projects which are to be disposed of after the emergency is ended? The Government will receive very little for these temporary buildings and in most cases will have to pay a wrecking contractor for taking them away as was done after the last World War. The population in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., and these other large cities will naturally increase. We should therefore build permanent housing facilities, in and adjacent to these large cities, which can be utilized after the emergency is over. What does the testimony show?

One of the best witnesses before our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was presented to the committee by the very distinguished gentleman from South Boston, Mass. [Mr. MCCORMACK]. This witness was Mr. John A. Breen, chairman of the Boston Housing Authority, of Boston, Mass. Mr. Breen testified that the permanent municipal housing projects of his local municipal authority, including sidewalks, sewers, all the other trimmings, land, and buildings for permanent structures, substantially built with a life expectancy of 60 years or more, was an average of $4,755 per dwelling unit, with an average of 2.6 bedrooms per dwelling unit. Now, let us look at Boston. Near Boston we have the city of Quincy, about 10 miles away, where we have the Bethlehem shipbuilding establishment, where we are going to expand defense activities and, under this bill, provide housing facilities for defense workers. In Boston we also have the Charlestown Navy Yard, which we are going to expand and provide housing for defense workers. Do you think it is reasonable or economical to erect temporary homes in and adjacent to Boston and Quincy and tear them down or sell them for little or nothing after the emergency ended?

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. This legislation, of course, contains no provision for, nor did the Army or Navy request, any additional housing facilities in connection with the Charlestown Navy Yard, nor to my knowledge even for the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I beg to differ with the gentleman because the administrative proponents mentioned many of the navy yards, including those in the District of Columbia, Boston, and Philadelphia, when they asked for the enactment of this bill. The record of the executive sessions and the public hearings will show that.

Mr. HOLMES. I agree with the gentleman as far as the Washington Navy Yard is concerned.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes; and the Boston and Philadelphia Navy Yards, as well as the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, in and adjacent to Philadelphia we have the United States Government navy yard, we have the Cramp Shipbuilding Co., the Sun Shipbuilding Co., and we have a large Government establishment which manufactures clothing for the Army and Navy. All of these facilities will be greatly expanded. Do you believe that it is good business or economical to erect temporary homes to house thousands of additional defense workers for these establishments under the pending bill and after the emergency is over pay some junk dealer or building wrecker to tear them down or sell them for little or nothing?

Mr. Chairman, my pending amendment is not mandatory. It is permissive. It merely makes available such funds as the authorities which have charge of the funds authorized in this bill desire to loan or grant to local municipal housing authorities through the United States Housing Authority so that permanent buildings can be erected in places such as Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, and other large cities. My amendment also provides that such loans or grants to the local housing authorities shall have a restriction which insures that the permanent housing facilities built with those funds shall during the emergency be used for the purpose of housing workers who are engaged in defense activities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is simply permissive. I am not suggesting that the United States Housing Authority or any local municipal housing authority be specifically allocated one penny under this bill. All I am asking you to do is to make available any portion of the $150,000,000 which those in charge of our national defense housing program desire to allocate for this purpose. Such grants and loans to be for local municipal housing authorities, so that they can construct permanent buildings which will be an asset instead of a liability after the emergency is over. During the emergency those buildings can only be used to house defense workers under my amendment.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman does not think it is wise or practical to mix up a national-defense program such as this is with the social-experiment program of the United States Housing Authority, which serves an altogether different purpose and would not work out practically with this defense program at all?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I respectfully disagree with the gentleman. I am not in favor of the Federal Government experimenting in the housing business or any other legitimate field of private business. We have a condition to meet, if you please, and section 8 of this bill, appearing on page 7, just discussed in the debate, only grants authority to the governmental agency having charge of this $150,000,000 defense housing program to utilize the services of the personnel and administrative set-up of the United States Housing Authority and local municipal housing authorities.

A number of Members on the floor of the House asked questions of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and from the questions it appeared to me that they were trying to ascertain just how far the use of the local housing authorities and the United States Housing Authority could be made under this bill. Without my amendment their only use would be to utilize the services of their employees and their administrative set-up. Not one penny could be expended for the erection of housing facilities by them.

If you are really interested in providing permanent buildings in and adjacent to these large industrial cities and providing defense workers with housing facilities without delay and saving millions of dollars of our taxpayers' money, you should support my pending amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] provides that loans from the funds authorized in this measure may be made to the United States Housing Authority, whereas that Authority now has $150,000,000 that it cannot use by reason of the fact that subsidies for maintenance and repayment of the loans are not available. Why put more money at their disposal when they cannot under existing conditions use what they have?

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, his amendment provides for permanent housing under the Housing Authority, whereas the purpose of this bill is to provide temporary housing for national defense during the time of the emergency, then that housing will be disposed of when the termination of the emergency comes. The functions of the Housing Authority are different from the purposes set out in this bill.

The Housing Authority has to do with slum clearance, it was developed for the purpose of constructing dwelling units for people in low-income groups, it goes on permanently insofar as its operation is concerned with regard to those things, whereas the purposes of this bill are to provide temporary housing facilities primarily for civilian workers at these plants and establishments used for national defense.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. I do not think the gentleman means to convey to the Members of the House the impression that many of these units in municipal areas are going to be of a temporary nature.

Mr. LANHAM. Some of them will not be.

Mr. HOLMES. Many of these buildings—in all probability the buildings in metropolitan areas such as Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, and other places where the navy yards are located, will be of such character that they will be a permanent part of the community.

Mr. LANHAM. That is true and they should be, because they enhance the opportunity of sale when they are no longer necessary for national defense.

Let me call attention to the next provision of the bill. Insofar as the personnel and the facilities of these various housing authorities are concerned, the authority is given to utilize them and reimburse them for such use. But to divert funds that are set aside for definite, specific purposes to be handled in a definite, specific way, as outlined in this bill, to the Federal Housing Authority, would not be in keeping with the functions of that authority and would not be in keeping with the functions of the bill, because this construction must be under one responsible head, using, insofar as possible, the facilities of all housing agencies that will speed up the necessary work.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This bill authorizes $150,000,000 for temporary and permanent housing for national-defense workers, does it not?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It has been testified before our committee that many of these buildings will be of a permanent nature and many will be temporary?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. My amendment merely authorizes the erection of permanent buildings to house national-defense workers during the emergency under the United States Housing Authority and local municipal housing authorities in and adjacent to the large industrial cities. Therefore, after the emergency is over, instead of selling these buildings to a few racketeers for a song, as was done after the last World War, the local municipal housing authorities will have the use of those buildings for their slum-clearance programs which will enable them to provide decent homes at a reasonable cost for many of the rank and file of the poor people of the United States of America. My amendment is permissive and not mandatory. It will speed up the program of the Government to erect homes for national-defense workers in large industrial centers where private business does not provide sufficient homes.

Mr. LANHAM. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment diverts from the purposes of this bill funds to the United States Housing Authority to carry out their purposes. It gives them grants and it gives them loans out of this money and diverts and divides the authority for carrying out the provisions of this bill. Winter is coming on and this housing is needed. We do not want any division of sentiment or any division of authority with reference to carrying this out.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. The gentleman has very correctly stated that this would add funds to funds now unusable. The United States Housing Authority operates through loans and subsidies. It cannot make the loans without the subsidies. As the gentleman stated very correctly, it has approximately $150,000,000 now which it cannot use because it does not have the subsidy to match that sum. This would only add to that and make it unusable.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman is correct. There is no reason to augment their funds by an amendment of this character. I hope the amendment will be defeated. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal to what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said. The amendment the gentleman offered contained a great deal of merit. I am sure that my distinguished friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM], one of the soundest Members of this House and one of the most influential Members, did not mean that all this $150,000,000 was going to be used for temporary purposes. That is where the position taken by the gentleman from Wisconsin comes into the picture in a very important manner.

I can see where emergency housing for the purposes stated in this bill would be of a temporary nature in a country town or in a small-sized city where there is a substantial business but where, because of the preparation for war activities, tremendous orders come in, resulting in an unusual employment of help during that period. I can see where whatever buildings are constructed for housing purposes under such situations of necessity should be of a temporary nature. However, take the case of Boston, Philadelphia, New York, and Chicago, or any large city, where a situation exists where increased emergency housing facilities must be constructed as contemplated by this bill. To construct them purely of a temporary nature would be an inadvisable and unwise investment on the part of the Federal Government. The argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin on that premise is sound. It is not only logical but it is sound from the angle of finances. If the Federal Government is going into Boston, for example, or any other large city, to construct a project for the purposes set forth in the bill, why would not the wise thing be to construct the project for permanent use, in the first instance to be used by those employees of a navy yard or any private business in connection with national defense, and after the emergency is over, instead of tearing down the buildings, to use them in connection with the low-cost housing program, to allow the local housing authority to purchase them or to lease them under satisfactory conditions. I think the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin carries great weight in that direction.

I had the pleasure of hearing some of the witnesses before the committee, and I was very much impressed with the very serious manner in which the members of the committee approached the consideration of this bill. The only premise on which this bill is justified is, first, the national-defense situation, and second, the fact that if we allow private companies, in connection with increased national-defense orders, to build houses it is a step backward in the progressive journey of labor in this country; it is a step backward by putting them under the control of a corporation, because the corporation that owns the houses controls to a great extent the lives of its employees.

I approve of this legislation under existing circumstances. The committee has done a wise thing in reporting it. However, I believe that the suggestions of the gentleman from Wisconsin are worthy of profound consideration and that something should be done; something should be put into this bill in order to try to meet the sound suggestion the gentleman has made.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. I recall that the gentleman came before our committee during the hearings on this bill. I believe the gentleman will recall that as to the housing under the general-defense program, witnesses who came before our committee said that insofar as is humanly possible private capital will be utilized to do this construction.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct.

I also suggest that the Administrator, when he goes into a city of large population, approach the construction of any project within the meaning of this bill from the angle of permanent construction, and that he consult the local housing authority and utilize their services, and allow the local agency to cooperate with him. I admire the United States Housing Authority, although I realize there is some division of opinion on it. In my opinion, Mr. Straus has done a wonderful job. That action, however, will not bring into the picture the United States Housing Authority but will bring into the picture the local housing authorities, which are created by State statutes and which know the local needs.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. I may say that the provision in the next section through the committee amendment authorizes the Administrator to use these various agencies.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know that, but the mere fact that the authority is there does not necessarily mean that they will exercise it. If the Administrator knows the views of the chairman and the members of the committee, and of other Members of Congress, as contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when the Administrator and those associated with him go into the large cities they will recognize the feeling of Congress and ask the local housing authorities to cooperate with them and make suggestions as to the type of project that should be constructed, having in mind not only the national defense housing emergency but a long-term permanent program of low-cost housing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], and I want to ask him a question. Did the gentleman say that the housing or the buildings should be constructed by the Government or by a private corporation? I did not get that.

Mr. McCORMACK. What I said was that generally by private capital, but in the emergency, the passage of this bill is necessary.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You mean the Government should construct these buildings. Is that right?

Mr. McCORMACK. Under these circumstances, having in mind the exigency that exists, it is the only logical and reasonable course to take.

Mr. HOFFMAN That is, you assume that private industry cannot build them quickly enough?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, if private industry can do it, the Administrator should have private capital construct them, if private capital can be interested; but, if not, then in the emergency the Government is justified in stepping into the picture.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say this, that the Government, in investing its money, should have in mind not only the emergency but the long-time permanent use of them in connection with low-cost housing in cities where that condition exists.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is, many of these buildings are to be of such a type that they will be permanent buildings? Is that your position?

Mr. McCORMACK. Where a situation exists, such as we have in large cities, where they could be used after the emergency is over?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] will not see fit to revise his remarks because I thought it was a very interesting statement. So often some of us suspect our gradual progress toward socialism, but this is the first time I have heard the progress clarified in words.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The thought that came while the discussion was going on was this, and it was rather striking coming from the gentleman from Massachusetts, unless I misunderstood him, we have an emergency. That is not anything new, of course. So we draft a million or more men, then we must draft, I take it, sooner or later, men for work in the factories because we are not able, as it is, to produce as rapidly as we should and as we must. Then when we draft these men for work in the navy yards and in the factories we must build places for them to live. That gives us these homes, hundreds of thousands of them, apparently, and then after the emergency is over—and I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, We do expect it to be over sometime, do we not?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is self-answerable.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not know. After 7 years of it, I do not know, I hope——

Mr. McCORMACK. As a matter of fact, it is 10 years, but we are talking about the immediate emergency. The gentleman knows that as well as I do.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I do not know—immediate emergency. We have had immediate recurring emergencies one after the other for the past 7 years—you say 10 years. Well, if there were 2 years of emergency under Hoover and then you put 8 years more on it, that does make 10, but there has been an ever-increasing emergency. Roosevelt has given us a whole flock of emergencies. We would have one and then we would have another. When the war is over—this war we are going to fight for someone else, when the war is over, the emergency, I suppose, unless the New Deal is still in, will have ended. Then we will have the Government with thousands or hundreds of thousands of homes on its hands. People will be living in them. We will have the Government with millions of tenants. I do not know how these tenants are going to support themselves—they cannot all be on relief—they will have to have jobs. The jobs which caused the Government to build the homes will be gone for the emergency will be over. What is to become of the tenants. The people for whom the houses are to be built?

One of the foundation stones upon which this Government rests is the American home. A nation of home owners is a peaceful nation, a prosperous nation. A nation willing to fight and maintain itself. Who will not fight for home and fireside? A nation of tenants is a weak nation.

In his home every man has pride, every woman sanctuary. A home is the citadel of the family. A nation housed in Government houses, not homes, is a multitude of individuals. Cattle are kept in stalls. Would you compel the free, independent American to live as it might be in a Government stable? No home is worth having in the long run except as a man earns it for himself.

This administration has taken us a long way on the road toward state socialism, toward communism. Draft men? Put the worker under Government control, put him and his family in a Government owned and operated house, on Government work, under Government supervision, and what is there left of the traditional American freedom? Those who represent labor here in this House should consider before they commit themselves to a program like this.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 3, line 20, for the purpose of offering a perfecting amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, we have long since passed that section and there are a number of gentlemen here who are anxious for the consideration of this measure to be concluded as early as possible on account of other important engagements, and I shall have to object.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his objection? Many of us have been patient here and have not called for quorums and we have done this in order to cooperate with the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Iowa was called to the telephone at the time this place in the bill was reached and could not offer his amendment. I hope the gentleman will permit him to offer it now.

Mr. LANHAM. I suggest the gentleman defer his request until we have finished the consideration of the bill and then we will have some opportunity to see what the gentleman's amendment is.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman from Texas allow the amendment to be read and then the gentleman can act on the request?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment being read.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BEAM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa that the amendment may be read?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN: On page 3, line 20, strike out the words "land acquisition", and, after the word "facilities", in line 29, insert "and the cost of real estate on which such dwellings are to be erected shall not exceed 20 percent of the cost of the completed dwelling unit or units erected thereon."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. In carrying out the provisions of this act the Administrator is authorized to utilize employees and facilities of the Federal Works Agency and of its constituent units, and any funds appropriated pursuant to this act shall be available for transfer to any such agency in reimbursement therefor.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 7, line 3, after the word "and", strike out "of its constituent units" and insert "other Federal agencies and of any local public agency, with the consent of such agency,"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 7, insert a new sentence as follows:

"Nothing in this Act shall be construed to prevent the Administrator from employing or utilizing the professional services of private persons, firms, or corporations."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the pending committee amendment, to strike out the word "utilizing."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin to the committee amendment: Page 7, line 9, after the word "or", strike out the word "utilizing."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity for a brief post mortem on my defeated amendment, which proposed to utilize the services of the United States Housing Authority and local municipal housing authorities in the interest of national-defense housing and to help prevent our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury from going bankrupt.

The gentlewoman from Illinois, who is one of the most distinguished, diligent, and able Members of the House, interjected her views with reference to the speech delivered by our able and distinguished colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and inferred, as I interpreted her remarks, that those who supported the provisions of my amendment were expounding state socialism. Well, I am not in favor of state socialism. I favor more sound business principles applied to the business of Government and less Government competition in legitimate fields of private business endeavor, as well as less government monkey business with legitimate private business. [Laughter and applause.]

My amendment was not a socialistic amendment. Let us briefly look at the facts. It has been testified before our committee by the proponents of this bill that, in large industrial centers such as Milwaukee, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, New York, and so forth, additional housing facilities provided under this bill would only be provided by the Government if private business institutions did not and could not provide them. Funds which are authorized to be appropriated under this $150,000,000 authorization bill, if the Government provides housing facilities in or adjacent to these large cities are to be used to build permanent and not temporary housing facilities. That is good sound business practice. I do not favor having the Government spend three or four thousand dollars or more per unit to erect temporary housing facilities in or adjacent to Washington, Philadelphia, Chicago, Milwaukee, New York, or other large cities, and then after the emergency is over, pay some favored contractor or building wrecker money for tearing down the buildings or removing them, as was done after the last World War.

Now, with respect to socialism: I am not a supporter of United States Housing Authority expansion in competition with legitimate private business. However, let us face the facts. If the Government is to erect permanent housing facilities in or adjacent to these large cities like Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Milwaukee, and Chicago, and after the emergency is ended the Government is going to get rid of them, is it nearer state socialism, for the Government to sell them for a song to a favored private real-estate operator so that he can unfairly compete with legitimate private business, or is it nearer state socialism to make them available for a local housing authority to provide housing facilities at a moderate cost for the rank and file of the very poor people of the United States of America? In fact, the position which I have taken in offering my United States Housing Authority amendment has been directly to the rear along the highway of state socialism, and the position as indicated by the distinguished, able, and diligent gentlewoman from Illinois is a long step onward and forward along the highway leading to state socialism. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, unless the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin was pro forma——

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It is pro forma. I asked to strike out the word "utilization." It was utilized, under the rules of the House, to get 5 minutes to keep the record straight. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], a great and good man, mentally as well as physically [laughter], has expressed my sentiments exactly. He is not for state socialism. He is against totalitarianism. He is against communism. He is against the combination of these ideologies which is the New Deal. He has proved that again and again on the floor. But there is a middle ground, and I think the gentleman will agree with me, if he stops and remembers, that this Government has several housing programs. We have the slum-clearance program. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] says, that is a "sound" program. Some of us think it is mostly "sound." Then we have the F. H. A. program. I think one thing that has shocked some members of the Banking and Currency Committee is the fact that this bill seems essentially a bill that should have been considered by the Banking and Currency Committee, because that is the committee which considers bills relating to the F. H. A., the H. O. L. C., and the U. S. H. A. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has considered how this plan might be financed by private capital and guaranteed by the Government?

Mr. LANHAM. From the standpoint of being guaranteed by the Government, we did not give any consideration to that.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. That is the F. H. A. plan, the gentleman will understand.

Mr. LANHAM. However, we are very anxious for private capital to be invested in just as much of this work as possible, and wherever they are willing to take the risk we prefer that, but this being emergency construction, it is doubtful whether there is any very great part of it in which they will be interested.

There is an opportunity for them under a section we have passed by with reference to the Reconstruction Finance Mortgage Co. to which $10,000,000 of funds in this bill are being diverted, and there is another $40,000,000 available. Every effort is going to be made in every way to get private capital and private industry interested in this measure, but I do not think we should talk about a fast limitation.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It strikes me as odd that you so often neglect to think to use the F. H. A. plan. In this one program the New Deal has discovered what is rather a progressive invention toward better government; that is to say, when you have a situation such as this where there is an emergency such as war which is likely to end suddenly or a depression which might terminate quickly and when people are afraid to risk their capital, then at that time instead of paying billions out of the Federal Treasury you say: "Come on, invest your capital. The Government will guarantee you. If there is a loss we will pay it." Thus you save the Government a great deal of money and enable the Government to draw from that private capital the taxes which we so need to finance our ordinary operations; and I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin will agree that that is a very adequate solution to the defense housing problem, is it not? Yes. You Democrats are so used to following a man but our Republicans do not mind following a woman occasionally. [Laughter and applause.]

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: On page 7, line 7, after the word "therefor", strike the period and insert a comma and the following: "or for use by local public agencies to whom loans may be made for the purposes of this act by the Administrator at such interest as he shall fix."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, throughout consideration of the bill, both in general debate and under the 5-minute rule, we have heard several objections. In the first place, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] criticized the Committee on Rules for not bringing in a rule on S. 591. I assure him, however, that it is not my fault that a rule has not been granted for that bill, which provided aid for the United States Housing Authority.

The gentleman from my own State [Mr. KELLER] pleaded that some of these housing projects are not needed; that some of the activity should be placed in centers where there is ample housing available, as well as manpower. I agree with him in this last statement. I also agree in his statement that the P. W. A. and the U. S. H. A. both have done a good job.

I offer this amendment to make the bill comply with the suggestion of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

I will state the object of the amendment. I had every reason to believe that the committee would agree to the amendment. A rule was granted and I am amazed that the committee, which agreed that the facilities of the U. S. H. A. may be utilized by the Public Works Administrator, and that the requirements to which attention was called by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] will be taken care of, did not put some such definite provision in the bill which would make this amendment unnecessary.

All this amendment will do is to give the local housing authority the opportunity to proceed with the work, especially where it has already expended time and money in acquiring sites, plans, and specifications. If we turned this over to it the money spent by it in developing plans and specifications and in acquiring sites would not be wasted. This seems to me to be particularly practicable and desirable in those areas where defense manufactures, shipyards, and so forth are to be located.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I gladly yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the committee adopts your amendment, it will expedite the construction of housing facilities, provide roofs over the heads of these men, provide suitable homes for these national-defense workers and their families, without having to wait from 6 months to a year to draw new plans and specifications and purchase real estate upon which to erect the structures.

Mr. SABATH. I am, indeed, gratified and immensely pleased that for once I can agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Applause and laughter.] I believe he understands the situation thoroughly. His amendment, unfortunately, could not be adopted. I therefore suggested this one, which, I believe, will be adopted.

In the bill, at page 2, the Federal Works Administrator is authorized, acting through the Public Buildings Administration, to make surveys and investigations, plan, design, construct, remodel, extend, repair, or demolish structures, buildings, improvements, and community facilities. That is what the bill provides. Under the U. S. H. A. program, this has already been done by the local authorities, not by private contractors who desire contracts promising fat returns, but by local authorities of the communities and the cities. That work and valuable experience should not be wasted. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has stated that haste is required. This will save time and we can proceed with the construction at the lowest possible price. Consequently I hope the amendment is understood and will be agreed to.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have no particular quarrel with any Member of the House who has a particular interest in the activities of the United States Housing Authority, but I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that it was never the intention of the Administrator of the Public Works Agency to make all of these housing projects of a temporary nature. No testimony was given before the committee, nor has anything been said on the floor of the House this afternoon in the debate that should leave the impression that all the houses are going to be of a temporary nature. It is contemplated that where circumstances fit into the picture the housing projects will be of a permanent nature. I call your attention to the fact the measure we are considering this afternoon is a defense measure and the proposition is altogether different from the social aspects of the United States Housing Authority projects. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which would in effect direct the Administrator to make loans and grants to the United States Housing Authority. I do not think this Committee wants to approve any such proposal as that. There was only one person appeared before the committee to sort of protect the interests of the United States Housing Authority, and that was a gentleman from Boston, Mass., a very fine man introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]. I talked to him about the provisions of the bill, and I asked him this question:

> Will you tell me whether I have the correct insight as to your position on this. Under the United States Housing Authority and the authority granted to it and under the State laws, the local housing authorities are not now in a position to put up defense housing because of restriction as to eligibility of tenants and the time it would take to erect them—

And so forth?—

> That is right.

Further down:

> Mr. EBERHARTER. You do not want any mandatory provision in this bill saying that the United States Housing Authority and the local authorities must be used in the construction of those houses?
> Mr. BREEN. No.

If we put anything in this measure this afternoon that may be construed to give special right to the United States Housing Authority we are simply trying to mix something that will not mix at all; in other words, two fundamentally different propositions. I am sure that the language of the bill as it now stands gives the Federal Works Agency, the Public Buildings Administration, and Mr. Carmody the right to use the plans, the specifications, the personnel, and the facilities of the United States Housing Authority. I believe it would be fundamentally wrong to incorporate any separate provision in the bill for the United States Housing Authority.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I am afraid the gentleman has not carefully read my amendment. There is no "must" or "shall" in it. If the Public Administrator finds that it will be to the advantage and will hasten the activities and the completion of these needed housing projects, then he has the right to utilize and aid this United States Housing agency which has constructed buildings for $2,740, $1,000 lower than the bill now provides.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Is the gentleman asking me a question? My chief objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is that it gives the Federal Administrator instructions practically to make loans or to grant subsidies, which is not the thing we want in this particular measure. The gentleman from Illinois stated that if it was up to him he would have reported the rule which would have given the right-of-way to the United States Housing Authority measure. So for these reasons, considering the bill and its general purposes, I trust the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. MCGRANERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MCGRANERY. Is it true that under the present law, or under this bill now before the Committee, if the Administrator were directed to turn this work over to the United States Housing Authority the local authority under the law would be required to advertise for bids?

Mr. EBERHARTER. The local authorities are set up under State laws. They all have their own State laws, which throw certain restrictions on the activities of those local authorities. So the local authorities would in most instances not be able to function through any money received by this bill. In other words, the only authority granted to them is through their State laws, and we have 48 different State laws covering the expenditure of any loans or grants that may be put into this bill.

Mr. McGRANERY. Does the gentleman agree with the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that under the pending bill the Administrator would have the authority under this bill to use the facilities of, in my case, the Philadelphia Housing Authority for any project they saw fit to put forth?

Mr. EBERHARTER. The Administrator would have the authority to use the personnel, the facilities, and the plans and specifications, and would reimburse the Housing Authority for any expenditures they might make.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. Chairman, let us briefly refer to the debate on the floor of the House, including that of our very able and distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds whom we all admire. The chairman opposed my United States Housing Authority and local municipal housing authority amendment, which was along the lines of the pending Sabath amendment, and he indicated that all of the housing facilities provided under this bill were to be temporary structures, until one of our colleagues, a member of the committee, the able and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] corrected him.

With reference to the questions raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who wanted to know something about what was to be done for Philadelphia under this housing program, let me suggest that he carefully read the language contained in section 8 on page 7 of the bill as reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. This section merely provides that the Federal Works Administrator can utilize the services of the employees and administrative departments of the United States Housing Authority and the local municipal housing authorities.

Insofar as providing funds to erect housing facilities by those authorities this bill does not authorize one penny for construction in Philadelphia or in any other part of the country. After listening to the hullabaloo raised by some of the members of the committee reporting this bill who opposed the Sabath amendment and my United States Housing Authority and Municipal Housing Authority amendment, one would be led to believe that those amendments were mandatory although they were only permissive. As a matter of fact, the amendment which I offered and the pending Sabath amendment are merely permissive amendments in the interest of preventing delay, expediting completion of defense housing, and conserving the funds of the Federal Treasury, which will have to be produced by our overburdened American taxpayers.

Mr. SABATH. Yes. It only gives them the right if they desire.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois is absolutely correct. Mr. Chairman, one of the best witnesses who appeared before our committee was Mr. Breen, the head of the Boston (Mass.) Housing Authority, and he said that if funds in the way of loans or grants were made available to the Boston Housing Authority they could immediately commence to build housing projects which could be used to house defense workers during the emergency.

Mr. Chairman, in the interest of economy, in the interest of providing housing facilities for national-defense workers without delay, and in the interest of good, sound business practice, and conserving the funds which must be produced in the sweat and toil of the American taxpayers, I urge the thinking Members of this House to support and vote for the pending amendment which was offered by the chairman of the Rules Committee, the able and distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. This amendment is not mandatory but only permissive. Let us be reasonable. We Members of Congress, the legislative body of the United States Government, do not have to goose-step and rubber-stamp a bill without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i" just because some bureaucrat asks the committee and the Members of Congress to do so. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of national defense, in the interest of conserving the funds of the Federal Treasury, in the interest of obtaining defense housing facilities in and adjacent to the large industrial centers where we must have additional housing facilities, which cannot be provided by private business, I ask the Members, irrespective of their political party affiliations, to vote for the pending Sabath amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. The Administrator may enter into any agreements to pay annual sums in lieu of taxes to any State or political subdivision thereof, with respect to any real property acquired and held by him under this act, including improvements thereon. The amount so paid for any year upon any such property shall not exceed the taxes that would be paid to the State or subdivision, as the case may be, upon such property if it were not exempt from taxation.

SEC. 10. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the acquisition by the Administrator of any real property pursuant to this act shall not deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over such property, or impair the civil rights under the State or local law of the inhabitants on such property.

SEC. 11. The Administrator is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 8, line 2, after "act", insert the following: "and shall establish reasonable standards of safety, convenience, and health."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHULTE: On page 8, after line 3, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 12. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the wages of every laborer and mechanic employed on any construction, repair, or demolition work authorized by this act shall be computed on a basic day rate of 8 hours per day, and work in excess of 8 hours per day shall be permitted upon compensation for all hours worked in excess of 8 hours per day at not less than one and one-half times the basic rate of pay. Not less than the prevailing wages shall be paid in the construction of defense housing authorized herein."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. All of the legislation with reference to matters of this character has carried a provision similar to this. Those who have been sponsoring this bill have stated that it is their intention and their policy to carry out such a procedure, and that it was not incorporated in the measure by reason of the fact that it might be considered as surplusage. Whether or not it is properly drawn in exactly the right language, I do not know, but that can be investigated later. I may say that from my angle I will interpose no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, the only reason I offer this amendment is to protect the rights of labor. In the building trades in particular advances and gains have been made over a period of years, and only through hard struggle and self-sacrifice have they been able to do this. There have been a great many contractors, on Federal projects as well as on private ones, who have taken advantage of this particular section. They go into some section and take a contract on a very low bid and then try to take it out on the labor, who will be sacrificed. In other words, they will come into a particular district where the prevailing rate of wage, we will say, is $1.25 or $1.50 for carpenters, and they will offer them 90 cents. Where bricklayers are getting $1.25 the contractor will offer them 75 cents. In other words, he will tear down the entire wage structure. All this amendment does is protect the wages and hours and the prevailing rate of pay in the district in which the work takes place. I do hope the Committee sees fit to adopt this amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any persons or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of this act, or application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 13. At the beginning of each session of Congress, the Administrator shall make to Congress a full and detailed report covering all of the transactions authorized hereunder.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having assumed the chair, Mr. BEAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10412) to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 594, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the bill just passed the sections may be renumbered, inasmuch as a new section was added.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on tomorrow, calendar Wednesday, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in Committee of the Whole today and to include therein certain brief excerpts from records and documents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a petition by some mothers' clubs of Minnesota regarding conscription.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

SACO DIVIDE UNIT, MILK RIVER PROJECT

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9734) authorizing allocation of funds for the construction of Saco Divide unit, Milk River project, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is this the irrigation bill about which the gentleman from Montana spoke to me?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is right.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President in making allocation from and pursuant to the item for water conservation and utility projects contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1940, may allocate such amounts as he deems necessary for the construction of pumping and distribution facilities and land development for the Saco Divide unit of the Milk River project: Provided, That such amounts shall be reimbursed to the United States by the water users on the Saco Divide unit in not to exceed 40 annual installments, the first installment to begin in the year following the last payment made to the United States by the water users on the Saco Divide unit for that portion of the cost of facilities common to the Saco Divide unit and other units of the Milk River project to be allocated by the Secretary of the Interior to the Saco Divide unit. Payments on account of those costs of said common facilities thus allocated shall be paid into the reclamation fund, and the component of such payments attributable to costs of construction prior to 1935 as determined by the Secretary of the Interior shall be credited to write-offs made on the Milk River project pursuant to the act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636).

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the President in making allocations from and pursuant to the item for water conservation and utility projects contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1940, may allocate such amounts as he deems necessary for the construction of pumping and distribution facilities and land development for the Saco Divide unit of the Milk River project: Provided, That such amounts expended on land development shall be reimbursed in not to exceed 40 annual installments: Provided further, That such amounts expended on the construction of pumping and distribution facilities shall be reimbursed to the United States by the water users on the Saco Divide unit in not to exceed 40 annual installments, the first installment to accrue not later than the year following the last installment due and payable to the United States by the water users on the Saco Divide unit for that portion of the cost of the facilities common to the Saco Divide unit and other units of the Milk River project to be allocated by the Secretary of the Interior to the Saco Divide unit. Payments on account of those costs of said common facilities thus allocated shall be paid into the reclamation fund, and the component of such payments attributable to costs of construction prior to 1935 as determined by the Secretary of the Interior shall be credited to write-offs made on the Milk River project pursuant to the Act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636).

"SEC. 2. No water shall be delivered for the Saco Divide unit until the Secretary of the Interior has entered into the contract or contracts required in his judgment, to carry into full effect the provisions of section 1 and to provide for repayment of the reimbursable construction costs chargeable to the Saco Divide unit."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. O'CONNOR, as a substitute for the committee amendment:

"That in connection with the Saco Divide unit of the Milk River project there shall be included in the water users repayment obligations, in addition to the amounts that may be allocated by the President for the construction of pumping and distribution facilities and land development of this unit from funds appropriated for water conservation and utility projects by the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1940, to be repaid as therein provided, that portion of the cost of the facilities of the Milk River project common to the Saco Divide unit and other units of the Milk River project that may be allocated to the Saco Divide unit by the Secretary of the Interior. The cost of Fresno Dam and Reservoir so allocated by the Secretary shall be included for repayment in not to exceed 40 annual installments along with the costs of pumping and distribution facilities allocated by the President for repayment as provided by the water conservation and utility projects item in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1940; the cost of the other common facilities of the Milk River project allocated by the Secretary to the Saco Divide unit shall be repaid in not to exceed 20 annual installments, the first to accrue not later than the year following the last installment due and payable to the United States from the water users of the unit on the obligation comprising the amounts allocated by the President for construction of pumping and distribution facilities and the costs of the Fresno Dam and Reservoir allocated to the unit by the Secretary. Payments on account of the costs allocated by the Secretary shall be credited to the reclamation fund, and the component of such payments attributable to costs of construction prior to 1935 as determined by the Secretary shall be credited to write-offs made on the Milk River project pursuant to the act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636).

"SEC. 2. No water shall be delivered for the Saco Divide unit until the Secretary of the Interior has entered into the contract or contracts required, in his judgment, to carry into full effect the provisions of section 1 and to provide for repayment of the reimbursable construction costs chargeable to the Saco River unit."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this bill as amended has the approval of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and also the approval of the Interior Department, likewise the O. K. of the Bureau of the Budget. To go into it I would have to give you some history of the matter.

The Saco Divide project is not a new one, but is an extension of the Milk River project which has gone through a long period of slow but steady development, the first irrigation in the Milk River valley being in 1890, when an early settler by the name of T. B. Burns and some of his neighbors constructed a brush and rock dam near the present site of the Fort Belknap diversion dam. This dam was maintained for 20 years.

In 1902 an investigation by the Geological Survey showed that if successful irrigation were to be accomplished along the Milk River the flow of the river would have to be increased by delivery of water from St. Marys River to the Milk River through the proposed St. Marys Canal and transportation by river channel to the lower valley. A suitable agreement had to be made with Canada to protect the water supply from diversion throughout the 200 miles or more of river channel in Canada. Preliminary work in connection with the St. Marys unit was continued through 1903 and 1904. In 1905, $1,000,000 was taken from a Reclamation fund previously created, for the construction of the canal. In 1916 the St. Marys Canal was completed, and the first water delivered to the Milk River for irrigation use was during the season of 1917. A storage reservoir was constructed at Sherburne Lake, now included in Glacier Park, and water is diverted through a 29-mile canal which empties into the north fork of the Milk River, thus supplementing the river's natural flow and that of other streams emptying into it. Water is diverted from Milk River by dams near Chinook, Harlem, Dodson, Vandalia, and the Fresno dam which was completed in 1939.

Progress and development has been slow, but in 1939 there were 691 farms irrigated in the Milk River Valley and crops produced were valued at $1,181,583.03.

This very fertile valley winds through a drought- and insect-infested country, where hundreds of families found a living could not be made by dry-land farming. The Soil Conservation Service took over 970,199 acres of abandoned cropland, and it is the purpose of that agency to reseed and bring this land back to where it can be reverted to its former use, that of grazing, and to resettle the families who had to give up dry-land farming in the Milk River Valley as the irrigation program can be extended to make room for them. The Milk River Valley contains thousands of acres of rich and as yet undeveloped irrigable land, enough land, it is said, to resettle all of the unsuccessful dry-land farmers within the area. The Farm Security office at Malta has applications on file from hundreds of dry-land farmers now living within the area who desire resettlement on irrigable farm units.

The lands of the Saco Divide project, comprising 9,400 acres, are situated between Beaver Creek and Milk River near Saco, in Phillips County. They lie above the Nelson South Canal of the Milk River project and are planned to be irrigated by pumping from this canal, which will be slightly enlarged for a distance of 10 miles. Water for irrigation will be raised a maximum height of 85 feet and be conveyed to the farms by four laterals, of 30 miles aggregate length, through a system of sublaterals and farm ditches. Electrical energy for pumping will be obtained from the plant which is being installed at Fort Peck Dam and can be delivered by transmission lines already in existence.

The bill proposes to charge against said project the following items that will be repayable within the first 40 years: Two hundred and forty-five thousand dollars, money heretofore expended in construction of Fresno Dam, for which there are no contracts guaranteeing repayment to the Government; $210,000 for construction purposes; and $200,000 to be used by the Agricultural Department in land development. As a second series covering a period of 20 years, beginning the last year of the 40 years, covers repayment of $225,000 charged off in 1926 by an act of Congress. There will be used $160,000, which will be nonreimbursible, of W. P. A. labor and materials. The Agricultural Department will also advance for the purchase of lands a sufficient amount of money with which to secure title. The whole project will be paid off in approximately 60 years. Four hundred and ten thousand dollars of this money comes from the appropriation made by the Congress under the Wheeler-Case law. This project was about 2 years ago approved by the Great Plains Committee. This committee was appointed at the request of the President to make a survey to meet drought conditions in Montana, South and North Dakota, Wyoming, and part of Nebraska. The people had been droughted out continuously and were migrating to other States. The Great Plains Committee made the survey, as I have heretofore stated, and recommended, among others, this project. The project has the unique characteristic of being a combined irrigation and relief project, which involves also the use of the existing works constructed under the reclamation law. The only reason that the Saco Divide unit cannot be undertaken under the existing law is that the amounts which must be reimbursed, even taking into account the relief expenditures, cannot be repaid by the water users within 40 years. That is the limitation fixed in the Wheeler-Case law. Consequently, this special legislation must be enacted.

The reason why it is contended that this land should bear part of the cost of the Fresno Dam and the Nelson Canal cost is that the project will have the use of these facilities already in existence. The land will bear a little in excess of $3.60 per acre per year. About $1.25 per acre per year will be applied on construction charges and $2.25 for operation, maintenance, and power. It must be borne in mind that the Fresno Dam cost approximately $1,700,000, and also the canal cost several times the $225,000; so this land will only bear a part of the expense of these two projects. None of these items bear interest under the reclamation law and policy brought into existence under Theodore Roosevelt in 1902. The amendment that I offered to the bill today, which was requested by the Interior Department and the Bureau of the Budget, simply defers part of the amount charged off for payment under the second series and limits the second series to 20 years, and places the new money advanced as part of the first to be paid in the 40-year series.

The benefits to be derived from the passage of this legislation are about as follows:

When completed this project will reclaim approximately 10,000 acres of very fine, deep-soil benchland, on which now live about 30 families. This is a very dry section of the country and is of little value without artificial irrigation. It is estimated that this project, when completed, will furnish homes for about 200 families. In addition, it will obviate the necessity of advancing seed, feed, and subsistence loans by other Federal agencies. It will also furnish work for W. P. A. labor to about $160,000. This money would have to be spent anyway for relief. As the location of this project is near Glasgow, many people who worked at Fort Peck may find employment. Work of this kind brings into existence permanent and profitable improvements on which and from which people will be able to make a living.

The project will also recoup for the Government $225,000 already charged off and $245,000 for which there is no security for repayment. Consequently this bill will not only be advantageous to the poor people in that section but also to the W. P. A. worker and likewise to the Government in the end.

Mr. TABER. Are there families already there?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; about 30 families.

I trust that the House will approve the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request made this morning, and ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include two articles, one relative to a book by William Backus Guitteau, director of schools, Toledo, Ohio, entitled "Our United States," and the other relating to an article entitled "Burke's Speech on Conciliation," edited by O. H. Ward, Taft School, Watertown, Conn. I have an estimate from the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial, and I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that tomorrow, at the conclusion of all legislative business and any other special orders, I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table I may be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHULTE. And I wish to call to the attention of the House an article that appears in the paper tonight. Three or four months ago, during the investigation of the Milk Trust and the monopoly existing here in the District of Columbia, I made the statement that the committee that was then investigating the milk situation had been sold down the river, and the reason for that was that of the peculiar attitude the corporation counsel took, and in this case only. Now I believe that the Members of this House and the residents of the District of Columbia can readily understand what we were up against. I now want to read an article that is in the Times-Herald today:

Elwood H. Seal resigned today as District corporation counsel to "return to private practice." The District Commissioners accepted his resignation and named Richmond B. Keech, assistant chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, as his successor.

Seal said his resignation would become effective October 31, when he will join the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association.

* * * * * * *

The position Seal will take with the milk association is that of general counsel.

COMMANDER HOWARD L. VICKERY

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 596, to authorize Commander Howard L. Vickery to hold the office of a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the committee. The ranking minority member is present. This removes the bar of two statutes to the appointment of Commander Vickery to the Maritime Commission.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, the resolution was carefully considered by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and reported without opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I am fully cognizant of the valuable services which Commander Vickery, of the United States Navy, has been rendering in his capacity as administrative assistant to the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission. It is felt that his able and proficient capacity should be further recognized and retained in the best interests of the merchant-marine expansion and development. This may best be accomplished by the adoption of this legislative proposal authorizing him to accept appointment as a member of the United States Maritime Commission, which entitles him to the salary of such position while he retains his position and status in the United States Navy. I contend, however, that any future appointments should be made on the basis of a wider geographical representation, for the purpose of bringing to the United States Maritime Commission the peculiar problems affecting each and every area of the Nation. I commend the national attitude of the Commission but believe that the best interests of the Nation will continue to be best served by personnel more widely representative.

The Pacific coast, with its enormous maritime interests, should, as a matter of fairness, be represented on the Maritime Commission.

I certainly trust the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I am not opposing this, but I want it understood that this will not be considered as establishing a precedent so that one man may hold several jobs under the present administration.

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of law contrary hereto or inconsistent herewith, Commander Howard L. Vickery, being a commissioned officer on the active list, United States Navy, is authorized to hold the office of a member of the United States Maritime Commission without loss of or prejudice to his status as a commissioned officer on the active list of the United States Navy; and if appointed to such civil office, he shall receive, in addition to his pay and allowances as such commissioned officer, an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances as such commissioned officer and the salary prescribed by law for such civil office.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, September 11, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. MAAS: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 10405. A bill to provide for adjusting the compensation of persons employed as masters-at-arms and guards at navy yards and stations, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2935). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota:

H. R. 10488. A bill to provide for the construction, extension, and improvement of public-school buildings on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, Minn.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LEWIS of Ohio:

H. R. 10489. A bill to impose duties on importation of fuel oil and coal; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma:

H. R. 10490. A bill for the relief of the Eastern and Western Cherokees; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 10491. A bill for the relief of the Eastern Cherokees; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. IZAC:

H. R. 10492. A bill limiting number of diplomatic or consular officers or attachés accredited to and maintained in the United States by any foreign power; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LEWIS of Ohio:

H. Res. 596. Resolution authorizing and directing the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives to inquire into the transfer of American naval vessels, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

Mr. SUTPHIN introduced a bill (H. R. 10493) for the relief of the estate of William Sandlass, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of the rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9290. By Mr. GREGORY: Petition of Thomas Wright, noble grand, and Fred Heflin, secretary, Lodge No. 151, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Mayfield, Ky., favoring material aid to the Allies, the withholding of our manpower, and the curbing of "fifth columnists"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9291. By the SPEAKER: Petition of F. A. Billhimer, of Los Angeles, Calif., petitioning consideration of resolution with reference to House bill 7534, the anti-poll-tax bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1940

(Legislative day of Monday, August 5, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, who art loving unto every man, who hast made us heirs of all the ages of Thy creative power: We thank Thee for Thy divine compassion which is manifest toward us despite our weaknesses, our cowardice, and our self-love. Do Thou make us ever mindful of the radiance and mystery of life, revealing not only Thy wisdom and beauty but also the hallowing influence of friends which, in the quiet corners of experience, illumes the common task. Bestow upon us all the true ideals of liberty, justice, and brotherhood which alone can guide the nations into the way of peace. In this our day of trial may we not shun the discipline of life but rejoice in the work which is its own reward and glory in the difficulties which provide the materials of victory, Thy victory in us. So lead us upward and onward and endow us with the courage of those gallant souls whose cheerfulness in the face of peril puts to shame our self-concern. Through the turmoil of life may we find Thy peace; for the challenge of life may we find Thy strength; and in the adventure of death may Thine everlasting arms be our hope and our eternal refuge. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Tuesday, September 10, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills and a joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9734. An act authorizing allocation of funds for the construction of Saco Divide unit, Milk River project, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10412. An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 596. Joint resolution to authorize Commander Howard L. Vickery to hold the office of a member of the United States Maritime Commission.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] is absent on public business.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] are unavoidably absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ABUSES AND DEFICIENCIES IN ORGANIZATION AND OPERATION OF INVESTMENT TRUSTS AND COMPANIES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental report, being section I of chapter VI of part 3 of the Commission's over-all report on the study of investment trusts and investment companies dealing with abuses and deficiencies in the organization and operation of such trusts and companies, and also a list of those parts of the over-all and supplemental reports that have been transmitted already to Congress, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS

Mr. VANDENBERG presented a petition of sundry citizens of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, praying that appropriate steps be taken to control recurring floodwaters in the valleys of the Sturgeon and Otter Rivers, Mich., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Benton Harbor, Mich., praying that the United States may keep out of war and remonstrating against the enactment of compulsory military-training legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3841) to allow an additional period of 6 months in which to file claims for increased compensation to certain Government employees for the period July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1924, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SMATHERS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3489) for the relief of the estate of Frank H. Lusse, deceased, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 2111) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6512) for the relief of F. W. Heaton, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2112) thereon.

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7731) to provide for the burial and funeral expenses of deceased veterans of the Regular Establishment who were discharged for disability incurred in the service in line of duty, or in receipt of pension for service-connected disability, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2113) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 4342. A bill to authorize the presentation of a Distinguished Service Cross to Barney F. Salner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 4343. A bill authorizing the appointment of certain civilians as commissioned officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED OR PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 9734. An act authorizing allocation of funds for the construction of Saco Divide unit, Milk River project, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

H. R. 10412. An act to expedite the provision of housing in connection with national defense, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. J. Res. 596. Joint resolution to authorize Commander Howard L. Vickery to hold the office of a member of the United States Maritime Commission; to the calendar.

JESSE H. JONES—INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed House Joint Resolution 602, authorizing the appointment of Mr. Jesse H. Jones to be Secretary of Commerce. There was on the calendar and is now on the calendar Senate Joint Resolution 294, Calendar No. 2195. I ask that the Senate joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ALLEGIANCE TO AMERICA—ARTICLE BY SENATOR GILLETTE

[Mr. HERRING asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial embodying an article written by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and published in the Geode Echo, a C. C. C. camp publication, New London, Iowa, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SOLICITOR GENERAL BIDDLE AT SEATTLE CIVIC AUDITORIUM

[Mr. MEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. Francis Biddle, Solicitor General of the United States, at Seattle Civic Auditorium, Seattle, Wash., on Saturday, August 24, 1940, which appear in the Appendix.]

ACQUISITION OF NAVAL AND AIR BASES—ADDRESS BY JAMES W. RYAN

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address before the American Bar Association's section of international law, at Philadelphia, Pa., delivered by James W. Ryan, Esq., of New York, on the action of the President in taking measures to acquire naval and air bases, which appears in the Appendix.]

LABOR DAY ADDRESS BY JOHN L. LEWIS

[Mr. CLARK of Missouri asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a Labor Day address by John L. Lewis, president, Congress of Industrial Organizations, on Monday, September 2, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

COMMENT BY MR. VILLARD ON SPEECH OF SECRETARY WALLACE

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a newspaper article under the heading "Villard says Wallace speech is new low in United States politics," published in the Omaha (Nebr.) World-Herald of the 8th instant, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I desire to speak for a few minutes on the pending bill.

Since this Nation is irrevocably committed to the proposition of hemispheric defense, it appears to me that the implications of the bill may be very far-reaching. If the bill is enacted and administered as is evidently intended, we may or may not be taking a step which will have profound effect upon the economy of the Western Hemisphere.

I think we may proceed upon the assumption that political control and political domination follow as a matter of course economic control and economic domination. I think that is fundamental. If it is fundamental, then it seems to me we should do well to give serious consideration to what our future economic policy shall be so far as Western Hemisphere trade and commercial intercourse are concerned.

When we investigate what has been going on in the Western Hemisphere from an economic standpoint during the past few years, we find some rather startling facts as to the infiltration of certain European doctrines into South American countries. We cannot defend the Western Hemisphere from a military standpoint if we lose our economic grip. In other words, if the Latin American nations and peoples are dominated industrially and economically by powers which are not in accord with this Government and not in accord with our theory and way of life, we cannot hope to succeed in defending the Monroe Doctrine. For that reason I think this bill should be enacted.

Academically, I have no fault to find with those who say that the bill grants practically unlimited power in making loans to governments and to financial institutions. That is true; but, practically speaking, I find no fault with that power. We are dealing with an unknown quantity. Neither Congress nor any other legislative body can write into the law specifications to meet every contingency which may arise in the development or in the protection of our industrial and economic interests in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. President, I find from an examination of the latest statistics furnished by the Department of Commerce that the imports of Brazil from Germany during the year 1939 were 19.4 percent of Brazil's total imports from the world. She paid to the German economic or industrial interests in 1939 $50,760,000. The imports of Brazil from this country considerably exceeded that amount; but during the past few years the imports from Germany have been steadily increasing. A disturbing feature from an economic standpoint is that the imports from Nazi Germany during 1939 exceeded by 50 percent the exports from the South American countries to Nazi Germany, conclusively showing that Germany is acquiring a stranglehold upon the economic life of the South American republics.

I am not an economist; I certainly am not an industrialist; I do not profess to know the ins and outs of world trade or of commercial intercourse; but I am convinced that if this Nation sits idly by, and does not carry on and prosecute its campaign for the industrial or economic control of the South American republics, it is utterly useless for us to make any attempt to prevent those countries from being dominated by Germany.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. How can the Senator possibly support the statement that Germany has acquired, or was acquiring in 1939, an economic stranglehold on Brazil, when we were selling to Brazil 36 percent of all her imports, and Germany was selling to her something like 18 or 19 percent?

I cannot understand the Senator's argument that economic domination is acquired by selling a nation a large amount of exports.

Mr. MILLER. Let me call attention to a table. I know the Senator has before him the same table I have.

The imports of Brazil from Germany in 1939 were 19.4 percent of Brazil's total imports. The imports of Brazil from the United States in the same year were 33.3 percent of Brazil's total imports.

Mr. TAFT. My figures are 36 percent, but they are approximately the same.

Mr. MILLER. This table was furnished me this morning by Mr. Young, Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce.

The imports of Chile from Germany were 22.7 percent of Chile's total imports, against 31.1 percent in the case of the United States.

Dropping down in the table—I do not care to burden the RECORD—the imports of Ecuador from Germany were 18.1 percent of Ecuador's total imports, against 48.7 percent in the case of the United States.

The total imports of South American countries from the United States in 1939 were 40.1 percent of their total imports. The total imports of South American countries from Germany in 1939 were 12.9 percent of their total imports. Those are the figures; but let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if we have any territory left in the world and if we are going to have any territory left in which to expand commercially or upon which to live, commercially speaking, South America and Canada are the only customers we can have.

Now let me mention a peculiar thing. On the export side, the 20 South American republics exported to Germany in 1939 6 percent of their total exports, while they bought from Germany 12.9 percent of their total imports, the balance of trade flowing to Nazi Germany. They exported to the United States 34.3 percent of their total exports, while they imported from us 40.1 percent of their total imports—a considerable difference in the percentage of the balance of trade.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. MILLER. I will take time on the bill, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the two tables to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MILLER. I do not know whether this is or is not the answer to the problem; but I am firmly convinced—and this is why I think the bill ought to be enacted—that this Government must do something to bring about a closer commercial relationship with South America than has heretofore existed.

Where will we send our exportable commodities after the conclusion of the European war? Where will we find a customer after the war? Will it be among the countries which are overrun by Nazi Germany? If so, upon what terms will we trade? Will it be exclusively under a barter system, or will it be under some other system, dominated and dictated by Nazi Germany? That is the question which concerns me as a Senator. It is a question which I think the Congress must meet now.

I do not know who conceived the idea embodied in the measure before us, whether it grew out of the conference in Habana, whether it emanated from the brain of our Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, or whence it came; but I am not unmindful of the fact that there is a limitation on the credit of a government as on the credit of an individual. However, the war will end sometime, and when it ends there will be a chaotic condition which will make the depression through which we passed after the last war look like a chamber of commerce celebration unless we take every step we can take to prepare for it. If someone else has an idea, if anyone else has some other plan whereby we can make a better approach to the problem and whereby we can weld a better relationship, then he should bring it forth. Frankly, I am not wedded to the proposition suggested, but I am concerned with the general question and with its outcome.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I merely desire to point out that the bill as I propose to amend it would retain the power of the Export-Import Bank to finance exports to South America, would retain the power to finance the development of strategic materials in South America, and would eliminate only the idea of lending on agricultural surpluses and promoting the general economic welfare of South American countries, which to my mind in no way would increase the exports of the United States to South America.

Mr. MILLER. I am familiar with the Senator's amendment. Ordinarily I would find no fault, let me say to him, with his amendment; but as I stated a while ago, not necessarily has Congress committed us, but our traditional national policy has committed this Government irrevocably to hemispheric defense. We cannot further that program if turmoil and strife, if civil warfare, insurrection, famine, and pestilence are rampant in the other countries of this hemisphere, because those are the conditions which produce revolutions.

I know it may be argued that we go far afield when we undertake to become the guardians of the South American republics. I do not argue that we should become their guardians. But we have heard a great deal about the "good neighbor" policy and a great deal about extending to neighboring countries a helping hand under trade treaties. If conditions should develop in South America which would make it imperative that their surplus products be held off the market in aid of orderly marketing, as an indirect aid to this Nation and to its agricultural producers, then I think we should have some agency with authority to handle that problem.

Mr. President, I realize that I have touched only the broader aspects of the bill, but I have given the Senate my views, and I think anyone who is aware of my inherent feelings about these questions knows that I have always been more or less committed to the doctrine of attending to our own business and letting other people alone. But we cannot long proceed on that theory, not because we would not desire to do so, but because of conditions and circumstances over which we have no control. If we wish to sit idly by and let the war end without having any machinery or implements with which to combat the commercial invasion of South American countries by Nazi Germany and Italy and their allies, we have that right; but I am willing to give to the Export-Import Bank the implements and the means provided by the proposed legislation to enable us to make an effort to stabilize conditions in the Western Hemisphere and make it easier for us as a people to maintain the Western Hemisphere way of life.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] has presented a question which emphatically deserves answer. Preparedness against the post-war economic combat is as essential as preparedness in a military sense against the immediate jeopardy. But if the able Senator from Arkansas thinks that he can lean upon the instrumentality now proposed to defend the economic life of the United States in the utterly terrific challenge which we shall confront economically in the post-war era, then I am afraid he is depending upon a broken reed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very briefly. I should like to have my time.

Mr. MILLER. I merely wish to say that I appreciate the Senator's remarks, but I am not relying upon the proposed solution entirely. There are other problems which will tax the ingenuity and the intelligence of every man in the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, yes; and let me tell the Senator, from my humble point of view, some of the things which we should do in line with his hypothesis which we are totally ignoring and neglecting.

We certainly can never build a pan-American economic union, or provide for the adequate promotion of our own exports in this connection, through a mere lending bill. Lack of credit is one of the very minor obstacles now confronting the flow of pan-American trade. It will be one of the very minor obstacles involved in the post-war debacle to which the Senator referred.

Mr. Jesse Jones, who is our best authority on the subject, summarized, at page 92 of the hearings before the House committee on the pending bill, the things which are bothering the development of a satisfactory pan-American flow of trade. What are they? I quote Mr. Jones:

> Numerous import restrictions and exchange regulations have been imposed in most of the other American republics since 1930 and these have been accentuated in certain countries during the last 6 months in order to protect their economies in the face of serious curtailment of European markets as a result of the war. The several Latin American countries have utilized most, if not all, of the various types of trade controls now employed by nations which include, in addition to customs duties, exchange and quota controls, bilateral agreements, official valuations, export taxes, and export subsidies. All of these controls are not employed by each of the countries and some of the controls are enforced more rigidly and are more inclusive in certain countries than in others.

Mr. President, that is the type of complexity which is confronting us, and we in turn confront this multiplied challenge with a continuing fidelity first and with chief reliance on reciprocal-trade treaties based upon the unconditional most-favored-nation principle of international treatment, when of course there cannot be any unconditional most-favored-nation treatment on our part when our objective, as it should be, is to treat one part of the world in a different manner from that in which we treat the other parts. Yet, on the one hand, under the reciprocal program we are relying upon the untenable principle of unconditional most-favored-nation treatment at a time when we announce that our objective is the exact contrary—and it should be—and now it is proposed that we supplement it solely with a lending bill.

Mr. President, the most elementary prudence, as we confront the situation presented by the able Senator from Arkansas, would dictate the creation of a foreign-trade authority in this country, armed with all the powers necessary to deal with all the various phases of the problem which we confront, not only the complexities asserted by Mr. Jones in his testimony I have read, but in whatever other way the problem may develop.

At the present time our foreign-trade problem is dealt with in the State Department in one aspect, and in the Department of Commerce in another aspect. I think there are approximately 30 different bureaus of the Government dealing with our foreign-trade problems. At no point is there a concentrated responsibility for determining what instrumentality we should use in a given situation, what weapons we should forge economically to meet the threat to which the Senator refers. No one is charged with that responsibility, and, in my humble judgment, it is perfectly absurd to talk about meeting that enormous challenge by a mere bill to permit the Export-Import Bank to lend another $500,000,000 in pan-America. Until we create a Federal trade authority large enough and strong enough to meet every phase of the international challenge which we shall confront in the post-war economic conflict, we shall be as weakly prepared upon that front as we, unfortunately, found ourselves to be on the military front.

Lest the Senator from Arkansas think I am merely preaching without practicing, I refer him to the bill which I introduced in the Senate several months ago to create a Federal trade authority, which in turn can meet the problem which he presents to the Senate—a problem which can never be met in this world by any such inadequate contemplation as we are now asked to accept in the name of a complete answer to the jeopardy.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to congratulate the Senator upon the work he is doing. I, for one, agree most heartily that we ought to have an agency to coordinate these problems, and to meet them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it is necessary to have an agency not only to coordinate—and we certainly need that—but we must have an agency which can meet barter with barter, if that is the only way it can be done; to meet exchange with exchange, if that is the only way it can be done; to meet quotas with quotas, if that is the only way to do it. The mere creation of easy money for our good neighbors is no answer at all so far as the fundamental economic challenge is concerned.

Mr. President, so much for the present. So much for my feeling that the bill does not mount to the magnitude of importance which is assigned to it. The problem itself mounts to that magnitude—I concede that freely—and I join the Senator from Arkansas in saying that we must find a way realistically to meet it. The magnitude of the problem exists, but this answer is a very weak and relatively puny one. Nevertheless I should like to see this particular effort made, if it can be made with reasonable safety. But I would not want to see it made on the theory that we have answered the problem and that we can then forget it, because we will not have even started to commence to begin to get ready to meet the problem after the bill shall have been passed.

I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] the same question I asked him before the Senate recessed last night. I wish to be sure if his amendment is put into the bill that there still remains all the orginal powers of the Export-Import Bank to deal in credits to the extent of an additional $500,000,000 pursuant to the practices which the bank has heretofore followed.

Mr. TAFT. I may say that the amendment does not deal with that question. There is a question under the original bill whether or not the $500,000,000 can be used for the original purposes of the Export-Import Bank, and I have suggested an amendment to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to make it perfectly clear that that $500,000,000 can be used for financing American exports. I so intended, but I think there is perhaps a slight question about it under the present language of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I personally do not think there is any question but that the bill as it is now drawn increases the lending power of the Export-Import Bank from $200,000,000 to $700,000,000; that not more than $500,000,000 may be used for the additional authority given to the Export-Import Bank in this bill; and that all funds not so used may be devoted to the other functions of the bank in aiding American exports, under authority previously given.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. TAFT. I may say that if the Senator from New York is unwilling to amend the bill itself, I shall amend my amendment to meet the objection of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator from Ohio. Then we will make certain that we are confronting this problem. We can adopt the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio, and we can then pass the bill as thus amended, and will then have done the following things: We will still be making available $500,000,000 more for the development of pan-American economic unity, and for the adequate promotion of our own exports in this connection. We shall make one-half billion dollars available for the development of these contacts which are deemed so essential through the tried and proven methods of the Export-Import Bank which have thoroughly justified themselves up to date. In addition, the $500,000,000 will be available for use in the development of resources in pan-America which are defined by the President as—

> Strategic and critical materials or of resources and materials which are not produced in the United States in appreciable quantities and which are required for use in the United States.

In other words, after the amendment of the Senator from Ohio shall have been adopted, we still will have a completely comprehensive plan of pan-American aid through the Export-Import Bank. The only thing that then substantially will be lacking, Mr. President—and it is the only way that I know of that we can inject this limitation into this adventure—is that it will not be possible under the bill, as amended by the Senator from Ohio, to create an international cartel to handle all exportable surpluses of all the agricultural commodities of all the 21 republics in the western world. That was the original purpose behind the pending bill. The increased loaning power for the Export-Import Bank was born in connection with a scheme for the creation of an international cartel to control the exportable surplus in agriculture all throughout this New World, at the expense of the Treasury of the United States. Now we are told that plan has been abandoned.

Of course, it would have to be abandoned if there were any remote consultation with common sense. It would have to be abandoned if there were any consultation with our own experience, because, heaven knows, we have not yet discovered how to get out from under the fiscal responsibility involved in subsidizing our own exportable surpluses in agricultural commodities, and if under the terms of the bill we are to multiply the existing hazard to the extent of the problem as it rises in 21 other republics in the New World, and charge the account to the Treasury of the United States, the contemplation is simply fantastic. Yet that was the original contemplation.

Now we are told, I repeat, that nothing of the sort is intended. But, Mr. President, the whole original scheme can proceed without changing the dot on an "i" or the cross on a "t" so far as the language in the bill is concerned.

My sole purpose and hope is that, through the adoption of the amendment submitted by the able Senator from Ohio, we can release $500,000,000 of additional credit for the laudable purposes and objectives to which the bill is addressed, and yet be sure that we have saved ourselves from the utter monstrosity of an international cartel to control agricultural surpluses throughout the western world at the expense of the Treasury of the United States.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am supporting the Taft amendment, and I hope that the bill, as thus amended, may be adopted.

Mr. WILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield so I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WILEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	King	Reed
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwartz

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR ASHURST

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I have just sent—not at public expense, but charged to my personal account—the following telegram:

Judge ERNEST W. MCFARLAND,
Phoenix, Ariz.:

Heartiest congratulations upon your victory. You will make splendid Senator, and when Congress adjourns I shall come home to campaign joyously for you and the entire State ticket. I wish for you health, happiness, and political success.

SENATOR ASHURST.

About 7 o'clock this morning the telephone rang, and when I answered, a venerable lady who lived in Arizona more than 56 years ago spoke and said "Senator, I am distressed to see in the newspaper that you are defeated. What are you going to do for a living now?" [Laughter.] I said, "I may rest a year, and then practice law." She said, "Oh, are you a lawyer?" [Laughter.]

Coming to the Capitol in a taxicab, the young man who was driving said, "Senator, what are you going to do for a living now?" I said, "I think I shall sell apples." [Laughter.] He said, "What do you mean by that?" I replied, "Well, for almost 30 years I have successfully distributed applesauce in the Capitol. I ought now to be able to sell a few apples." [Laughter.]

I am sure some of my colleagues expect me to describe the sensation of defeat. The first half hour you believe that the earth has slipped from beneath your feet, that the stars above your head have paled and faded, and you wonder what the Senate will do without you, and you wonder how the country will get along without you. But within another half hour there comes a peace and a joy that would be envied by the world's greatest philosopher.

So much by way of camaraderie; and now, no longer speaking jocosely, I do not intend to trespass upon the time of the Senator from Wisconsin, or to take the time of the Senate or of the country to describe the means and the manner by which a child of the desert ascended the steep but glamorous acclivity to the Alps of fame. I am sure that my descent of the declivity will be as graceful and pleasant as was the ascent of the acclivity.

I say here in this presence that my ascent in politics and success in life were due to two great women. One was my mother, and the other my wife. Without their help and support I probably would have been nothing more than a cipher, with the rim removed.

How far my opposition to the peacetime draft influenced the electorate in my State I do not know; and, without being flippant, or defiant, I do not care. No man is fit to be a Senator and no man should presume to serve here unless he is willing at any time to surrender his political life for a great principle, for a vital thing in American liberty and stability.

We frequently hear the Senate criticized. Quite recently it was deplored that there had been a heated debate on the floor of the Senate. Mr. President, I welcome the heat of debate between Senators. It is a sign of freedom. There is no life in the still and dead waters. It was a singular and happy circumstance that about the same time the so-called heated debate occurred on the floor of our Senate a still more torrid debate was taking place in the British House of Commons, in which the Prime Minister, Winston Churchill, took part. Rolands were given for Olivers; there was thrust and there was riposte. Those are signs of a free people. Senators need not be disturbed by heated debates in the Senate or House. They are signs, signal smokes, evidences of a free parliament and a free people.

Moreover, Senators, you should not be disturbed by criticism of Congress. When the press or citizens generally criticize Congress, it is the sign of a free people. As I said once before, if one were a stranger to this planet, but understood somewhat human affairs, and he had made an excursion here to discover quickly and accurately what governments were free and what were despotic and autocratic, he would not look to the Treasury to ascertain what governments were free; he would not even look to the army or the navy. He would look to the parliament, the lawmaking body. If its members spoke freely, and said what they believed, and if the citizens who elected the parliament were free at all times to criticize the parliament or the congress, these would be the signs, the symbols, and the proofs of a free people.

We hear it said that the Senate is not so great now as it was in bygone days. Mr. President, after many years in the Senate I am prepared to testify that today the Senate is as great as it was in what we think of as the majestic past.

Webster, whose voice boomed like a golden bell hung in the canopy of the skies, could not be elected by any constituency today. I doubt very much if Henry Clay could be elected by any constituency today. Not even the great logician John C. Calhoun could be elected. Thomas H. Benton could not be elected today. The most imperious, and one of the ablest of all men who ever served in the Senate, Roscoe Conkling, who was elected Senator three times from New York, could not carry New York today. By a like token, not one of us could have been elected to the Senate in their day. Persons change, manners and philosophies change, although American principles remain the same.

Mr. President, I shall not waste any time on such miserable twaddle as to say that I ought to have been elected. A man only moderately versed in statesmanship, and with only a small degree of sportsmanship, is bound to admit that in a free republic, in a government such as ours, it is the undoubted right of the people to change their servants, and to remove one and displace him with another at any time they choose, for a good reason, for a bad reason, or for no reason at all. If we are to remain a free people, it is the duty of public servants not grumpily and sourly to accept the verdict of the majority, but joyously to accept that verdict; and I joyously accept the verdict of my party. But it would be hypocrisy and pretense for me to say that I do not regret leaving the Senate. Senators, I deeply regret that I shall not be here with you when you convene in January.

During these 29 years I have served with many different men. I had heated debates with some of them. Elihu Root, of New York, and I did not agree in our philosophies. I had heated debates with him, but to his dying day we were close friends. Senator Bailey, of Texas, was one of the most eloquent of all the orators ever in the Senate. We had heated debates, but to his dying day I cherished a fond affection for Senator Bailey, of Texas. The most heated debate I ever had in the Senate was with Bristow, of Kansas, but there was never a better Senator than Joseph L. Bristow, of Kansas.

Mr. President, this is not exactly a swan song, as I may take part in the discussion on the tax bill at the appropriate time, or on other questions which may come before the Senate before its adjournment, but I deem it not inappropriate to make these remarks.

To say that I am grateful to the people of Arizona for keeping me here in the Senate so long is but a feeble expression of my sense of gratitude. I am not only grateful to the people of Arizona for keeping me here so long, but I am grateful for that which they additionally did for me. I doubt very much if it was ever done for any other Senator. During my entire service they allowed me to do as I pleased and to say what I pleased. I should rather serve 1 week doing as I please than to serve 30 years doing what somebody else pleases. For the fact that the people of Arizona have allowed me to carry on as I chose I am duly grateful. As I said before, they have a right to displace a Senator for a good reason, a bad reason, or for no reason at all; and I should be lacking in frankness, I should be disingenuous if I failed to say that they probably had a fairly good reason for displacing me.

Mr. President, when I take my leave in January, I shall carry with me tender and precious memories of our associations here. In all my 29 years here I do not believe a single unkind word has ever been said of me by any Senator; and I am overwhelmed when I remember the thousands of acts of kindness, of courtesy, and of forebearance which have been extended to me by all Senators during my service.

I particularly am grateful to my colleague from Arizona, Senator HAYDEN. Fortunate is the State to have a Senator like the Senator from Arizona, CARL HAYDEN, and fortunate is a Senator who has a colleague from Arizona like Senator HAYDEN, industrious, brave, honest, and capable to a superlative degree. I feel that he is entitled to and should receive this public but all-to-inconclusive a tribute.

I shall always have for the Senate an inviolable attachment for its honor, its purposes, and its success.

A great many people unwisely imagine that the beauty and serenity of life inhere in office. No, Mr. President; royalty and honor do not necessarily inhere in cabinets, congresses, and courts; royalty and honor inhere in the citizen. Honor of itself does not reside in office; honor resides in the man. The great things of life are not signed and sealed before a notary public; they reside in honor.

When my present colleagues are here worrying about patronage, worrying about committee assignments, and about the scorching demands of constituents I shall possibly be enjoying the ecstasy of the starry stillness of an Arizona desert night, or viewing the scarlet glory of her blossoming cactus, and possibly I may be wandering through the petrified forest in Arizona, a forest which lived its green milleniums and put on immortality 7,000,000 years ago. Enjoyment and ecstasy arise in human life from the contemplation and appreciation of such things.

Many people, many good people, many Senators—and Senators we will admit are good people—are inclined sometimes to take a pessimistic view of our country's future. There are many reasons why we will survive when other nations have gone down. First, we may depend upon the justice of Americans, the dignity of mankind itself, and the dignity of mankind especially is noted in American life. In a material way we have the richness of the earth, of its soils, of its mines, and its forests and its minerals. We have the heritage of the inventions of all the past. We are the inheritors of the body, the corpus, of all the inventions of the past both in the art of government, and in science, and in industry.

Moreover, Mr. President, the American people have that transcendent attribute which I believe is superior to the other things I have mentioned—the determination to remain free. As William Allen White said in an article not 3 days ago, democracies cannot be extinguished by tanks and airplanes. The democratic spirit; that is, the spirit of freedom, is inborn, invincible, ineradicable in the true American.

In 1831, 109 years ago, a brilliant Frenchman toured the United States. We were not opulent then; the great monuments of architecture, of art, and the temples of religion, of industry, of learning, of mammon were not then erected. His name was De Tocqueville. When he returned to France he wrote, as all Frenchmen do, brilliantly, and in one of the concluding paragraphs of his book he said:

> During my journey throughout America I sought for the secret of the genius and the greatness of America; I sought for her genius and greatness and growth and glory in her rich soils, in her rich mines, her great forests, her fallow fields, her ample rivers and noble harbors, but I did not discover it there. I further sought for the reason for her growth and her glory and her genius and her greatness, and I found it in her matchless Constitution; I found it in her schools, churches, and homes, ablaze with righteousness. It was there in her Constitution, in her homes, in her schools, in her churches, that I found the true secret of the source of America's genius and greatness.

So it is, fellow Senators. America is great because she is good. When America is no longer good, she will no longer be great.

In conclusion, our country is fortunate in that we have inherited all in history that has gone before us. America does not belong to the past, as some pessimists would have us believe, America belongs to the future. Every American citizen is entitled to say, "Mine is the glorious past, mine is the shining future." I, for one, decline to believe that as a Nation or a people we are losing any of our vital inspiration. I believe that we are still clinging to and will continue to cling to the stern old virtues that made America great and strong, for this system of American government is a precious distillation of art and of truth more romantic than imagination can conceive or fiction can invent.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, next January when we again meet in this Chamber, there will be a presence missing, but our friend and comrade, Senator ASHURST, will not be absent from our hearts and minds. We know the distinguished Senator has not gone down to defeat. Napoleon himself said that no one goes down to defeat except he who accepts it. The Senator from Arizona does not accept defeat. Mr. President, as a Republican Senator and one of the novitiates in the Senate, I can say that the distinguished Senator has my love and respect and affection. We will miss him for many reasons. He never rose in the Senate that he did not give an idea that made us better for what he said. He always thought straight and clear. The Senate can ill afford to lose his philosophy, his equanimity, and his smile. He has built his house not on the sand but on the rock—the rock of service, high thinking, and fine living.

We know, Mr. President, that as he goes out from here he will continue to give his fellow men the benefit of his way of life. He will continue to serve his fellow men. We know not what direction such service may take, but we do know it will be constructive and helpful to his fellows. If he were to continue to give the message to America that he has been giving ever since I came to the Senate—a message of cheer, of courage, of fearlessness—America would be stronger and healthier, financially, morally, and spiritually. His life exemplifies the words of Browning that—

Life has meaning and to find its meaning is my meat and drink.

Senator ASHURST has been a seeker for truth, for more light. The loss of office will not unbalance him. He knows there are "more worlds yet to conquer"—more adventure up ahead.

I believe that he will go out of office with a smile on his lips accepting the challenge that tomorrow presents, and he will continue to fulfill in the highest way his obligations to the Government in this crucial period which we face. We wish him continued health, joy, and prosperity.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, Senate bill 4204 to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington opens new doors economically and politically through which Uncle Sam is asked to step. Under this administration we have stepped out into many blind passages. Here is another opportunity for "adventure in the red," for "a rendezvous with destiny"—lending and spending.

Mr. President, we are told by the Senator from New York that this bill is an essential part of our total-defense program and will give us an opportunity to prove again our good-neighbor policy.

A famous Frenchwoman once said, "Oh, liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name." We might paraphrase that statement and say, "Oh, total defense, what crimes are to be committed in thy name."

The pending bill proposes to give the Export-Import Bank an increase of $500,000,000 in its capital stock, $500,000,000 of the people's money from the R. F. C. What for? To loan to South American countries and banks. The distinguished Senator from New York says, "it confers authority broad and flexible." That is true.

The American people have two and a half billion dollars in defaulted South American bonds. The excuse for the default is given by the distinguished Senator from New York; and I ask Senators to read his great speech for it was a great speech. He therein pictures a condition which should cause us to pause before repeating this "high adventure," and I repeat what I said, putting $500,000,000 more into South America. Are we throwing more good American dollars after bad ones, Mr. President? What does this policy lead to? Let us see.

The first objective, as outlined by the distinguished Senator from New York, and which the bill contains, is to develop our trade with South America. We are told that this will develop our trade. That sounds good. We want more trade. We heard an exposition today by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], giving us some figures. I say, this sounds good, but how develop our trade is the question? Loan money to South America so that she can buy our goods we are told. We did that before, and we have two and a half billion dollars of their I O U's. South America learned that lesson from "the boys" over in Europe. We have from Europe billions of their I O U's. They borrow and pay not.

Does this policy create sound commerce? That is the question. Even if we assume that loaning results in their taking our money and buying our goods, does it create sound commerce? Does it build for good relationship? Stop and think that one over: Does it build for good relationship, or is America just being made a sucker?

I can give away my own money which I have in my pocket, and which belongs to me, but can I, as a trustee, a public servant, give away Uncle Sam's money? That is what loaning money to South America will amount to.

The second objective claimed is that the passage of this bill will provide a means of getting strategic materials. I am strongly for that result. Therefore we should adopt the Taft amendment, with the amendment suggested to it today by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]; but let me say, Mr. President, that we can get strategic materials any time by buying them and paying for them; so there is not a great deal even to that argument.

The third objective of the bill, according to the Senator from New York, is to aid in the orderly marketing of Latin American surpluses, because, as it is said, "The threat of totalitarian infiltration is very real." That was demonstrated today by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], too—that Germany has gotten a hold, he calls it a strangle hold, on South America. I cannot concede the strangle hold, but I know Germany is down there. We know that. This argument of marketing South America's products also sounds very good, but a keen analysis of it will show that it is not so good. It is just like many other of the fancy ideas of the past 7 years. Are we to drag America into becoming Santa Claus for the cotton, sugar, wheat, and meat producers of South America? Let us ask ourselves that question. Let us be realistic about it. We have done that for our own people; but are we going to tax our people, are we going to take money from our own people now, to attempt to step into South America and become Santa Claus down there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin on the amendment has expired.

Mr. WILEY. I will take other time on the bill, Mr. President.

Let us be practical. If we have all the gold in the world, none of the countries can pay in gold except ourselves. The other countries can pay in goods. We can buy South American coffee, tin, and other noncompetitive goods, and South America can, with the money she gets and the credit she can obtain, buy what she needs of our goods; or we can do a little bartering between us.

The fact of Germany's infiltration of South America is established. The distinguished Senator makes out a good case in that respect, in that he establishes the fact of the infiltration; but I ask—and this is the real question—Can we meet this infiltration by America loaning money to South American nations? I answer that question, "No."

How, then, can we meet the danger of German domination in South America caused by this infiltration?

The argument made on this floor is that we can meet that problem by loaning $500,000,000 to the South American banks and to the governments of South America. I say that cannot be done. That sort of thing has not even solved similar problems in our own country. What should we do, then?

First, let us use a little horse sense. Let us say to South America, "We expect you to pay the honest obligations that you owe in this country." Let us get down to brass tacks, so they will know that when we deal with them we are not making gifts.

Second, let us infiltrate South America with Americans who know the languages of South America. Let us educate our youth to speak Spanish and Portuguese. Let the youth of this country go down there and speak the languages of South America. Let them go down there and help South America. Let them go down there and deal honestly and fairly.

Third, let us exchange scholars and professors and ideas with South America.

Fourth, let us start traveling to South America. Let the tourists of North America go down there and spend their money seeing that great country, and learning what South America has to show to them; and let these tourists show their appreciation of South American culture and customs. Let them become acquainted with South Americans, and let them become friendly with South American people.

Fifth, let this Government and its agencies cooperate in every way to offset Nazi propaganda, methods, and domination. But, Mr. President, let us not try to buy friendship. That never can be done. You and I have never succeeded in buying friendship. If we seem to gain friendship by buying it, the friendship is not real or lasting or genuine.

But I hear someone say, "Something must be done." Yes; something must be done. What?

(a) South America herself must immediately awaken to her own danger. Every country has a right to expel and should expel every person who is plotting her downfall; who is a "fifth columnist," or who settles in the country and will not swear allegiance to her flag. Every country has a right to expel such a person.

(b) South America should, and we should, foster the idea of creating one or two strong nations in South America, several or even one United States of South America.

(c) We should lend her our experts in business and science and government and defense. Yes; we might even leave a few of those experts down there permanently. We can get along without some of them.

South America should belong economically to South Americans, and not to Europeans. South America should belong politically to South America, and to no other nation.

Mr. President, I desire to compliment the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] on a great speech. As I said, I read it over again last night. I might say, paraphrasing the words of a great Roman, "Almost thou persuadest me" by thy picture of the situation in South America. If the money it is proposed to lend were my money, I might even chance it, but it is the people's money that we are asked to lend and spend, and, Mr. President, in my opinion, showing the situation which exists in South America does not prove anything. It does not show that lending this money will solve the problem. In other words, there is nothing to show that lending this money would remedy the evil or would bring about the desired result. This $500,000,000 would be just a drop in the bucket. We should be asked, I believe, to pour more and more millions into this rat-hole.

I believe the use of this money is not the way out of the dilemma. Spending the money, or lending it, would prove to be just another palliative. The mere profligate use of money, as this administration has demonstrated time and time again, is no curative. It leaves the patient worse off than before.

Let South America demonstrate that American capital is safe there and American private capital will flow to South America. Let us provide for our own people here, as suggested by one of the Senators today, not by any guardianship—that weakens an individual or a people—but by raising the income of America. Give the farmers of America an increased purchasing power. If we could increase it so that each of them had $500 more to spend, we should see the economic life of the United States made healthy.

The mirage of foreign trade—and it generally averages only about 5 percent of our total trade, and 2½ percent of that is noncompetitive—is leading us out into the desert. I hope we shall be able to find a spring out there, but it is dangerous to tread those hot sands and not know where we are going.

As the Senator from Michigan says, the lending of money is a broken reed on which to lean. Foreign trade in the post-war period will indeed be a poor staff on which to lean.

Build America strong, build her strong within her borders, and we will be able to meet the post-war era with chins up, even as the distinguished Senator from Arizona is meeting his situation with chin up, with a smile on his lips, with victory in his heart, and knowing that life ahead is rich.

Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a very illuminating discussion of the Latin American economic problem found in a recent issue of the bulletin of the National City Bank of New York, dated September 1940.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LATIN AMERICAN ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Measuring the results against what it set out to do, the Pan American Conference held in Habana, July 21 to 30, is entitled to general acclaim. The chief object of the conference was to provide against the possibility of a victorious Germany seizing British, French, or Dutch possessions on this side of the Atlantic. The United States made proposals, but the agreement reached was in the fullest sense a joint expression embodying the views of other countries. It took the form, first, of a solemn pact to counter with joint action, or independently if necessary, any projected transfer of sovereignty over the territories held by European powers in the American hemisphere; and it included a 19-point convention which covers the steps to be taken, details of the provisional administration of such territories, and their final disposition. This swift agreement, which gives the Monroe Doctrine a stronger continental backing than it has ever before had, is evidence that statesmen and public opinion of all countries are united upon questions involving territorial integrity and security.

Secondly, the conference agreed upon a declaration on inter-American economics, providing especially for study and action on the emergency problems created by the war. The economic declarations are less definite than the political pact, but no more was practicable or expected. An attempt to devise cooperative measures to cover contingencies which are still vague would have been futile.

SOUTH AMERICA'S TRADE INTERESTS

The fact that political problems could not be considered without reference to economic problems is obvious. The South American countries do not wish to sever or weaken valued trade relations, and they are more dependent upon foreign trade, and upon Europe, than the United States. They normally export 30 to 50 percent of their production. In peacetime years half of their exports have gone to Europe and half of their imports have come from Europe. Many of their major products are also major products of the United States, with which we are heavily supplied, and there is no natural market for them here.

Furthermore, South American exports worth $490,000,000, and representing 31 percent of the total, went to the European Continent, as shown by the table following. The war and the extension of the British blockade have virtually destroyed this trade. Exports to Great Britain and the United States have increased; nevertheless, surpluses of some commodities have piled up, with depressing effects upon markets, and unless conditions change before the next crops are harvested the situation in other commodities will be critical.

Supplies of foreign exchange (particularly dollars) available to the South American countries to pay for imports and meet other requirements are diminishing. It has been calculated, for example, that each decline of 1 cent per pound in coffee reduces Colombia's available foreign exchange at the rate of $5,000,000 annually, and coffee has dropped about 4½ cents in a year. Colombia has borrowed $8,000,000 from the Export-Import Bank at Washington and restricted nonessential imports to a minimum. Venezuelan oil exports have been disappointing, and the ending of a barter agreement with Germany has reduced exports and compelled her to find free exchange for the corresponding imports. The same situation affects Chile. Brazilian coffee shipments have fallen and the sale of cotton is slow and uncertain. The details differ, but all the countries are affected. Some thought they would benefit temporarily from war trade, but in fact the inescapable losses due to the war are being incurred now.

These are facts which were bound to be of chief concern in a conference dealing with American-European relations. The Latin American nations are unanimous in wanting security. Individually they also want to preserve their trade. Their international policies must take trade into account. The United States, whose policy is to promote a free world trade, cannot be other than sympathetic with their difficulties.

DECLARATION UPON INTER-AMERICAN ECONOMICS

The economic declaration made by the conference properly recognizes that the problem includes two distinct though related parts. First, it states that the American nations maintain their adherence to liberal principles of commerce, and that they propose to apply these principles to their mutual relations as widely as circumstances permit, and to all their commerce as soon as non-American countries are disposed to reestablish them. It will be appropriate to refer to these declarations after the war. They constitute a clear statement that so far as the preferences of the American countries go they are indisposed to barter and the equivalent totalitarian methods of which they have had experience.

The second part of the problem, the disruption of South American exports by the war, is concrete and urgent. The declaration calls for amplification of the activities of the Inter-American Economic and Financial Consultative Committee, created at the Panama Conference last fall. It charges this Committee to study measures whereby living standards can be raised, internal consumption of export products increased, and interchange among the American nations advanced; to create instruments of inter-American cooperation for warehousing, financing, and transitory disposition of surpluses; to formulate programs for the distribution of surplus products as humanitarian measures; and for promoting economic development with suitable financial aid.

These recommendations are all appropriate and in principle noncontroversial. Meanwhile President Roosevelt has asked Congress for legislation making an additional $500,000,000 available to the Export-Import Bank, to enable the bank to make loans to governments and governmental agencies of other Western Hemisphere countries. The President's request was made during the conference, and was a commitment as to the administration's attitude, although naturally not binding on the Congress. One of the several purposes of the proposal, as expressed in the President's message, is to finance indirectly the "handling and orderly marketing of some part of their surpluses." The bill at this writing has passed the House of Representatives and is expected to become law.

ROLE OF THE UNITED STATES

The role to be played in economic affairs by the United States, whose paramount interest is in defense and security, is one for the gravest consideration. The first question is whether this country, accepting the President's leadership, should help in dealing with the immediate difficulties. While of uncertain duration, the emergency is obviously temporary, inasmuch as European needs for the food and supplies which are piling up on this side of the ocean will some time be immense. This is one justification for support to bridge over the period of disruption.

Second, the economic situation in the United States is affected. Pressure to sell products competitive with ours, which formerly went to the Continent, depresses our markets, as witness the sharp decline in hide prices, from 13½ cents on May 10 to 9¾ cents, due to weakening of the Argentine market and larger imports into the United States. Lead prices are down, due to excessive Mexican and Peruvian supplies. The loss of exports to Europe diminishes the ability of South American countries to buy goods here, since they have normally covered part of their payments to the United States by converting the proceeds of sales to Europe. At the same time the proceeds of exports of certain commodities to Great Britain, notably Argentine and Uruguayan meat, by agreement have been blocked in pounds sterling, usable only in Great Britain, which reflects the British necessity to conserve foreign exchange. Inability to convert these British funds into dollars prompted Argentina in June to arrange a credit of $20,000,000 with the Export-Import Bank.

In the third place, defense of a hemisphere is a common enterprise. The United States asked from the conference only cooperation in the common interest, and sought nothing for itself. The Latin American countries have confidence in Secretary Hull, and have learned that this country has no imperialistic aims and will take no selfish advantage of their necessities. Manifestly, however, if the United States contributes financial aid it is better able to ask for equivalent contributions to defense. Negotiations are in progress for naval bases in British possessions. Whether the use of bases on the continent of South America would be advisable is for the general staffs to decide, and we do not presume to offer an opinion. The question may be typical, however, of those which come up as defense is explored.

These are the arguments for the Export-Import Bank proposals. There is also much to be considered on the other side. Even though the United States has interests at stake, in the long run each country must bear its own losses resulting from the war; and for the most part it appears that each South American country desires to make its own adjustments and minimize its losses in its own way, appealing only for such financial assistance as will spread the burden over a longer time. As a general rule resort to loans for economic relief is simply taking the path of least resistance. Loans open no new markets to the borrower, they add to his burdens for the future, and in the long run they are likely to bring him little benefit.

The United States has had experience with loans to support commodities, and the best that can be said of them is that the need tends to become perpetual unless production is concurrently controlled. It is not to be expected that independent countries will allow their production or trade policies to be governed by an outside authority. Plainly they are the business of each country. Many of the South American countries are already making loans out of their own resources, and controlling supplies for market in one way or another.

PROPOSALS TO PURCHASE COMMODITIES

It has been proposed also that the United States should purchase appropriate quantities of commodities which can be used here, though not now needed, and carry them as a reserve; and probably more will be heard of this proposal. It might apply, for example, to Chilean nitrates, which are fertilizers and are needed to make explosives; to Argentine wool and hides, of which this country is regularly an importer; to Peruvian long-staple cotton, replacing Egyptian cotton here; and to a considerable number of less important commodities which this country regularly imports.

It must be recognized that any purchase plan would involve dangers. Unless favored by unusual good fortune, losses would probably be incurred. Any effort to withdraw surpluses from markets tends to stimulate overproduction and lead to still larger surpluses. The stocks withdrawn, if their disposition is uncertain, are an incalculable and disrupting element in normal trade. Moreover, a commitment by one country for the benefit of another may be interpreted as implying commitments for the future and considered a form of subsidy that cannot be withdrawn without repercussions.

These hazards make it plain that any program of purchases should be clearly and definitely limited as to time, as to the quantities of commodities involved, and as to the prices fixed; and that the disposition of the stocks in orderly manner should be provided for. The governing principle should be that the market support should bridge over a temporary situation and should not be construed as a substitute for natural trade.

If a purchase program could in fact be arranged within these limitations, it appears from the figures that a great deal of aid in the emergency could be given with comparatively small sums. Calculating the average exports of Chilean nitrate, for example, at 1,600,000 tons, a contract for 400,000 tons would make up for most of the possible loss of sales for the year 1940 and would support normal operations in the nitrate industry. The cost in Chile at $12 a ton would be $4,800,000.

Purchases of wool would run to considerably higher totals, if lost European markets were to be wholly compensated for; but this country is normally an importer of wool, and possibly could increase its consumption of Argentine carpet wools in place of oriental wools now inaccessible. The same comments apply to hides, cocoa, and long-staple cotton, and the amounts that would give relief would not run to many millions. In coffee substantial sums (perhaps $25,000,000 to $30,000,000) would be required to absorb the major part of the 5,250,000 bags of Brazilian coffee and 750,000 bags of Colombian coffee normally exported to the Continent, and the disposition of the stocks acquired would present difficult problems. The coffee surplus is chronic in Brazil, however, and for years has been dealt with locally.

What the United States could do with the huge surplus of Argentine corn is not clear, since we have a corn-surplus problem also; the Argentine Government is lending growers 15 cents a bushel to keep corn on the farm. Argentine wheat and flaxseed present no great difficulties at present, as stocks are not abnormal. The next crops, however, will come to market with very unfavorable prospects if the war continues.

We lack space for further elaboration of the facts in each commodity market. It is sufficient to say that the situation as it now exists requires no grandiose scheme for its alleviation. Nor are the amounts of money needed for storage and orderly marketing as large as many people have assumed. It remains to be seen how far they are beyond the means of the countries concerned, and whether the requests for assistance from the United States will mount to large sums, as compared with other government spending for economic relief. One thing is certain: The greater the scale of proposed assistance the more likely it is to be wasteful and empty of ultimate benefit.

The cartel proposal, by which Latin-American commodities normally exported to Europe would have been impounded in a huge pool financed by the United States, which would have controlled their sale, has perished unregretted. The proposed obligations to be assumed by this country were excessive and the plan probably unmanageable; and to the Latin Americans the surrender of authority over their trade was objectionable. With the nature of post-war trade undefined, and the feared totalitarian threats still wholly in the realm of surmise and speculation, it would be premature to begin combating them by setting up pan-American totalitarian measures.

APPROACHES TO A BROADER TRADE

Two fundamental facts underlie trade relations between the United States and Latin America. One is the general truth that all trade must be two-way in character. The other is the fact, already pointed out, that many products, particularly of South America, are competitive with rather than complementary to United States products, and that the major trade of their producers therefore is with Europe. Efforts to increase pan-American economic solidarity must be in harmony with these facts.

Three lines of approach may be suggested. One is that increased standards of living everywhere in the hemisphere would absorb more of the raw materials in which the surpluses exist. Greater industrialization would raise living standards in South America, and improved roads and other communications would enlarge the internal trade. The United States, which has management, technical ability, and capital goods to export, can aid productive economic development, and in the present situation opportunities for sound capital investments and intermediate term loans, by the Export-Import Bank or private interests, are less likely to be overlooked than ever before.

The second approach is the development in Latin America of new products not competitive with United States products, and expanded output of articles which we now draw from more remote sources. The number of commodities with possibilities for development is long, but the possible volume with some exceptions is small, and progress is necessarily slow.

The third approach is to determine whether more Latin American products, although competitive with American agriculture or industry, could be admitted into this country without disrupting domestic production to an extent that would offset the general benefits. It cannot be said too often that closer economic relations must begin with larger imports from Latin America. The larger exports would follow.

There is no over-all or quick and easy solution to the problem. Natural and well-developed trade relations can shift only gradually and in response to patient, careful, and mutually sympathetic effort. But if the American nations approach the problem in that manner they unquestionably will find that they are dealing not merely with a possibly critical situation, but with a great opportunity.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I believe no one can seriously find fault with the announced and, of course, the real purpose of the pending legislation. I believe there is no American who has given serious consideration to the subject of the future control of South American and Central American trade who is not thoroughly disturbed over the possibility that the expansion of our trade in that direction is seriously jeopardized by infiltration from abroad. But the question of the desirability, the merit, or the attractiveness of a goal is no excuse for choosing a route to reach that goal which has no justification.

I wish to call attention to the steps by which we have reached the point of considering the particular proposal now before us, and I wish to say, as a prelude, that I cannot support the proposed legislation unless the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio shall be adopted and added to the bill.

Mr. President, in 1934, under the authority of the National Industrial Recovery Act, section 2, the President of the United States issued Executive Order No. 6581, setting up the Export-Import Bank, and he used this language:

> For the purpose of aiding in the financing and facilitating exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between the United States and any of its Territories and insular possessions and any foreign country and agency.

The purpose, as developed by the National Industrial Recovery Act, was to furnish an agency, a tool, and an instrumentality through which the United States might possibly recapture some of the foreign markets for our surpluses, particularly agricultural surpluses, which had been ruthlessly thrown away. We have been utilizing that agency and that power to extend loans for the purpose of negotiating contracts for the marketing of American products and the exchange of our products in foreign markets.

In 1935, in section 713 (b), Title XV of the United States Code, the Congress of the United States gave legislative approval to the Executive order which the President had promulgated, and this statutory enactment repeated, almost word for word, the purposes set forth in the President's proclamation. I read from section 713 (b). Up to the period June 30, 1941, the two Export-Import Banks were given this general banking authority—

> For the purpose of aiding in the financing and facilitating exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between the United States and any of its Territories and insular possessions and foreign nations.

There has been only one purpose at any time, and that was to furnish the funds which might enable us to negotiate contracts with foreign nations for the sale of our products, and again recapture the foreign trade. But what is the pending bill, what is the proposal? Is it to facilitate the trade of the United States? Oh, no. It is proposed "in order to assist in the orderly marketing of products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere," which is an entire change of purpose, having no reference whatever to the idea that we through this agency might furnish money to enable us to negotiate sales of our products. It is to enable the foreign nations in the Western Hemisphere to market their products. With us? No. Where? Most of their products are competitive with ours. We do not want them here. Most of them are competitive with our agricultural surpluses.

There is not one word in the pending bill which would prevent the money loaned to any nation in the Western Hemisphere from being used to promote marketing their surpluses in the world markets in competition with us, and thus taking our markets away.

Everyone knows the situation as to agriculture in the United States. Everyone knows the distress in which we have found ourselves because of the backing up of our agricultural surpluses through the destruction of our foreign markets; yet it is proposed that the agency by which we are seeking to recover those markets shall now be subverted into an agency which could be utilized against us.

I adverted to this matter yesterday when the distinguished majority leader was speaking, and I asked him whether there was anything in the measure as proposed which would prevent the use of the money to be loaned for financing the sale of agricultural surpluses of the country to which a loan might be made, in competition with us, and the distinguished Senator said:

> It is inconceivable to me that the Export-Import Bank would make loans * * * primarily and exclusively in order to enable that country to market its products in competition with ours.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], rose and stated also, adverting to Mr. Jones' testimony, "Whatever contract is made will protect American agriculture."

Of course, that is true. A request for one of these loans would be submitted to the President, under terms laid down by Mr. Jones, or whoever might be in charge, and it would be made on the approval of the President; but the time has long since passed when, in my opinion, it is justifiable for the Congress of the United States to leave to the tender mercies and consideration of any individual the contract and conditions under which the public finances may be expended and disbursed; and that is what is proposed. By the amendment pending, or additional amendments, we can so secure ourselves that the money may not be so used.

We hear reference made to the infiltration of Germany into the markets of South and Central America. There is not a word in the bill which would prevent the money loaned to Brazil, or the Argentine, or Chile, or San Salvador, or Honduras, being used in financing the sale of their products to Italy or Germany. It would have to be protected against, as stated by the eminent Senator from New York, in the contract itself. But we are asked to enact legislation which would make us absolutely dependent on the wisdom, the justice, and the dependability of the countries with which we would be dealing. I would be the last person in the world to question them in any way, but I do question the wisdom of the United States Congress refusing to protect the agricultural interests and the industrial interests of this country, when we pass legislation placing in the hands of any man,

I do not care who he may be, the right to lend our money under such terms as may be laid down, money which could, under the terms of the legislation we are passing, be utilized to finance the sale of products in competition with our own in the markets we are seeking to reach.

Because of the reasons I have given, I cannot support the bill unless it shall be amended as I have suggested.

Mr. WAGNER obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. I rose for that purpose also.

Mr. WAGNER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words before the vote is taken on the amendment.

The distinguished majority leader yesterday, in arguing for the bill, made the statement that:

> One of the reasons why Great Britain is now in her dire distress and extremity is that the people of Great Britain were more anxious to balance their budget and to keep down taxes than they were to prepare for what is now happening.

I do not agree with that statement. While the British people undoubtedly made a tremendous mistake in not preparing adequately, I doubt very much whether it was any financial consideration which brought about that result. It is traceable to the international agreements, and to the ideas of the League of Nations. I should say that the statement that Great Britain's desire to balance her budget brought her into her present condition, is wholly erroneous.

I object very strongly to the implication which will inevitably be drawn from the position of the majority leader. Even if that assumption were true, it is argued that since England is unprepared, therefore we should forget our own Budget, and pay no attention to the ordinary rules which should govern the fiscal administration of a government. It is argued that we must accept any expenditure that is proposed under the label of defense. It is argued that we must accept any measure that is proposed as part of the defense program, whether it violates the fundamental principles of our Government, deprives men of liberty, or gives arbitrary power beyond anything heretofore contemplated. I object very strongly to the implications of the Senator's argument. Because a measure is alleged to be in the interest of defense, it may not necessarily be so. We still have an obligation to examine each expenditure, and determine whether that expenditure is really effective to accomplish the purposes it is supposed to have. In fact, it is all the more important that we do so, or we may wake up to find ourselves not only bankrupt, but without the kind of defense measures we really need. It is all the more important that we hold our measures as much as possible within the principles of American Government, or we may wake up to find ourselves overwhelmed by a form of totalitarian government without any attack from Europe.

I should not oppose this particular measure if there were any evidence whatever that it would supply additional strength in defense against possible attack from Europe; but I submit that it is completely hopeless for us to attempt to stabilize the economies and raise the standard of living of foreign countries. I submit that it would be worse than useless to attempt to hold South American surpluses off the world market; that it would actually make those countries weaker in meeting any possible threat of German aggression in the future; that it would subsidize competition against our own producers and result in the same complete collapse of prices which has followed every international cartel.

Finally, in my opinion, the policy of loaning money to other nations is bound to result ultimately in the loss of the money, and, above all, in the loss of the very good will which we are attempting to buy. The best possible way to alienate a good neighbor is to lend him money.

I doubt very much whether the South Americans themselves are anxious to secure loans. We have no evidence that they have ever applied for any. I should like to read a statement by Jose Maria Cantillo, former Foreign Minister of the Argentine, reported in a dispatch from Buenos Aires in the Washington Times-Herald of yesterday. Regarding loans from America, he said:

> "Argentina is not at war and there is no indication that she will ever go to war," declared Cantillo. "We must, therefore, remember, first of all, that we've got to do business in world markets. With Germany now controlling Denmark, Norway, France, Holland, Belgium, and Poland, and tied closely to Italy, Germans control lands where about 48 percent of our last normal year's exports were sold."
> "If the United States is eager to lend money, it will be hard for Argentina or any other South American country to turn down the loans," said Cantillo. "But we all will accept loans with the knowledge that it will settle no problem whatever. At best, a loan will be merely a gesture of good will."

The difficulty with the gesture of good will in lending money is that unless we continue that gesture every year, we create more bad will than good will. I have been anxious to give the administration such power to make loans as may actually have some effect.

Mr. President, I now desire to modify my amendment by inserting in line 5, after the word "made", the words "for the heretofore existing purposes of the Export-Import Bank and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. TAFT. With the modification that part of the amendment now reads:

> Such loans shall only be made for the heretofore existing purposes of the Export-Import Bank and for the purpose of assisting in the development of resources which are defined by the President as strategic and critical materials or of resources and materials which are not produced in the United States in appreciable quantities and which are required for use in the United States.

I can see how we can help our position in South America by financing American exports to South America. I pointed out that I think it is only an incidental thing, but it will help some. I pointed out yesterday that of our total exports to South America during the past 5 years, only 2½ percent, or $62,000,000 out of $2,400,000,000, has been financed by the Export-Import Bank, and the rest has been financed in the normal channels of trade. The Export-Import Bank can help that program and assist private exporters by loans to private exporters, and can assist private exporters even by loans to governments, by freeing the exchange, and making it possible for Americans to export further.

I can see how the other purpose also will assist if we enable Brazil to develop the kind of iron ore which we do not produce, or encourage Brazil to produce rubber. We now have such a project, and we have given the Department of Agriculture power to spend money in going ahead with the project. If we enable Bolivia to produce tin, we shall be assisting in developing something which Bolivia can sell to us. By enabling the South American countries to develop things which can be sold to us, we shall increase our exports to South America.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] referred to the fact that in 1 year Germany had exported to South America more than she had received in imports from South America. We might do so for 1 year. Competition might enable us to advance a little; but in the long run the only way we can increase our exports to South America, and the only way we can increase our economic domination, is by helping South America to develop products which we can buy, and not by encouraging the larger production of agricultural surpluses; not by encouraging South America to build up the production of hides and cattle to compete with our hides and cattle; not by encouraging South America to build up a surplus of corn, and then produce more corn next year for more surpluses to compete with our agricultural producers, but by lending the South American countries money to enable them to develop resources which we can buy from them and which will enable us to sell them a greater proportion of the total imports which South America requires.

The Senator from Arkansas said that economic domination is always followed by political domination. I do not know what economic domination is. Today we export a larger proportion of the goods exported to South America than does any other country in the world. We ought to be able to maintain our position. There is no reason why German political domination should not be met by the same methods which the Germans use, if they are effective. As a matter of fact, such domineering methods, relying on so-called German economic strength, apparently have created only enmity in South America.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that if successfully carried through, the development under the bill, amended as I propose to amend it, would give us a stronger position to meet German competition in South America after the war, whereas if the idea of lending money on agricultural surpluses is permitted to remain, it will only make us weaker in South America after the war. There are a hundred methods by which we can combat German infiltration into South America. The most completely ineffective method is that of lending money on surplus agricultural commodities; and yet the message of the President mentioned no other purpose than that in asking us to enact the bill. The act of Habana contemplates that use of it. I say it is the most fantastic purpose for wasting American money that has been submitted to the Senate during the past 2 years, while I have been a Member of the Senate.

Mr. TAFT subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a table showing exports from South American countries.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to offer a suggestion or two on the amendment and on the bill. Having been a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, which had the bill under consideration, and having disagreed with the majority of the committee, I wish to make reasonably clear my own views.

As was stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] earlier in the day, the bill is of real consequence. The dollars involved are important, but the policy involved is of greater importance. The purpose of the bill, as stated in the bill itself, is "to assist in the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economies, and the orderly marketing of the products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere."

The remainder of the paragraph makes it clear that the countries whose products are to be developed are countries of the Western Hemisphere other than the United States.

The method which the bill establishes for this purpose is the making of loans by the Export-Import Bank of Washington. Where do the funds come from with which the loans are to be made? The Export-Import Bank is to get its money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which is directed by the bill to lend money to the Export-Import Bank. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation gets the money by borrowing upon the credit of the United States. The notes, bills, or bonds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are nothing more or less than obligations of the United States. Both the Export-Import Bank and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are artificial corporations. Nevertheless, they are no less agencies of the Government than is the Secretary of the Treasury or any other official. So the people of the United States are to lend money to foreign nations and to the banks of foreign nations. Bear in mind that the loans are not limited to foreign nations but may be made to the nationals of foreign nations.

In other words, the bill authorizes lending the money of the people of the United States to the citizens of Patagonia in order to develop the resources of Patagonia. In the bill there is no limitation as to the character of resources. My State produces cattle, wheat, and other agricultural products, as well as minerals. We compete in the world markets with Argentina. We are to lend the credit provided by the people of my State and other Western States to develop the competitive products of South America; and we are told that this is for the purpose of the national defense. There is not one word in the bill in reference to national defense. We are told that it is for the purpose of suppressing subversive Nazi activities in South America. There is not a word in the bill in reference to that subject. The bill is a very plain, naked declaration that we are to make loans to South American interests to stimulate the production of their products, regardless of whether or not they compete with ours. The money which we lend them is the money of the citizens of the United States. As was pointed out by the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the bill represents a definite change of policy from the existing authority of the Export-Import Bank.

The Export-Import Bank up to this time has existed and has operated in order to encourage the exportation of American products to South America. Its sole purpose has been to stimulate our export commerce. This bill is designed to stimulate the export commerce of South America. We have apparently abandoned the original purpose and now propose to say to the people of South America, "Can we not let you have some of the credit, some of the funds produced or to be produced by citizens of the United States in order that you may develop your resources?"

I have read and listened to the arguments for the bill, but I have yet to have pointed out to me under what authority of law this proposed action can be taken. I should like to have the distinguished Senator from New York, the author and supporter of the bill, make it as clear as possible upon what provision of the Constitution of the United States this authority rests. We are proposing to take the money or the credit of citizens of the United States, and to lend it to a foreign government or its citizens. I should like to know upon what constitutional authority such power is to be given. I think all will concede that, if it is not to be found in the Constitution the power does not exist.

Perhaps it may be said we can take this step by virtue of the general-welfare clause. The general-welfare clause, under its more recent interpretation, is very broad, but the Constitution still contains the limitation that taxes shall be levied for the general welfare—of what? Of South America? No. It says "of the United States," and this bill totally omits to mention the United States of America. There will be found from the beginning to the end of this bill no mention of the United States of America or its interests. It is solely concerned with advancing the economic welfare of South America, and it is a proposal to expend money.

Recurring to the constitutional question, the Constitution provides:

> No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

I repeat that clause:

> No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

We cannot differentiate, as a matter of principle, between the Export-Import Bank lending money and the United States itself lending money. In any event money is to be drawn out of the Treasury of the United States for which there is no appropriation under the law. The Constitution vests in Congress the control of the expenditure of funds as well as the control of the borrowing of funds. It is proposed by this bill to provide as the first step $500,000,000. I should be glad to be satisfied if this is a constitutional delegation of authority. It is no answer to say that we have done the same thing heretofore. It is no answer to be told that the Export-Import Bank has heretofore made loans, because I should like to know upon what authority they made the original loans. With the obligation I have as a Senator, I do not propose to support a bill which takes the money and the credit of the United States and its citizens and sends it abroad unless there is clear authorization for it.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. BROWN. I understood the Senator to say that loans would be made to the citizens and nationals of South American countries?

Mr. ADAMS. The bill requires a guaranty.

Mr. BROWN. That is the point I desired to bring out. The government of the nation must guarantee the obligation.

Mr. ADAMS. But the loan can be made to a national, and that is a part of the objection I have. Regardless of what the condition may be, I do not know why the money to be raised by cattlemen in Colorado should be loaned to cattlemen in Argentina to enable them to compete in the markets of the world with the men who furnish the money or the credit.

I am interested in South American welfare, of course, but the welfare of the United States comes first, and we should be very sure that when we are promoting the welfare of South America we are doing benefit, not injury, to the welfare of the United States.

We are spending in this Congress some $15,000,000,000 on a defense program. We are spending upon the defense program alone more than twice the total income of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). The time of the Senator from Colorado on the amendment has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. I will take time on the bill.

The argument supporting these vast expenditures always, at some point, reaches the point of saying "we must do this because of South America; we are obligated to defend South America and to drive out of South America any invading European nation. I have not conceded that obligation, but the Congress has appropriated vast funds upon that basis, and I am wondering if we have not done pretty well by South America if we spend $15,000,000,000, in part to protect South America, without adding other billions and then undertake to promote the development of Latin-American resources.

Mr. President, some of us are concerned with the finances of our own Government. I am one of those who sincerely believe that of the dangers which threaten the United States the greatest danger is from financial catastrophe rather than from foreign invasion. We have observed the debt of this country pile up until today it is $45,000,000,000 or more, and we have appropriated or authorized for our defense programs sums which will run into another fifteen or twenty billion dollars. There is hardly a thinking man in the United States who is not uneasy over the financial future of this country. I hear day by day men of both political parties inquiring, "What is to be the end? What is to be the consequence?" I have been among the minority who have been struggling unsuccessfully to try to put the brakes on these expenditures, but they have continued. We do not know which hundred million dollars may be the straw that will break the back of the national financial camel; it may be the $500,000,000 sent to South America will be the ultimate disastrous cause; but, in any event, expenditures are so great that those for the purposes of national defense alone exceed the national income. No Senator would skimp or save so far as the necessities of his country are concerned, but we ought not, in view of the growing debt and increasing expenses, to seek out places for added expenditure. We can well retain the half-billion dollars involved in this expenditure. If we have a half-billion dollars to develop resources and to stabilize economies, I suggest that there is one country in which we might well spend it, and that is in the United States of America. If we have $500,000,000 to spend for the development of resources, we have 2,000,000 men on relief in the United States. We have an unsatisfactory situation in agriculture and in industry. If we can think of spending $500,000,000 in South America, we had better spend it at home; and that is not all.

If we go into South America with our $500,000,000 it will be only the beginning. We cannot go in today and say, "We will stabilize your industry, we will take your cattle, and your corn, and your wool off the market until you get a better price," and stop there. We shall have to add another $500,000,000, and another $500,000,000, and there will be no end to it. If we are seeking good will, we had better stay out the first time. Nothing incurs ill will so much as refusal to continue favors once commenced. As a matter of fact, lending money in excess of ability to pay is one of the best ways to incur enmities, nationally or privately.

Mr. President, the pending amendment definitely limits the matter to essential materials. I think it should be adopted; but I desire to add a few further words.

The end of the war now raging in Europe means what? It means economic discord; it means depression. There can be no question about that. In the United States we shall have a tremendously stimulated industry because of our defense appropriations and expenditures. Europe is destroying its purchasing capacity. When the war is over Europe will be a poorer purchaser of American products than ever. The United States will suddenly cease to manufacture guns and airplanes, and we shall have untold hundreds of thousands of men again seeking employment. We shall have crowded our debt up to 60, 70, or 80 billion dollars; and when that depression comes, as it is sure to come, we shall have weakened our ability to meet the depression by whatever amount we send outside the United States. So I am urging the husbanding of resources, the husbanding of credit, and looking after the needs of the United States first—and we have many needs—rather than going down, on no matter how philanthropic an errand, to South America. I think it is unwise. I think the law does not justify it; and, again, I am not willing to put control of the commerce of the Western Hemisphere in the hands of any one man and take it out of the hands of the Congress. I am not willing to put hundreds of millions of dollars absolutely at the disposal of any man, no matter how able he may be, no matter how patriotic he may be. It is not in accordance with the Constitution. It is an abdication of congressional authority. It is a defiance of the Constitution and the very fundamentals upon which it is based.

So, Mr. President, I cannot support the bill. I know that those who support it are doing so in the utmost good faith. We are told of Nazi subversive activities in South America. I hope they can be stopped. It has yet to be explained, however, how spending this great sum of money in South America will stop them. Among the big businessmen of South America who will profit by these loans will be the very Nazis about whom Senators are talking. They are producing cattle; they are producing wheat; they are the big bankers and the big economic producers of South America. It will be impossible to go down to South America and make loans here and there, in order to benefit the general commercial industry of South America, without benefiting the Nazis in the same locality.

Regardless of that, I do not know how loans to develop South American industry will protect the United States or further the national defense. I know that they will still further extend our credit, and involve us in a course of procedure that is almost unlimited. So I think, finally, we shall make a mistake if we strain the law in order to take the action which is proposed, and strain our credit in doing so.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to take 2 or 3 minutes to reply to some of the assertions which have been made by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

As the Senator from Colorado well knows, I share in a considerable degree his apprehension about the financial condition of the United States; but I think the burden of the argument he has just made is based on the assumption that we are spending this money. I think he fails to bring out clearly the fact that we are loaning the money.

In the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee Mr. Jones stated that he would use banking principles in administering this bill if it should be enacted, that he would confine loans made in South America, as he has heretofore done, to safe loans. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado and the other Senators who are present to the fact that in recent years I think the world has had a rather impressive lesson in the matter of international integrity in financial arrangements between nations. I have long been convinced that one of the reasons why the people of the United States have not gone further than they have gone in aiding certain countries in Europe, particularly France and Great Britain, was that they did not pay us the money we loaned them in the period of the World War and the period immediately following the war. To me, that lesson is impressive. Considering not only that situation but the situation in regard to Finland, which is a nation that paid us what it promised to pay us—and we were exceedingly generous with Finland—I think those two instances, the failure of France and Great Britain to pay and the fact that Finland did pay, constitute an impressive lesson for the future.

Mr. ADAMS rose.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will bear with me for a moment, I look forward to a time when international obligations will be fulfilled, not because people or nations are perhaps any more honest than they were before, but because they realize that if they are to receive any help in the future they will have to pay their debts. Therefore I come to the conclusion that, generally speaking, we probably shall have a little higher standard of international obligations in the future than we have had in the past.

Therefore, if this bill is administered by Mr. Jones as he says he will administer it, as a banking proposition, in view of the fact that the nations in South America will be dependent for some time in the future upon the good will of the United States, I think we may safely assume that these loans will be safer than loans have been in the past.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to some things that I know are in his mind. He points out the situation as it relates to Great Britain and France. They owe to the United States Government money which they have not paid. Almost every South American government owes money to the citizens of the United States; and the debts which are in default from South American governments aggregate nearly $2,000,000,000. I am willing to go along with the Senator and exact integrity from nations and from men; but I cannot see that there is any difference between defaulting in a government obligation to a nation and defaulting in a government obligation to the citizens of a nation.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the point the Senator makes reaches my argument at all. The loans which were made largely through the National City Bank and similar institutions in the city of New York, and which, as the Senator well knows, were spread about among all the small banks in the United States, were made largely before the defaults occurred, before it was known that France and Great Britain and Germany and all the other European nations were defaulting in their obligations. I think a mistake was made in that respect. I think, however, they were quite largely high-pressure loans. I think American financiers were somewhat more anxious to loan the money than the people of South America were to borrow it.

The Senator speaks of the people of South America. I think those loans were very largely the obligations of the states and local subdivisions of government in Brazil and the Argentine. I think probably more than half the loans were of that character. They have not received any additional loans; and I think that very fact will lead them to the conviction that hereafter they will have to live up to their obligations if they are to get anything from the United States.

Mr. President, to me the justification for these loans has been very well expressed by the senior Senator from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, but lest we overlook it, I repeat, I think, considering the present economic condition of the United States, of Europe, and of South America, considering that South America-European trade is practically nil, considering that we have long endeavored to sell our machinery, equipment, and manufactured materials to South America, that it is a wise thing for the Government of the United States to provide means of financing such sales. After all is said and done, that is what the bill proposes to do.

The figures show that, of the loans which have been made to South American governments, a total of $62,800,000, the borrowers have already repaid $40,000,000, or over two-thirds, and I do not understand that there is any material default in South America at the present time, if there is any at all.

Therefore, Mr. President, I desire to add my voice to that of the chairman of the committee, and urge upon the Senate the adoption of what I consider to be a very reasonable amendment to the Export-Import Bank Act.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Am I correct in my understanding that the total export business from the United States to South American countries in recent years has been in the aggregate approximately $300,000,000?

Mr. BROWN. I really am not in a position to give the Senator information on that subject. I have no doubt the figure he states is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the figure is correct, and I was questioning the expenditure of $500,000,000 on a relatively small export business.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly, with the sources of machinery, equipment, and like materials in Europe cut off from South America, it is wise now to advance sums of money to South America to enable our manufacturing establishments to sell additional manufactured equipment to the Latin American nations.

Mr. WAGNER. Our exports to South America have reached a point in excess of $600,000,000.

Mr. BROWN. That was the figure I had in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Michigan on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BROWN. I will take a little time on the bill.

Mr. TAFT. Let me say to the Senator from New York that those exports include all the exports to Central America as well.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. Of course, the provisions of the bill would be of benefit to Central America as well as South America. It makes very little difference to us where the goods go, whether to South America or Central America.

Finally, the argument which appeals to me most forcefully in connection with the pending bill is that it is good judgment upon the part of the American people to do things which will make the people of South America our friends. We need friends at the present time. If all that has been said in the debate on the conscription bill is true, the expenditure of the sum of money proposed, even if it were lost—and I think very little of it will be lost—would be of great benefit to the people of the United States.

SELECTIVE COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE—CONFERENCE REPORT

During the delivery of Mr. BROWN'S speech,

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask permission to file a report after the adjournment of the Senate.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I also ask that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] be added to the conferees on the part of the Senate on the selective-service bill.

Mr. DANAHER. Just a minute, Mr. President. I ask for recognition on the last point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection may be heard. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BROWN. Would the Senator as soon let me take 2 or 3 more minutes now? I have just been requested to go into the Finance Committee, where I think I should be, and I should like to conclude in about 2 minutes. Then I shall have some more time, and I will yield it to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator, if he will, please, that the Chair purports, at least, to have declared a ruling, and I was calling "Mr. President" all during the course of the ruling. I do not want to have that stand as an order; that is all. If the Chair will vacate the ruling——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that in the absence of objection it would be so ordered. If the Senator desires to object, the order will not be made.

Mr. DANAHER. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask a question. That is all I rose for. I do not want to intrude on the time of the Senator from Michigan; and, with the indulgence of the Senator from Texas, I will withhold the question for a moment or two.

I thank the Senator.

After the conclusion of Mr. BROWN's speech,

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I renew my request that the conferees on the part of the Senate on the conscription bill be given permission to file a report after the session of the Senate today, if it should not be ready before the Senate concludes its business for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I also ask that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] be added to the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, coming from a State in this Union which for over 2 centuries formed an important part of the Spanish-American colonial holdings in the Western Hemisphere, I feel that I am in a position to know some of the factors which should go toward forming a better relationship and understanding, economically and otherwise, between the United States and the 21 Latin American republics to the south.

On July 22 last, on the eve of the Habana Conference, I spoke over the National Broadcasting System on the subject of the economic defense of the Western Hemisphere. Because of their timeliness in the present debate I should like to restate some of the remarks I made at that time.

Since 1932 a wasting disease has settled upon Europe, a disease which is slowly destroying the minds, morals, and religion of mankind. If unchecked and allowed to spread to our hemisphere, this disease of world oppression may check the advancement of civilization itself. The three European "isms" have now combined to lay waste and seize not only all of Europe, but may include part or all of the Western Hemisphere as well.

As a lifelong resident of the State of Florida, and as United States Senator from that State, I have for many years been interested in cementing a closer relationship between Latin America and the United States. Because Florida was settled by Latins some 375 years ago, there is a closer bond between Latin America and Florida than between Latin America and any other State of our Union. It is not generally known, but all North America was shown on the maps of the then known world for many decades under the name "Florida," which then belonged to Spain.

I have the greatest respect and admiration for the people, our good neighbors, who inhabit the central and southern parts of this hemisphere. For the most part they are descendants of those people who, like our own pioneers, left Europe to find a new life in a new world where economic and political liberty and religious freedom were won and thereafter accepted as a matter of course.

I feel that these people of the Americas, whose high ideals, honor, and integrity are so well known to us, realize the danger of economic dealings with Germany and Italy, for such dealings can only result in economic, political, religious, and cultural slavery as the price of appeasement. I sincerely believe that, irrespective of the gilded promises of temporary advantage offered by the European aggressors, the people of Latin America will nevertheless join in a cooperative pact with the United States of America, their good neighbor.

Recent events in Europe have taught us that military defense is essential but not enough in this changing world. Economic methods must be immediately used not only to defend our Latin American neighbors from European aggression, but to protect us all from the economic strangulation which would result from the Nazi-Fascist system in Europe controlling the economic life of the Americas.

It is true that we in the United States are spending over $10,000,000,000 on military rearmament. However, at the same time we should be spending large sums for economic rearmament, for only by a combination of economic and military rearmament can we successfully prevent European aggression. The history of the progress of civilized man clearly reveals that economic security is the keystone in the arch of man's social welfare and contentment.

An integrated and centralized economy will soon exist in Nazi-dominated Europe containing 400,000,000 people. The majority of the people of Europe may become vassals, and by cheap labor, under government subsidization, they will be able to undersell us in the Americas, and thus strangle our mutual trade.

Many arguments can be given for and against strict nationally controlled trade, but we are living today in a world which leaves little time for quibbling over ideological abstractions and theories. Concepts of foreign trade which were valid yesterday are completely out of date today. Before we become enmeshed in a welter of economic argument, during which time we may lose our Latin American trade and the Latin American countries may lose their economic, political, religious, and cultural freedom, we should take some definite step to at least partially solve our hemisphere problem.

Unfortunately in the past we have not given enough attention to buying from Latin America; we have been too busy selling. To illustrate, last year we paid $180,000,000 for rubber from far eastern and African markets and purchased practically no rubber from Brazil where this product first was found years ago. Those markets in Africa and in the far eastern countries are now cut off, and it is time we undertook to buy needed rubber from Brazil, a country nearer to us.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact—and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] I think will bear me out—that recently the Congress appropriated a very substantial sum of money for investigation and development of tropical products, such as rubber, in the Americas. I remember that either in connection with the deficiency measure, or in connection with the bill which was before the subcommittee presided over by the Senator from Georgia, a substantial amount of money was provided for the purpose of developing rubber production in Central and South America.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. A considerable sum was not only appropriated for the purpose of developing tropical agriculture, but for a number of other purposes. As I recall, appropriations were made for the Civil Aeronautics Authority, for the State Department to distribute various literature, and to enable students in South American countries to come here, in addition to substantial appropriations for a survey of timber resources in South America, and for the encouragement of the producers of rubber, quinine, and other tropical products.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Georgia for their contributions. The suggestion I make is along the line which is being followed in connection with the item of appropriation to which reference has just been made.

Mr. President, we purchase $50,000,000 worth of tin from the mines in the Orient when the largest tin mine in the world is located in Bolivia. We need many strategic materials and have imported them from far-off countries in spite of the fact that these strategic materials exist in abundance in Latin America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMATHERS in the chair). The Chair is constrained to advise the Senator from Florida that his time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS. I will take time on the bill. I desire only 3 or 4 more minutes.

The nations of the Western Hemisphere combined have a tremendous bargaining power. By placing this power under one leadership we can effectively stalemate aggressors in their attempts to secure a foothold on this hemisphere, and in addition help alleviate the economic condition of the conquered peoples in Europe.

It is axiomatic that the higher the standard of living in all the Americas the more certain we are of a self-sustaining Western Hemisphere. Some economists have urged a modified stamp plan for Latin America, similar to our surplus commodities stamp plan, in order to raise the standard of living in Latin America. Others have suggested the same result could be obtained by the manufacture in Latin America of consumer goods which were formerly imported from Europe which do not compete with manufactured products of the United States.

The United States is the richest nation in the world. We are rich in raw materials, rich in gold, and rich in a people whose ideals, initiative, fair dealing, and business ability have built this country into the greatest democracy in the history of mankind. With all the technical and economic information we possess it should be possible immediately to place a plan in operation which would keep any foreign economic dictatorship out of this hemisphere.

There is one important matter I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate at this time, and that is the recent splendid appointment by the President of Nelson Rockefeller as Coordinator of Commercial and Cultural Relations between the American republics. It is my understanding that Mr. Rockefeller will have much to say concerning the use of the money included in the pending bill.

Although young in years, Nelson Rockefeller already has a background of sound business experience, and it is comforting to know that men with business training, such as Jesse Jones and Nelson Rockefeller, instead of theorists, are to be in charge of our dealings with Latin America. Leaving an important place in the business world, Nelson Rockefeller came to Washington to accept Government service at $1 a year. His action should be an example to other businessmen who seek only to criticize the Government instead of offering to help. Other noted men of this country have done as Mr. Rockefeller has done. It is a good sign.

I trust the bill, as it is now framed, will receive approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, does the Senator rise to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to say one word before that is done, with the Senator's permission. I do not wish to impose on the Senate's time any longer in discussing the merits of the legislation, because I discussed the measure day before yesterday and yesterday, and attempted to state the reasons for the program at that time. I simply wish to say that it is very clear, from my main statement, that the proposed amendment would largely defeat the purposes of the legislation.

I rise now simply to read into the RECORD letters received by me from Mr. Jesse Jones in reference to surplus agricultural commodities. Certain objections have been made, although I myself have repeated over and over again, that whatever transactions were to be had with reference to surplus agricultural commodities, would be made in order to protect the farmers of our country.

Mr. Jones writes:

> While it is not contemplated that loans would be made on surplus agricultural commodities—
>
> It is not contemplated as a general proposition at all—> appropriate consideration would be given to applications from some of the governments or their central banks for loans in reasonable amounts that might enable the government or its banks to assist their nationals in the carrying and orderly marketing of some of their agricultural surpluses, with a view to avoiding demoralized prices that would affect our own farmers. No such loan would be considered that appeared to the officers and directors of the bank to be inimical to our own agricultural interests.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I should like to read a comment appearing in the New York Times on that very statement made by Mr. Jesse Jones.

Mr. WAGNER. I should like to read another letter from Mr. Jones.

Mr. TAFT. The Times says:

> In other words, while it is not contemplated that loans would be made on surplus agricultural commodities, it is contemplated that loans would be made on surplus agricultural commodities.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know what authority the New York Times has for making that statement. Mr. Jones himself, I should say, would be a more reliable authority.

Mr. TAFT. The New York Times quotes Mr. Jones' letter, the very letter the Senator has just read, and in commenting on the logical conclusion to be drawn from Mr. Jones' remarks says what I have just quoted.

Mr. WAGNER. Anyone can draw whatever conclusions are desired to be drawn. I have before me an editorial printed in the Cincinnati Enquirer of August 9, a newspaper published in the Senator's own city and State, which comments rather severely upon the minority report filed by the Senator; but I shall not read it, because I think it is rather extreme in its criticism. That editorial would show the other side of the question.

Mr. Jones wrote me the following letter, dated yesterday:

> In view of some of the debate in relation to S. 4204, now under consideration by the Senate, I think it appropriate that I should again say that the present legislation is no part of any cartel plan, or of any scheme or program, of hemispheric or international price control of farm products.
>
> I should also like to say again that I would oppose the approval of any loan under the proposed act which would, in my judgment, be inimical to the agricultural interests or any other interests in this country.
>
> Sincerely yours,
>
> JESSE H. JONES,
> Administrator.

Mr. President, I take it that we are prepared to vote upon the modified amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	King	Reed
Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Russell
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwartz
Bailey	Gerry	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Gibson	McKellar	Sheppard
Bilbo	Gillette	McNary	Smathers
Brown	Green	Maloney	Stewart
Bulow	Gurney	Mead	Taft
Burke	Hale	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Byrd	Harrison	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	Hatch	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Capper	Hayden	Neely	Townsend
Chandler	Herring	Norris	Vandenberg
Clark, Idaho	Hill	Nye	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Hughes	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	White
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Day before yesterday or yesterday I made an inquiry of the Senator with reference to the wording of his amendment. I was disturbed by the word "appreciable." The loans are proposed to be made only with respect to products which are not produced in the United States "in appreciable quantities." It seems to me that language would practically exclude loans because appreciable quantities of many such products are produced in the United States. I wonder if the Senator will consider a modification so as to read:

Which are not produced in the United States in quantities reasonably adequate to meet the requirements of commerce and industry in the United States.

Mr. TAFT. I am willing to accept that modification. It is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this amendment I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea." If the Senator from Pennsylvania were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). Upon this amendment I have a pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who would vote "nay"; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "nay."

I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who if present would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent because of engagements in Government departments.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—25

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Thomas, Idaho
Austin	Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Townsend
Bulow	George	La Follette	Vandenberg
Burke	Gibson	Lodge	White
Byrd	Gillette	McCarran
Capper	Gurney	Reed

Chavez	Lucas	Smith
Donahey	McNary	Tobey

So Mr. TAFT's modified amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas, had been elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker of the House.

The message announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2009. An act to amend the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, so as to provide for unified regulation of carriers by railroad, motor vehicle, and water, and for other purposes; and

S. 4008. An act to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals which in the opinion of the Corporation would be of value to the United States in time of war, and to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more adequate loans for mineral development purposes.

EXPANSION OF LENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4204) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer at this time and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 3, line 25, after the word "nationals", it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the aggregate amount of loans to any one foreign country and the agencies and nationals thereof which are hereafter authorized to be made and are outstanding at any one time shall not exceed $50,000,000, and such amount shall be in addition to the amount of loans heretofore authorized or made to such foreign country and the agencies and nationals thereof.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, this amendment requires a brief explanation. The law contains and will contain, until the time when this measure shall be enacted, a limitation of $20,000,000 on loans to any one country. If the pending bill shall pass, however, that $20,000,000 limitation will be repealed. The language of the amendment in every other respect is identical with the existing law except that the limit is raised from $20,000,000 to $50,000,000 of loans to any one country.

Having in mind the explanation offered by the Senator from New York and other proponents of the bill, reasonable limitations meeting the very objections that have been voiced on this floor demand that we place some ceiling upon the extent to which the otherwise untrammeled discretion of the administrator might go. The Congress, it would seem very properly, ought to expend the public money within certain limitations, at least. Consequently, if we place a ceiling or a maximum of $50,000,000 on loans to any one country, we will be carrying out the spirit of the existing law, and more than doubling the enabling provisions of the existing law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are 20 of these various republics. Some of them are very small, and, in all probability, would not request very large sums of money in the way of loans; others of them are large, extensive countries, as large as or larger than the United States, and, while the amendment offered by the Senator might be adequate for the smaller countries, it seems to me that it might be wholly inadequate for a larger country such as Brazil or Argentina or some of the other Latin American republics. I should say that as many as half the 20 republics might possibly need more money, while others of them might not need anything and would not apply for it. It seems to me in dealing with this situation each country must be considered on its own basis and its own merit. I think any amendment of the kind offered by the Senator from Connecticut would throttle the Export-Import Bank, so that, no matter what the needs might be of a large country where there might be many opportunities for making loans to mutual advantage, they would be restricted to the amount set out in the amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say briefly to the Senator from Kentucky that, apparently, the larger the country the greater the debt which is owed to us by that country at the present time. In other words, they have already demonstrated, in a large way, that their credit with us ought to be limited.

I can think of no better answer for the Export-Import Bank to make to the importunities of such countries than to be able to say, "Congress has tied our hands; Congress, representing the people of the United States, says that no country shall have an aggregate of more than $50,000,000 outstanding, because, by experience, you have shown you are not entitled to an amount of money in any greater sum."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Export-Import Bank wanted to have its hands tied, it would have said so before the committee and it would have said so in the bill which was prepared under its jurisdiction. Furthermore, I may suggest to the Senator, since he refers to the $1,600,000,000 of debts of South American political subdivisions and private corporations held in the United States, that on a billion dollars of that indebtedness payments are being made. Of course the Senator realizes that that indebtedness was created and those securities were floated in this country at a time when the financial advisers of the American people were holding out the hope and almost the positive assertion that prosperity was perpetual, and that there never would be a time in the future when the American people would suffer from any want or depression, or from any decline in the value of securities. I am sure that if the people of the United States had known at that time what the future held for them, they not only would not have invested $1,600,000,000 in Latin American securities, but they would not have invested tens of billions of dollars even in securities at home which have declined in value, and on some of which there has been repudiation.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Kentucky—fallacious in the extreme in this particular case, although very often I regard his judgment as controlling, as my votes will show—has indicated that because the Export-Import Bank did not write legislation and send here a bill the way it wanted it, we have to take this particular language. Surely we are still writing the legislation in this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield—the Senator is twisting what I said, unintentionally of course. My remark was made in reply to his suggestion that the bank itself might want to have its hands tied, so that if applications were made to it for loans beyond $50,000,000 it could say, "Congress has tied our hands." I said that if the bank had wanted its hands tied it would have said so and would not have left the matter up to Congress.

Mr. DANAHER. With that explanation, we understand that there is a reconciliation of viewpoint that far.

With reference to the rest of the Senator's argument, surely the Congress has not only the right but in this particular instance the duty and the definite obligation not to take money of the American taxpayers and turn it over to one administrator or two or three administrators and give him or them unlimited discretion as to where those funds are to be placed. The very fact that there is a depression is all the more reason why American moneys to the tune of $500,000,000 should not be taken from our taxpayers and turned over to South American countries without limit.

Mr. President, when Mr. Jesse Jones was before our committee in February we had up the matter of doubling the capital of the Export-Import Bank, raising it from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000. At that time Mr. Jones himself suggested the limitation. He was the one who thought there ought to be a limitation. Let me say to the Senate that at that time, as a result of the hearings and of his testimony, we put in the limitation of not to exceed $20,000,000 of loans to any one country outstanding at any one time. In other words, I am seeking to restore to this particular bill identically the same sort of limitation that Mr. Jones himself said ought to be in it, and which we wrote into it in February, the only difference being that instead of limiting loans to $20,000,000 I make the limit $50,000,000 in the generosity with which I am disposing of the American taxpayers' money. But, Mr. President, I certainly think we ought to have a ceiling on the activities of the Export-Import Bank and its advisers, and that the American people, speaking through us, ought to know to what extent their once-misplaced faith in those people can be abused. At least we should place a limitation on it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be rejected. I think it would be an unwise thing to do at this time. We do not know the exact demands that may be made on the bank. It may require no more than $50,000,000 in most cases, but an emergency may arise requiring more than $50,000,000 to any one country. Another difficulty with the amendment is that it may give each country the impression or feeling that a general division is contemplated, each to get up to $50,000,000. That would be unfortunate. The matter should be left entirely to sound and wise administration by the bank.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, when the Congress abdicates its function and turns over to agents the expenditure of this money, I do not think the Senator from Connecticut should seek to put any limitation on the agents who determine the policies and the amounts that may be loaned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. DANAHER. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before of my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I am informed that if he were present he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILEY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and therefore withhold my vote. If the Senator from Indiana were present, he would vote "nay," and if I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] because of illness.

Mr. MCNARY. I am advised that, if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] were present, he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I transfer my pair to him, and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is unavoidably detained. He has a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. If present, the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea" and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are detained in the Committee on Finance.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is detained in one of the Government departments. I am advised that, if present and voting, she would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 47, as follows:

So Mr. DANAHER's amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10361, Calendar No. 2141.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10361) to provide for increasing the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that all after the enacting clause of the bill be stricken out, and that there be substituted therefor the provisions of Senate bill 4204 as amended.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not object to the substitution of the Senate amendment for the bill which passed the House, but I desire to call the attention of the conferees, in case the bill shall go to conference, to two very important differences in the bill. The House did not insert the exception which provided that the proposed legislation should not affect the Johnson Act or the Neutrality Act. Under the bill as it passed the House the legislation would supersede those acts, and loans could be made in violation of the acts.

In the second place, the House has added, entirely apart from the question we have been discussing, a billion dollars to the borrowing power of the R. F. C. I do not think either of those things should be agreed to by our conferees without consulting the Senate, when that question arises. With this statement, I have no objection to the substitution.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand the differences between the measures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York, that all after the enacting clause of the pending bill be stricken out and that there be inserted the provisions of Senate bill 4204 as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. TAFT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with respect to my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] and its transfer to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], who is absent. If he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BYRD. My colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] are detained by sickness.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following pairs on this question:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who would vote "yea";

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who would vote "nay";

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who would vote "nay," with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who would vote "yea"; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] would vote "nay" if present and voting.

Mr. MINTON. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS].

I am advised that if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is in a conference in one of the Government departments. I am advised she would vote "yea" if present.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is detained in a committee meeting.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is unavoidably detained. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 27, as follows:

So the bill (H. R. 10361), as amended, was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act of January 31, 1935 (49 Stat. 4), as amended, is hereby amended (a) by striking out "June 30, 1941" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 22, 1947", (b) by striking out "$200,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$700,000,000", (c) by striking out the second proviso thereof, and (d) by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"In order to assist in the development of the resources, the stabilization of the economies, and the orderly marketing of products of the countries of the Western Hemisphere, the Export-Import Bank of Washington is authorized, upon the written request of the Federal Loan Administrator with the approval of the President, subject to such conditions and limitations as may be set forth in such request or approval, to make loans to any governments or to their central banks or to other acceptable banking institutions and, when guaranteed by any such government or a central bank or other acceptable banking institution, to a political subdivision, agency, or national of any such government, notwithstanding any other provisions of this section insofar as they may restrict or prohibit loans or other extensions of credit to, or other transactions with, the governments of the countries of the Western Hemisphere or their agencies or nationals: Provided, That no such loans shall be made in violation of international law as interpreted by the Department of State, or of the act of April 13, 1934 (48 Stat. 574), or of the Neutrality Act of 1939. Such loans may be made and administered in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the Export-Import Bank of Washington may determine. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to supply such bank with funds for such purposes, in an aggregate amount not to exceed $500,000,000 outstanding at any one time, through loans to or by subscriptions to the preferred stock of such bank."

SEC. 2. The aggregate amount of notes, bonds, debentures and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date of enactment of this act is hereby increased by $500,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4204 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WAGNER, Mr. GLASS, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the present consideration of Senate bill 3426, Calendar No. 1800.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The bill will be read by its title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The bill (S. 3426), to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and as reenacted by the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I merely wanted to ask the Senator from Iowa if he would not agree to postpone that motion until tomorrow, for the following reason: The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has given a great deal of consideration to the bill and is opposed to it. He is not able to be present at this time as he is in attendance on the Finance Committee. I spoke to him a while ago and I know he would like to be present when the bill is taken up for consideration. I am opposed to some sections of the bill. The Senator from Georgia would like to have the bill go over until tomorrow in order that he may be present when it is taken up for consideration. I understand there are some other matters which may be disposed of this afternoon, which are of equal importance to the country. I simply ask the Senator if he will postpone the motion until tomorrow.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I am aware, of course, of the interest of the Senator from Georgia in the measure, in opposition to some of its provisions, and have discussed the matter with him. I should hesitate to consent to postponement of the consideration of the motion at this time. I understand if the motion is agreed to then other matters, which are privileged, may be taken up for consideration.

Mr. MILLER. It is perfectly satisfactory that the bill be made the unfinished business, and then laid aside until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the bill is made the unfinished business there would be no other reason for its deferment than the fact that we do not have the physical presence of the Senator from Georgia. Why not let the motion of the Senator from Iowa be the unfinished business tomorrow? I suggest that the motion lie on the table until tomorrow, when the Senator from Georgia will be present. The motion will then be the unfinished business. That will meet the present object of the Senator from Iowa, and the opposition of the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa agree to the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GILLETTE. The suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon is agreeable to me. I withdraw the motion at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his motion.

LABELING OF WOOL PRODUCTS—TRUTH IN FABRIC

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I move that the House amendment to Senate bill 162 be laid before the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. McNARY. Let us have some description of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ].

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this act may be cited as the "Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939."

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. As used in this act—

(a) The term "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or any other form of business enterprise, plural or singular, as the case demands.

(b) The term "wool" means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb or hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat (and may include the so-called specialty fibers from the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, and vicuna) which has never been reclaimed from any woven or felted wool product.

(c) The term "reprocessed wool" means the resulting fiber when wool has been woven or felted into a wool product which, without ever having been utilized in any way by the ultimate consumer, subsequently has been made into a fibrous state.

(d) The term "reused wool" means the resulting fiber when wool or reprocessed wool has been spun, woven, knitted, or felted into a wool product which, after having been used in any way by the ultimate consumer, subsequently has been made into a fibrous state.

(e) The term "wool product" means any product, or any portion of a product, which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool.

(f) The term "Commission" means the Federal Trade Commission.

(g) The term "Federal Trade Commission Act" means the act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, as amended, and the Federal Trade Commission Act approved March 21, 1938.

(h) The term "commerce" means commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or in any Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory and any State or foreign nation, or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory or foreign nation.

(i) The term "Territory" includes the insular possessions of the United States and also any Territory of the United States.

MISBRANDING DECLARED UNLAWFUL

SEC. 3. The introduction, or manufacture for introduction, into commerce, or the sale, transportation, or distribution, in commerce, of any wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act or the rules and regulations hereunder, is unlawful and shall be an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce under the Federal Trade Commission Act; and any person who shall manufacture or deliver for shipment or ship or sell or offer for sale in commerce, any such wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act and the rules and regulations hereunder is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

This section shall not apply—

(a) To any common carrier or contract carrier in respect to a wool product shipped or delivered for shipment in commerce in the ordinary course of its business; or

(b) To any person manufacturing, delivering for shipment, shipping, selling, or offering for sale, for exportation from the United States to any foreign country a wool product branded in accordance with the specifications of the purchaser and in accordance with the laws of such country.

MISBRANDED WOOL PRODUCTS

SEC. 4. (a) A wool product shall be misbranded—

(1) If it is falsely or deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified.

(2) If a stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, is not on or affixed to the wool product and does not show—

(A) the percentage of the total fiber weight of the wool product, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight, of (1) wool; (2) reprocessed wool; (3) reused wool; (4) each fiber other than wool if said percentage by weight of such fiber is 5 percent or more; and (5) the aggregate of all other fibers: Provided, That deviation of the fiber contents of the wool product from percentages stated on the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, shall not be misbranding under this section if the person charged with misbranding proves such deviation resulted from unavoidable variations in manufacture and despite the exercise of due care to make accurate the statements on such stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification.

(B) the maximum percentage of the total weight of the wool product, of any nonfibrous loading, filling, or adulterating matter.

(C) the name of the manufacturer of the wool product and/or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product.

(3) In the case of a wool product containing a fiber other than wool, if the percentages by weight of the wool contents thereof are not shown in words and figures plainly legible.

(4) In the case of a wool product represented as wool if the percentages by weight of the wool content thereof are not shown in words and figures plainly legible, or if the total fiber weight of such wool product is not 100-percent wool exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of such total fiber weight.

(b) In addition to information required in this section, the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, may contain other information not violating the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission.

(c) If any person subject to section 3 with respect to a wool product finds or has reasonable cause to believe its stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, does not contain the information required by this act, he may replace same with a substitute containing the information so required.

(d) This section shall not be construed as requiring designation on garments or articles of apparel of fiber content of any linings, paddings, stiffening, trimmings, or facings, except those concerning which express or implied representations of fiber content are customarily made, nor as requiring designation of fiber content of products which have an insignificant or inconsequential textile content: Provided, That if any such article or product purports to contain or in any manner is represented as containing wool, this section shall be applicable thereto and the information required shall be separately set forth and segregated.

The Commission, after giving due notice and opportunity to be heard to interested persons, may determine and publicly announce the classes of such articles concerning which express or implied representations of fiber content are customarily made, and those products which have an insignificant or inconsequential textile content.

AFFIXING OF STAMP, TAG, LABEL, OR OTHER IDENTIFICATION

SEC. 5. Any person manufacturing for introduction, or first introducing into commerce, a wool product shall affix thereto the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification required by this act, and the same, or substitutes therefor containing identical information with respect to content of the wool product or any other products contained therein in an amount of 5 percent or more by weight and other information required under section 4, shall be and remain affixed to such wool product, whether it remains in its original state or is contained in garments or other articles made in whole or in part therefrom, until sold to the consumer: Provided, That the name of the manufacturer of the wool product need not appear on the substitute stamp, tag, or label if the name of the person who affixes the substitute appears thereon.

Any person who shall cause or participate in the removal or mutilation of any stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification affixed to a wool product with intent to violate the provisions of this act, is guilty of an unfair method of competition and an unfair and deceptive act or practice in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE ACT

SEC. 6. (a) Except as otherwise specifically provided herein, this act shall be enforced by the Federal Trade Commission under rules, regulations, and procedure provided for in the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The Commission is authorized and directed to prevent any person from violating the provisions of this act in the same manner, by the same means, and with the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties as though all applicable terms and provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act were incorporated into and made a part of this act; and any such person violating the provisions of this act shall be subject to the penalties and entitled to the privileges and immunities provided in said Federal Trade Commission Act, in the same manner, by the same means, and with the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties as though the applicable terms and provisions of the said Federal Trade Commission Act were incorporated into and made a part of this act.

The Commission is authorized and directed to make rules and regulations for the manner and form of disclosing information required by this act, and for segregation of such information for different portions of a wool product as may be necessary to avoid deception or confusion, and to make such further rules and regulations under and in pursuance of the terms of this act as may be necessary and proper for administration and enforcement.

The Commission is also authorized to cause inspections, analyses, tests, and examinations to be made of any wool products subject to this act; and to cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, with any State, Territory, or possession, or with the District of Columbia; or with any department, agency, or political subdivision thereof; or with any person.

(b) Every manufacturer of wool products shall maintain proper records showing the fiber content as required by this act of all wool products made by him, and shall preserve such records for at least 3 years.

The neglect or refusal to maintain and so preserve such records is unlawful, and any such manufacturer who neglects or refuses to maintain and so preserve such records shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each day of such failure, which shall accrue to the United States and be recoverable in a civil action.

CONDEMNATION AND INJUNCTION PROCEEDINGS

Sec. 7. (a) Any wool products shall be liable to be proceeded against in the district court of the United States for the district in which found, and to be seized for confiscation by process of libel for condemnation, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe such wool products are being manufactured or held for shipment, or shipped, or held for sale or exchange after shipment, in commerce in violation of the provisions of this act, and if after notice from the Commission the provisions of this act with respect to said products are not shown to be complied with. Proceedings in such libel cases shall conform as nearly as may be to suits in rem in admiralty, and may be brought by the Commission.

If such wool products are condemned by the court, they shall be disposed of, in the discretion of the court, by destruction; by sale; by delivery to the owner or claimant thereof upon payment of legal costs and charges and upon execution of good and sufficient bond to the effect that such wool products will not be disposed of until properly stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified under the provisions of this act; or by such charitable disposition as the court may deem proper. If such wool products are disposed of by sale, the proceeds, less legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

(b) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe that—

(1) Any person is violating, or is about to violate, sections 3, 5, 8, or 9 of this act, and that

(2) It would be to the public interest to enjoin such violation until complaint is issued by the Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act and such complaint dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, or until order to cease and desist made thereon by the Commission has become final within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Commission may bring suit in the district court of the United States or in the United States court of any Territory, for the district or Territory in which such person resides or transacts business, to enjoin such violation, and upon proper showing a temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond.

EXCLUSION OF MISBRANDED WOOL PRODUCTS

SEC. 8. All wool products imported into the United States, except those made more than 20 years prior to such importation, shall be stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified in accordance with the provisions of this act, and all invoices of such wool products required under the act of June 17, 1930 (ch. 497, title IV, 46 Stat. 719), shall set forth, in addition to the matter therein specified, the information with respect to said wool products required under the provisions of this act, which information shall be in the invoices prior to their certification under said act of June 17, 1930.

The falsification of, or failure to set forth, said information in said invoices, or the falsification or perjury of the consignee's declaration provided for in said act of June 17, 1930, insofar as it relates to said information, shall be an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act, or practice, in commerce under the Federal Trade Commission Act; and any person who falsifies, or fails to set forth, said information in said invoices, or who falsifies or perjuries said consignee's declaration insofar as it relates to said information, may thenceforth be prohibited by the Commission from importing, or participating in the importation of, any wool products into the United States except upon filing bond with the Secretary of the Treasury in a sum double the value of said wool products and any duty thereon, conditioned upon compliance with the provisions of this act.

A verified statement from the manufacturer or producer of such wool products showing their fiber content as required under the provisions of this act may be required under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

GUARANTY

SEC. 9. (a) No person shall be guilty under section 3 if he establishes a guaranty received in good faith signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured and/or from whom it was received, that said wool product is not misbranded under the provisions of this act.

Said guaranty shall be either (1) a separate guaranty specifically designating the wool product guaranteed, in which case it may be on the invoice or other paper relating to said wool product; or (2) a continuing guaranty filed with the Commission applicable to all wool products handled by a guarantor in such form as the Commission by rules and regulations may prescribe.

(b) Any person who furnishes a false guaranty, except a person relying upon a guaranty to the same effect received in good faith signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured and/or from whom it was received, with reason to believe the wool product falsely guaranteed may be introduced, sold, transported, or distributed in commerce, is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

CRIMINAL PENALTY

SEC. 10. Any person who willfully violates sections 3, 5, 8, or 9 (b) of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $5,000, or be imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That nothing herein shall limit other provisions of this act.

Whenever the Commission has reason to believe any person is guilty of a misdemeanor under this section, it shall certify all pertinent facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to cause appropriate proceedings to be brought for the enforcement of the provisions of this section against such person.

APPLICATION OF EXISTING LAWS

SEC. 11. The provisions of this act shall be held to be in addition to, and not in substitution for or limitation of, the provisions of any other act of the United States.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 12. This act shall take effect 9 months after the date of its passage.

SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

SEC. 13. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person, partnership, corporation, or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to any other person, partnership, corporation, or circumstance shall not be affected thereby.

EXCEPTIONS

SEC. 14. None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to apply to the manufacture, delivery for shipment, shipment, sale, or offering for sale any carpets, rugs, mats, or upholsteries, nor to any person manufacturing, delivering for shipment, shipping, selling, or offering for sale any carpets, rugs, mats, or upholsteries.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to Senate bill 162, and on that motion I desire to be heard. It will be necessary, in order to support that motion, to explain the House amendments, and I desire at this time to explain the amendments, and the manner in which they affect the pending bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is it not in order at this time to move that the bill, with the House amendment be referred to the standing committee from which the original bill came, as a preferential motion to the one made by the Senator from Wyoming?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can be made by the Senator when he obtains the floor. The Senator from Wyoming now has the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. There were a number of Senators who had understood that the bill in which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] was interested was to follow the disposition of the Export-Import Bank bill. Some of those Senators have left the floor. I suggest that there should be a point of no quorum made, so that absent Senators who have an interest in this bill may be present and may be advised that it is under consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Maine for that purpose?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lee	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lodge	Schwartz
Ashurst	George	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Austin	Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Bailey	Gibson	McNary	Smathers
Barkley	Gillette	Maloney	Stewart
Bilbo	Green	Mead	Taft
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Townsend
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Nye	Wagner
Chandler	Hill	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wiley
Danaher	King	Reed
Davis	La Follette	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago, as a preliminary matter I wish to say for the benefit of any Senators who have not heard what has gone on in the last few minutes, that the bill we have under consideration now is what is known as the truth-in-fabric bill, or the wool-labeling bill.

Senate bill 162 was passed by the Senate on July 21, 1939, by a vote of 48 to 23; and on August 30, 1940, the House adopted a motion to consider a companion bill by a vote of 288 yeas to 18 nays. After 4 hours' debate in the House, the House adopted its own bill, and substituted it for Senate bill 162 without a record or teller vote. The Senate bill 162 and the House bill adopted as a substitute are identical, except for certain amendments I shall discuss.

A similar bill introduced by me passed the Senate in 1938, but was not considered by the House prior to the adjournment of the Congress. There have been long and extensive hearings on this bill. Over 800 pages of testimony have been taken. There have been extensive debates both in the Senate and in the House; in the Senate twice and in the House this last week.

Mr. President, it would be difficult to find much new matter to consider, and I hope it will not be necessary to take the time of the Senate to reargue the general merits of the bill. If that shall become necessary, of course, I shall do so.

I wish to point out the amendments made to the bill as it passed the Senate, and endeavor to explain the reasons assigned by the House proponents for such amendments, and how those amendments affect the purposes of the bill. Of the 22 or 23 amendments in the substitute, only 3 or 4 are important, and they do not militate against the purpose of the bill. Practically all the other amendments are merely changes of words, dropping out words, or renumbering some of the paragraphs.

The bill has been pending a long time. It has passed the Senate twice. Most of the amendments of the House have been made to meet objections which were raised in the Senate by those who were against the bill.

In my opinion, those amendments do not materially affect the purposes of the bill. They are satisfactory to the consumers of the country and to those directly interested in wool. Most of them have been asked for by retailers' associations of the country or by some of the wool interests, and I believe they are opposed only by those who are opposed to a regulatory bill of any kind.

For those reasons I hope that before we get through the Senate will agree to my motion to concur in the House amendment, and that the Senate will turn down certain amendments which have been offered to the bill; amendments which, in my judgment—I might be mistaken—are purely dilatory. If any of the three amendments to which I refer is adopted, the intention is to bring about a parliamentary situation in which the bill will again go back to the House and will be there for some time; and it is the hope of the opponents of the bill, if that course shall be taken, that we shall adjourn before we can obtain final action on the bill. With the adjournment of Congress, of course, all the work which has been done by the committees and the votes taken by the Senate and House will have to be done over again in the next session.

For those reasons, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will be of the opinion that the House amendments are reasonable, and that my motion will prevail.

I wish to speak, first, about the first amendment, which is in section 2 (b). It deals with the definition of wool. The House substitute for the definition of wool is similar in language to Senate bill 162 as reported to the Senate by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, and reads as follows:

> (b) The term "wool" means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb, or the hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat (and may include the so-called specialty fibers from the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, and vicuna) which has never been reclaimed from any woven or felted wool product.

That is the definition now in the bill. With the exception of a concluding clause added after the word "vicuna" above, which has nothing particularly to do with the definition, that is the way this definition was brought to the Senate by the Interstate Commerce Committee. When it reached the Senate, after we had reached the point of amendments to the b ll, the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] offered an amendment to the definition. His amendment read:

> The term "wool" means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb.

That was the end of it. It eliminated Angora, and all the specialty fibers.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Was that amendment adopted by the Senate?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I have a very hazy recollection about it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I can explain it.

Mr. WHITE. My recollection, such as it is, is that under the terms of the amendment as the committee reported it, we could define as wool something with absolutely no wool in it. Was not that criticism made?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That criticism was made, and I now propose to explain the matter in detail.

At the time the amendment was adopted limiting the definition of wool to fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb, it may not be material but as a matter of fact only 15 Senators were present in the Chamber, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of 8 to 6, I believe. That is not material, because eventually we passed the whole bill.

It is evident that those who supported the Thomas amendment at that time either did not understand the bill or were opposed to labeling of any kind. The purpose of the definition of wool under the general provisions of the bill is not to limit the term to wool from the fleece of the sheep or lamb. "Wool" was and is intended as a commercial term to cover all natural wool, including the natural soft, silky hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat. The bill was never intended simply as a sheep-wool bill. I recall that on one occasion a distinguished Senator who is not now present, and whose name I shall not mention, said, "This bill is a bill which the sheep herders want." In that connection I will say that some sheep herders want the bill, but the record shows that practically all the consumer leagues and the labor organizations of the country want it, because they want fiber identification. The bill was never intended simply as a sheep-wool bill, but as a bill to protect the pubic in purchasing garments and other products which contain wool or which are represented as containing wool.

I think it will be of interest to take the time of the Senate for a moment to give a few definitions of wool generically, and also of the special wool fibers included in the House amendment.

This is Funk and Wagnalls' definition of "wool":

(1) The soft and more or less long, curly, or crisped hair which is obtained from sheep and some allied animals, and used in making material for the manufacture of clothing. * * * Among commercial wools of importance are those obtained from the alpaca, the llama, the Angora goat, the camel, and from the Cashmere goat of the Himalayas.

Webster gives practically the same definition:

(1) The soft and curled, or crisped, covering or coat of domestic sheep and some other animals. * * *
(3) Short, thick hair, especially when crisped or curled.

Funk & Wagnalls' Standard Dictionary defines "alpaca" as—

(1) A semidomesticated cameloid ruminant of the lofty mountains of Chile, Peru, and Bolivia, resembling a sheep, but with a longer neck, and yielding a long fine wool, usually dark brown or black; (2) alpaca wool.

Angora is described by Funk & Wagnalls, in definition (2), as follows:

(3) A fine light dress goods of Angora wool, or an imitation of it.

Webster says:

Angora goat: A variety of the domestic goat, having long, silky hair, Angora wool, which is the true mohair; a cloth shawl, or the like, made of Angora wool or an imitation of it.

Webster describes "camlet" as a costly fabric of satin weave, made in Asia of camel's hair or Angora wool.

Webster defines camel's hair as—

(2) Cloth made of camel's hair or a mixture of camel's hair and wool, usually light tan and of soft, silky feel.

The definition of "wool" as it is given in the bill is for the purpose of showing what is a "wool product," and then the wool product is what is to be labeled.

Funk & Wagnalls' dictionary defines camel's hair as—

The hair of the camel used in the manufacture of dress goods, heavy warm clothing for travelers, and similar cloth. Also camel's wool, camel's hair.

Funk & Wagnalls' dictionary defines "cashmere" as—

(1) A fine and soft woolen dress fabric, usually made in plain colors; also a cotton-and-wool imitation of it; (2) a fine, soft, costly fabric made in Kashmir and neighboring regions, from yarn handspun from the flossy wool of the Cashmere goat.

Funk & Wagnalls' dictionary defines "llama" as—

(1) A South American wooly haired cameloid ruminant without a hump and usually white or spotted with brown or black; (2) cloth woven of llama hair.

Funk & Wagnalls' dictionary defines "vicuna" as follows:

A small cameloid mammal of the high northern Andes, having fine and very valuable wool.

Mr. President, to require a special classification for each of these specialty wools, for camel's hair, and for Angora hair or wool, would needlessly multiply detail to be shown on the labels. It should be sufficient to know whether the wool is new, reprocessed, or reused.

There is another and stronger reason why the wool or hair of the Cashmere and Angora goats and the soft hair of the camel should be included in the generic term "wool," and, as such, covered by the labeling provisions. The worn cloth and articles, and the rags of all these products, are now being garnetted, reworked, and reused, put on the market, mixed with reworked and reused sheep's wool, and advertised and sold as "cashmere shawls," "Angora" or "mohair" cloth and clothing, and as "camel's hair" coats, sport goods, and heavy traveling clothing. The public is entitled to be protected, and wants to be protected, from these frauds. I have not heard any reputable dealer or merchant object to the definition of "wool" including these fibers as listed in the House substitute, and as contained in Senate bill 162 when it was reported to the Senate by the Interstate Commerce Committee. There should be no difficulty in these classifications.

I wish to call attention to section 6 (a) of both the Senate bill and the House bill, which are identical. Practically every word, clause, and sentence of the bill has been studied for a long time, and has been thoroughly considered, not only by those who are in favor of the bill, but by men competent in the industry, and particularly by officials and others connected with the Federal Trade Commission.

I read from the third paragraph of section 6 (a), which, as I have said, was originally in Senate bill 162 as it passed the Senate, and is now also in the House amendment:

The Commission—

The Federal Trade Commission—is authorized and directed to make rules and regulations for the manner and form of disclosing information required by this act, and for segregation of such information for different portions of a wool product—

We shall later come to the definition of a wool product—as may be necessary to avoid deception or confusion, and to make such further rules and regulations under and in pursuance of the terms of this act as may be necessary and proper for administration and enforcement.

This is in both bills and, of course, is in addition to the labeling provided in the bill, and is the authority of the Federal Trade Commission to see that the labeling is done in such a way and gives such a description of the wool product as not to be confusing or misleading to the public or permit deception.

(b) In addition to the information required in this section, the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, may contain other information not violating the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission.

It must be evident, Mr. President, that with the power given to the Federal Trade Commission in those two sections, there will be no confusion in the classifications that appear upon the label. As I said a moment ago, there is the same means for protecting the public against misrepresented cloth which happens to be made of Angora wool or camel's hair as there is of cloth made from sheep's wool. This bill primarily, after all, has been demanded for years by the great consumer organizations of the country and all the great farm organizations, and by organized labor. They demand fiber identification.

I now pass to amendment numbered 2, which is a substitute for the "virgin wool" definition of the Senate bill. A difference between Senate bill 162 and the House substitute is that Senate bill 162 gave "wool" and "virgin wool" two separate paragraphs and definitions. The House substitute amendment No. 1, just explained by me, makes this single definition act as a definition for wool generally and also for what in Senate bill 162 is called virgin wool. Thus, the House amendment will permit yarns, such as knitted sweaters, and so forth, which have never been used or worn, to be classified as "wool" along with new wool. It has been assumed, I think, in all the debates we have had before the committees and elsewhere, that there is a very logical distinction between clippings of new wool and those from used or worn garments which have to be garnetted. The clippings from a reworked sweater, for instance, may be drawn right into the roving or combing machines and worked right out into fiber, while the cloth which is woven like a suit and other cloth of that kind has got to be run through garnetting machines and cut into small pieces, decolored, treated with acid, softened with sheep's wool or lanolin and thus eventually reduced or reworked wool or shoddy, according to what one may choose to call it. Soft sweater yarns are reprocessed back into fiber without garnetting and the consequent heavy damage to the fiber. Also, spun wool which has never been used or worn may be included in the definition of "wool."

So when I now talk about wool I am talking about that classification of fiber which may go in under the head of "wool," which would include new wool and the reprocessed soft sweater stuff or stuff that has never been used and which does not have to be garnetted. I might also state that spun, and certain so-called wool wastes is small in amount and so is not material to the general purposes of the bill.

A proposed amendment, to be offered by the senior Senator from Oklahoma, would readopt the former amendment to Senate bill 162, adding thereto the words:

which has never been reclaimed from any woven or felted wool product.

The amendment then would read:

The term "wool" means the fiber from the sheep or lamb which has never been reclaimed from any woven or felted wool product.

The net result would be to limit wool under the whole bill to the fiber from the sheep or lamb. For the reasons I have stated, this would deprive Angora wool, a very important wool product produced on a large scale in this country, specialty wools, and camel's hair wool from the protection of the labeling act.

Amendment numbered 3 in Senate bill 162 combined all wool products not included under the head of "virgin wool" into a single class and definition which reads:

SEC. 2. (d) The term "reclaimed wool" means wool which has been made into a fibrous state after having been spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured.

The House substitute now before the Senate divides reclaimed wool, as defined in Senate bill 162, into two classes in lieu of the provision of Senate bill 162 which I have read. I will refer first to the House definition relating to reprocessed wool, that is, wool that has never been worn or used.

(c) The term "reprocessed wool" means the resulting fiber when wool has been woven or felted into a wool product which, without ever having been utilized in any way by the ultimate consumer, subsequently has been made into a fibrous state.

That is one definition, and I may say that it was offered and asked for by the General Retail Merchants Association of the United States. It segregates new clippings into a class by themselves.

The second clause of the definition, that as to "reused wool," reads:

(d) The term "reused wool" means the resulting fiber when wool or reprocessed wool has been spun, woven, knitted, or felted into a wool product which, after having been used in any way by the ultimate consumer, subsequently has been made into a fibrous state.

That, in short, means rags.

These changes of classification were asked for by President David R. Craig, of the American Retail Federation, which federation also includes the National Retail Drygoods Association, the National Retail Furniture Association, and practically all other similar associations in the United States.

I wish to read and put into the RECORD without taking too much time of the Senate just how those amendments came about. Mr. Craig said to the House committee, at page 360 of the hearings:

I offer the following amendments for your consideration. On page 2, delete lines 9 to 12, inclusive—

That was the definition in the Senate bill.

And substitute the following definitions:

(d) The term "reprocessed wool" means wool which has been spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured into a wool product and subsequently has been made into a fibrous state, but which has never been utilized in any way by the ultimate consumer. This term shall include "wool wastes" as defined herein.

The term "reused wool" means wool which has been spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured into a wool product and which has been used by the ultimate consumer and subsequently has been made into a fibrous state.

These terms should be substituted in the bill wherever "reclaimed wool" is mentioned.

The definitions of "reprocessed wool" and "reused wool" thus suggested by Mr. Craig, are definitions with slight modification, adopted by the House. They were really included in the bill in order to meet the objection that some forms of reworked wool are far superior to reused wool, as it is called. In other words, wool that has never been worn or used is superior to that which has been garnetted.

The next amendment is amendment No. 4. The House substitute amends S. 162's definition of a "wool product," and inasmuch as every provision in the bill practically, or all of it, is based on the term "wool product" it is important to consider that.

In the bill as it passed the Senate the term "wool product" under the amendment of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] was defined as follows:

SEC. 2 (e) The term "wool product" means any product made from the fiber of the fleece of the sheep or lamb and containing a percentage of wool as provided in subsection (A) of paragraph (2) of section 4 of this act.

As amended in the House and as it now appears in the House substitute it reads:

(e) The term "wool product" means any product, or any portion of a product, which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool.

"Reprocessed wool" and "reused wool" are the two classifications.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator explain his understanding of the use in the House amendment of terms defining a wool product as including one which in any way is represented as containing wool? I wondered whether that might not in itself involve a conflict.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; it does not involve a conflict, because, as I said awhile ago, the basic purpose of the bill is to protect the consumer, the buyer. If a merchant or somebody else says to a buyer, "This is wool," and there is no wool at all in the fabric, and he has it labeled as being wool, this bill will reach him, because while the fabric does not contain any wool it is represented to the consumer as containing wool, and that kind of merchant is the man we are trying to reach, among others; and that is the purpose of broadening the definition.

The definition I have just read was practically that of the original Senate bill as reported by the committee, which was subsequently amended and limited by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. There was a logical reason for his making that change, after the Senate adopted his first amendment, because by so doing he made the definition conform to his erroneous theory of the bill expressed in the first amendment, which tried to limit the bill to wool of the sheep and lamb, and nothing else. There is no occasion for it, however, either under the real theory, the Interstate Commerce Committee's theory of this bill, the theory under which the bill has been built up by all the persons who have been aiding in building it up, or according to the final action of the House. The purpose of the bill is to protect the buyer from false representations as to fiber content.

I may say again, as I said a while ago—it may not be important; probably it was to some extent my fault or that of somebody else—that when the second amendment was offered here, there were only 15 or 16 Senators on the floor at the time it was voted upon, and most of them happened to be those who were opposed to any regulation of this matter, of any kind, at any time.

I wish again to point out that this definition reaches three classes of products: First, products which contain wool; second, products which purport to contain wool; and, third, products which are in any way represented as containing wool. Thus the label provided for in section 4 would not only show the wool content when it is present, but, second, the content of any product which purports to contain wool when somebody is trying to deceive the public, and, third, any product offered to the public which is represented as containing wool. The original purpose of that provision, when it was first put in, was to reach signs and other representations set up that something is a wool product when, as a matter of fact, it contains no wool at all.

The whole scope of that classification of wool products was intended to uncover and prevent frauds, and to the extent that this act is enforced it will do so. I believe it will be enforced. It is easy to enforce it. If there are any kinks in the bill, after it has been worked over for years and years and subjected to all the attention it has received, the Federal Trade Commission can straighten them out, or point them out to us.

Although I have given a great deal of time to the bill, I am not so vain as to think that the bill is perfect, because, as I read the history of Congress and of legislation, I do not recall many important bills that were perfect in their first enactment. We perfect them and amend them after they are enacted. But it is important to get a start. It is important to have the public demand satisfied. They want the clothing they buy, and the wearing apparel they buy, labeled so that they will know what they are buying; but when a fabric is labeled "reprocessed wool," that does not mean that a man is necessarily going to refuse to buy reprocessed wool. He wants to know what it is, however. He may not buy it. He may prefer to buy some other fabric. He may prefer to buy cotton. He may prefer to pay a few dollars more—it should not cost much more—and buy new wool.

Amendment No. 3, section 3: Section 3 declares that misbranding is unlawful. This section is identical with the corresponding section of Senate bill 162 as it passed the Senate, except that the House strikes out certain words which deal with the retail merchant. Although other provisions still tie the retail merchants in, the retail merchants asked that this language be stricken out in the House. It was stricken out. When the retail merchants asked to have it stricken out they said they thoroughly understood that with this provision out they nevertheless were liable and nevertheless were required to see that the label remained upon the garment until it was sold.

I will read the clause which was stricken out. The section is not long, and I think probably it will be more intelligible if I read most of the section.

SEC. 3. The introduction, or manufacture for introduction, into commerce, or the sale, transportation, or distribution in commerce, of any wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act, or the rules and regulations hereunder, is unlawful and shall be an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice in commerce under the Federal Trade Commission Act; and any person who shall manufacture or deliver for shipment or ship or sell or offer for sale in commerce—

Right there, this language was stricken out of the Senate bill:

or who shall receive from or through commerce, and having so received shall resell or deliver for pay, or offer to resell or so deliver to any other person—

That language was stricken out, so that the bill as it comes to us from the House now reads like this, in the last clause:

and any person who shall manufacture or deliver for shipment or ship or sell or offer for sale in commerce any such wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act and the rules and regulations hereunder is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

This section shall not apply—

(a) To any common carrier—

And so forth. As I said a moment ago, certain retail houses objected to the stricken clause. However, leaving out the clause does not relieve the retailer from the provisions of the act, or from the necessity of keeping the label on the garment until the consumer buys it, because section 5 of the bill requires the person manufacturing for introduction, or first introducing into commerce, a wool product, to affix the label; second, that the label shall remain on the garment or article until sold to the consumer, and third, it provides that any person who shall cause or participate in the removal or mutilation of the label with intent to violate the provisions of the act is guilty, and so forth. So the retailer receives the goods with the label, and he is required not to remove or mutilate the label until the garment is sold to the consumer. It will be seen, therefore, that the responsibility of the retailer is in no manner affected.

When I first saw that amendment, I was rather inclined to doubt whether the Senate ought to accept it. I gave it considerable thought and consideration, and in the course of that consideration I went back through the House hearings to find out how the amendment was offered, and I also took other measures to show that the liability is still with the retailer to maintain the label. That is what the public wants. The public wants the label on the garment when the consumer buys it.

So again here we have the testimony of Mr. Craig, who, as I say, is the president of this company which is over all the retail associations of different kinds in the United States. He said:

Our second proposed amendment is that this provision be stricken from the bill.

That is the one I just read, which was stricken out by the House.

By the terms of this provision, retailers who purchase goods from another State are in interstate commerce. This purchasing theory was discussed by Congress when considering the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and was discarded as being of doubtful constitutionality. In that act Congress made retailers subject to Federal regulations only when their sales were made in interstate commerce.

I therefore suggest that the following wording on page 3, lines 22 to 25, be stricken from the bill:

"Or who shall receive from or through commerce, and having so received shall resell or deliver for pay, or offer to resell or so deliver to any other person."

Then he proceeds and says:

This provision is not necessary to enforce the provisions of H. R. 944.

That is the companion bill to my bill.

And Mr. Craig concludes:

Section 5 makes it mandatory to label all wool products introduced into interstate commerce. This section also prohibits the removal of a label unless a legal substitute is used in its place. These provisions combined mean that goods shipped to retailers must be properly labeled and that retailers are prohibited from removing these labels unless they replace them with a proper substitute.

That amendment also caused some concern to Mr. W. R. Ogg, director of research of the American Farm Bureau Federation. On September 6 he wrote to the Federal Trade Commission for an opinion thereon and on that date he received a reply from Mr. W. T. Kelly, chief counsel of the Commission. Mr. Ogg's letter, of date September 6, I have here. It is as follows:

SEPTEMBER 6, 1940.

Hon. EWIN L. DAVIS,

Chairman, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Due to the differences in language in S. 162 as it passed the Senate and the substitute bill passed by the House, the question has arisen whether retailers would be subject to this legislation under the language of the bill as it passed the House.

Section 3 of the Senate text, entitled "Misbranding Declared Unlawful," provides:

"The introduction, or manufacture for introduction, into commerce, or the sale, transportation, or distribution in commerce of any wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act, or the rules and regulations hereunder, is unlawful and shall be an unfair method of competition and an unfair and deceptive act or practice in commerce under the Federal Trade Commission Act; and any person who shall manufacture or deliver for shipment or ship or sell or offer for sale in commerce (or who shall receive from or through commerce, and having so received shall resell or deliver for pay, or offer to resell or so deliver to any other person) any such wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act and the rules and regulations hereunder is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

The words "and having so received shall resell or deliver for pay" are not included in the language of the bill as passed by the House.

In this connection, I note that section 5 of the bill, both as it passed the Senate and as it passed the House, provides that—

"Any person who shall cause or participate in the removal or mutilation of any stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification affixed to a wool product with intent to violate the provisions of this act is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

We would like very much to have your opinion as to whether, under the language of the bill as it passed the House, retailers would be subject to its provisions.

Respectfully yours,

W. R. OGG,
Director of Research.

The chief counsel of the Federal Trade Commission wrote to Mr. Ogg as follows, under date of September 6:

SEPTEMBER 6, 1940.

Mr. W. R. OGG, Director of Research,
American Farm Bureau Federation,
Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. OGG: Your letter of September 6, 1940, addressed to Chairman Davis, has been referred to me for reply in reference to S. 162 and your request to be advised whether retailers would be subject to the bill as it passed the House. You refer in particular to the following language appearing in section 5:

"Any person who shall cause or participate in the removal or mutilation of any stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification affixed to a wool product with intent to violate the provisions of this act, is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

In reply I wish to state that this language, as quoted, would clearly include retailers and make them subject to the inhibitions there expressed against the removal or mutilation of the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification affixed to the wool product.

Yours very truly,

W. T. KELLEY, Chief Counsel.

On the receipt of that letter, and out of consideration of the terms of section 5 as it has been amended, Mr. Ogg, who is the director of research for the American Farm Bureau Federation, was satisfied with the House language, and said that it would require the label to stay on the garment until it was purchased by the consumer. I want the RECORD to show that it is the understanding of the Senate that the amendment notwithstanding, the label or tag must remain on the products until sold to the consumer, and that the retailer is liable if he permits it to be removed.

From this point on there are quite a few amendments, but they are not of much importance.

In section 4, which deals with misbranded wool products, and the description of what must be put on under subsection 2, the only difference between the House provision and the Senate bill as we passed it is that the term "virgin" is stricken out before the word "wool", for the reasons I have already explained, because that term has been abandoned and the description "wool" will stand for new goods.

"Reclaimed wool," as the term was used in the Senate, is changed to "reprocessed wool," made from garnetted clippings of other woolen garments which have never been worn.

Third, the word "reused" has been added, and that is the third definition, which I explained at some length awhile ago. That made necessary striking out the figure "5" and inserting "4" in the numbering of definitions.

Subparagraph (c) of paragraph 2 of section 4 of the Senate bill read as follows, with respect to whose name should be on the label:

(C) Either the name of the manufacturer of the wool product, or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product, or the name of said manufacturers, and the names of one or more of such other persons.

The amendment is merely a change of the language, and does not affect the substance at all. It now reads:

(C) The name of the manufacturer of the wool product and/or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product.

It amounts to the same thing.

Subparagraph 3 of section 4 has been amended. As it passed the Senate, this was the wording, describing certain false labeling:

In the case of a wool product containing a fiber other than wool, if the percentages by weight of the wool contents thereof are not shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, and so forth.

In the amendment the wording is "are not shown in words and figures plainly legible," leaving out the rest of the description, which is not important.

In the next paragraph the Senate section read:

In the case of a wool product represented as virgin wool, if the percentages by weight of the virgin-wool content thereof are not shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, and so forth.

In the House that was amended so as to read:

In the case of a wool product represented as wool—

Dropping out the word "virgin"—

if the percentages by weight of the wool content thereof are not shown in words and figures plainly legible—

Eliminating the rest of it.

In another place where the term "virgin wool" occurs, the word "virgin" was stricken out.

Affixing the stamp, tag, label, or other identification is covered by section 5, and the House amendment is the same as the Senate language, with one exception. The section in S. 162 required the fixing of the tag, label, or stamp by the manufacturer or person first introducing the wool product into commerce, and that later substitutes for the original tag should contain "identical information with respect to content of the wool product, and other information required under section 4." The House added the words "or any other products contained therein in an amount of 5 percent or more by weight." They also added this proviso:

Provided, That the name of the manufacturer of the wool product need not appear on the substitute stamp, tag, or label if the name of the person who affixes the substitute appears thereon.

That is another way of stating what has already been said. It might serve an additional purpose, as where the retailer wishes to label under his own name and not disclose the name of the manufacturer.

There are two more amendments. Under the Senate bill we required the manufacturer to keep complete and accurate records showing the fiber content of his production as required by the act. The House struck out "complete and accurate" and substituted therefor the word "proper." That is not important.

Senate 162 required that the manufacturer should keep records of production and fiber contents thereof for 5 years. The House reduced the time to 3 years. In my opinion that is not of any importance. Three years should be long enough.

Some language was stricken from section 9. Section 9 (a) in the Senate bill provided:

No person shall be guilty under section 3 if he established a guaranty received in good faith, signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured for introduction into commerce and/or from whom it was received in commerce, that said wool product is not misbranded.

And so forth. The House struck out the words "for introduction into commerce" and "received in commerce." The House language is preferable to what we adopted in S. 162, and is unlimited.

Under the Senate bill a manufacturer could make a wool product with no intent to put it in commerce, but later he might receive orders or his business might so change that he would put it in commerce. Under the Senate language, if he does not manufacture it with intent to put it in commerce, he is not reached under the guaranty. Under the House language the guaranty follows when it goes into commerce.

Section 12 makes the act effective 6 months after the date of its enactment. The House substitute makes it effective 9 months after the date of enactment. Manufacturers and merchants thought the 6 months' period too short to readjust and clean up unbranded goods already on the shelves of jobbers and retailers. Nine months also gives the Federal Trade Commission and Treasury more time to work out details of enforcement. I do not believe anyone objects to extending the time from 6 months to 9 months.

At this point the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] purposes to add another amendment, the effect of which, of course, would be to send the bill back to the House, and, while I do not say it is the intent, the effect would be to keep it lagging around so that we could not get through a bill of any kind at this session of Congress. He purposes in addition to those 9 months, to add the following:

Provided, That if at that time—

At the end of the 9 months—

the present war between Germany and the Allies is still in progress and/or if the United States is at that time actively engaged in a war or wars with any nation or nations, the provisions of this act shall not take effect and be in force until the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission issues and promulgates a declaration to the effect that a treaty of peace has been signed by representatives of the German Government and by the Allies as represented by the Government of Great Britain, and further that the United States is at peace with all the nations of the world.

Mr. President, if anything should happen in the future, after 9 months, which would suggest for any reason that the provisions of this measure should be set aside temporarily, or for any fixed time, there will then be plenty of time to act. Congress will be in regular session, and there will be plenty of time to suggest any needed amendments.

Further, I do not see any particular reason, and I do not know that there has ever been any precedent established for having the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission issue an official proclamation as to when a state of war between foreign nations has ended. If it is purposed by the Senator's amendment, and if it shall be developed before we get through here that the purpose of that amendment is predicated upon the idea that we are short of wool, or likely to get short of wool, and that in some way this measure may militate against the general defense program, at that time, I shall endeavor to show that that fear is not well founded.

There is one more amendment by the House of Senate bill 162. I will say that I was not particularly concerned with having the provision of the Senate bill to which the amendment applies contained in the bill at the time we passed it. In some ways I thought the things dealt with by the House amendment should not be in the bill. I had gradually become of the opinion, and I am now of the opinion, that this bill should be limited generally to wearing apparel and clothing, dress goods, cloths, and certain other wool products. The House amendment consists of the addition of section 14, exempting from the bill "carpets, rugs, mats, and upholsteries."

As a general proposition we understand that the particular amount of wool in carpets is not so important. As to upholsteries, they are usually not a very controlling factor in furniture. So I think we can well agree to that exemption, which, I might add, was originally purposed and fought for by a distinguished Representative from Oklahoma.

Mr. President, that will conclude what I wanted to say now on the amendments themselves. I shall expect to be heard later with respect to other features of the bill if we are to go into the discussion of the general merits of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma obtained the floor.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lee	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lodge	Schwartz
Ashurst	George	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Austin	Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Bailey	Gibson	McNary	Smathers
Barkley	Gillette	Maloney	Stewart
Bilbo	Green	Mead	Taft
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Townsend
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	Nye	Wagner
Chandler	Hill	Overton	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wiley
Danaher	King	Reed
Davis	La Follette	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the lateness of the hour, and the fact that the Senator wishes to discuss the matter at some length, I think it would be preferable to suspend at this time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William E. Rhea to be Land Bank Commissioner in the Farm Credit Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

AUTHORIZATION TO FINANCE COMMITTEE TO REPORT DURING RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I wish to state that the Committee on Finance has just voted to report the tax bill. It is understood that it will not be taken up until Friday, but, in order that the committee may submit its report, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess of the Senate the Committee on Finance may be authorized to report the tax bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have conferred with the able leader on the Democratic side. I have no objection, with the understanding that the bill will not come up before Friday—probably later than Friday.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assure the Senator that it will not be taken up tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. I am happy and satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON entered the Chamber.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I have just obtained unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance may file its report during the recess of the Senate, with the understanding that the bill will not be taken up in the Senate before Friday.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator. I hope an arrangement can be made for a session on Saturday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I may as well state publicly what I have stated privately to Senators who have inquired, that on the theory that the tax bill will be taken up Friday, if it is not finished on that date, we plan to hold a session on Saturday.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, September 12, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 11 (legislative day of August 5), 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. RAYBURN, who directed the Clerk to read the following communication:

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., September 11, 1940.

I hereby designate Honorable SAM RAYBURN to act as Speaker pro tempore today.

W. B. BANKHEAD, Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the divinity of which we are conscious in our own breasts; may it ever be a supreme satisfaction to express it. As we wait upon Thee, give hush to every other voice and stir our minds with spiritual aspiration. Enrich these passing hours with service for our country that shall be supremely helpful and wise. Diligent and faithful, patient and helpful in our labors, may we know and understand that nothing finally wrong can endure. We pray Thee, blessed Lord, that the citizens of our fair land may always be persuaded that a high, splendid national life finds its noblest spring of excellence in that divine impulse to trust God and believe in the righteous destiny of man. Be with us this day, reminding us that in all we do and say Thou art nigh. O Love Divine that stoops to bless and dry the saddest tear, may our beloved Speaker rest in Thine arms, finding peace, rest, and restored strength. In the name of names, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 602. Joint resolution to authorize Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, to be appointed to, and to perform the duties of, the office of Secretary of Commerce.

SPEAKER WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure at times, where sentiments of the kind are naturally and spontaneously called forth, to pay a heartfelt and deserved tribute to a great character. One of the finest men who ever stood in shoe leather, in the opinion of every Member of this House, regardless of his politics, is our beloved Speaker.

Several years ago he had a heart attack. That old pump is as good today as it ever was. A heroic fight he made, and he won.

Last year the flu overtook him. He met and whipped that and became perfectly well.

Now the fates have brought him an attack of sciatica, and he is going to whip that and completely recover. [Applause.]

He is as tough as a lightwood knot or whitleather, and we glory in his physical stamina. But that is not the point I wish to make. Last night he gave an illustration of one of his characteristics which make him so beloved.

In spite of the excruciating agony of an acute attack of sciatica, he tried to the limit of human endurance to fill an engagement to make a speech. It was not to have been a speech for self, nor because of any official duty, but for his party. He had an engagement, and he tried to fill it. He went on until he dropped. That is BILL BANKHEAD, the man we love; and we want to convey to him in this public way our appreciation of that fighting spirit, that will, with the skill of his doctors and divine blessing, bring him back speedily to his place and work among us. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, another man of the same ilk. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Alabama knows that every Member on the minority side of the House feels just as sad as he over the fact that our Speaker was stricken yesterday. Everyone hopes for an early convalescence, because we appreciate the fact that he is one of the finest gentlemen and one of the greatest Speakers the House has ever had. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I shall be so delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to accompany the Speaker from Washington to Baltimore yesterday afternoon and to be with him and Mrs. Bankhead at the time he was stricken. I was with him considerably until close to midnight and have just come from his suite at the Emerson Hotel in Baltimore, where his devoted wife and two attractive daughters are with him.

He is much improved this morning.

Everything the distinguished gentleman has said about our great Speaker is true. I wish I could portray to the House and the country the fighting spirit, marvelous courage, and loyalty he demonstrated last night in trying to fulfill the engagement he had made, as I witnessed while with him yesterday afternoon and last night. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a news item from the Daily News of yesterday:

> The Bar Association last night overwhelmingly approved a committee report urging preservation of civil rights and denouncing the House-approved and Senate-pending measure to deport C. I. O. leader Harry Bridges.

To me that is a clear vindication of those few of us who had the courage of our convictions to vote against a popular measure. At the time it was under consideration we felt it was an unconstitutional and un-American thing to pass this bill. It seems to me that this rather conservative American Bar Association has approved our contention that the proper way to attain this object is to do it in a legal and constitutional way which can be done after a full hearing now under the bill that was passed 2 days later and for which we voted, the Smith bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short newspaper clipping.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered at the thirty-fifth annual convention of the Pennsylvania Electrical Association last week by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared what would be, if prepared by somebody else, a real speech, and I have assigned it a real subject. The subject is The Two Conventions, the Two Platforms and the Two Candidates. With that kind of a subject anyone ought to be able to make a good speech.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my speech printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD a resolution adopted by the national convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, at Los Angeles, Calif.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD concerning the transfer of military equipment to the Allies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two articles by Dr. George Mecklenburg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

There was no objection.

R. O. T. C. IN COLLEGES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, it seems we are going to have conscription. I voted against that bill, and I am glad I did, for we should have offered $35 to $40 per month for 1-year enlistments, and we would have had more volunteers than we need, but it seems to me if we are going to train our boys in this country for military service, we can do no one thing that will be to the greater advantage of the American people than to establish more R. O. T. C.'s in colleges. It will not cost one-tenth as much for training men as it will by conscription and it will not be so liable to make us a militaristic nation.

There are some 350 schools that have made application for these units. Let the Government establish them. These students can be trained for $25 a year each. To establish 1 of these units in a school will require 1 or 2 officers, depending on the number of students involved. If there are only 400, 2 officers will be sufficient and it will not require over $10,000 for 1 of these units. Just multiply that by 350 schools and you will see what an economical thing it will be for the country and how advantageous it will be. To establish a unit in a college of 100 students only requires 1 officer and when we can uniform and train them for military service in colleges and when we have 350 colleges that have applied for R. O. T. C. units, why in the name of common sense do we not train college boys at $25 to $30 each per annum? To train men by conscription and in Army camps will cost from $1,000 to $1,500 each. You have to furnish housing and pay the men, while in colleges you do not pay salaries and you do not house the boys. It is the part of common sense since we have almost a bankrupt Treasury. Let the Government establish these additional R. O. T. C. units in all colleges that have requested them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS IN RECORD

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I objected to an extension of remarks by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]. I did so for the moment because of the fact that it was over the limit provided by the rule of the Joint Committee on Printing. The gentleman had five separate extensions in this morning's RECORD. He was within the permission granted by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that yesterday it was necessary to advise the index clerk of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to start on the fifth volume of the Appendix. Never before, and Congress has been in session since I have been here for 11 months in 1 year, have we had more than two volumes of the Appendix. Everything is going into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It has got to be a joke. It is no more my duty than the duty of any other Member of the House to object to extensions of remarks.

It is my understanding that the Joint Committee on Printing can issue a rule, and that no action is required by the House or Senate, that will provide that nothing except what occurs on the floor of the House and Senate may be printed in the RECORD, and the sooner that is done the sooner the people of this country will respect the RECORD more than they do today.

I am further advised that when Congress convenes in January, if the RECORD is to be printed, then it is going to be necessary to make a supplemental appropriation as the amount allocated for this purpose will be practically exhausted.

I appeal to the Joint Committee on Printing to take action immediately. I am confident if they do that they will receive the thanks of a great majority of the Members of both Houses of Congress. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, recently the House had before it the Hatch so-called clean-politics bill, to amend and strengthen the present Corrupt Practices Act.

The law prohibits the making of contributions by corporations to political parties. It was amended so as to prevent the making of a contribution of more than $5,000 by any one individual or corporation.

Having in mind the fact that, during a recent campaign, certain labor organizations had contributed more than $700,000 to the New Deal campaign fund and that, thereafter, and undoubtedly relying upon some of those contributions, John L. Lewis undertook to demand special consideration from the White House, an amendment was offered by me to bring labor organizations, so far as the making of political contributions was concerned, within the same limits as are imposed upon individuals and corporations.

If the making of political contributions by corporations and by individuals in an amount in excess of $5,000 tends to corrupt the voters, has an undue influence on our elections, how can it be said that a similar contribution by labor organizations, which are always interested in national legislation, does not have a like effect?

Of course, there is no difference, insofar as clean politics or political corruption is concerned, whether a political contribution comes from one source or another, when such source is interested in legislation. A dirty dollar is a dirty dollar, whether given by a religious organization, an industrial corporation, or a labor union, and every Member on the floor knows that fact. Yet the amendment offered by me was not adopted.

Yesterday, the press contained the announcement that Daniel J. Tobin, president of the teamsters union, stated that, should the President's speech turn out to be political, his organization would contribute $20,000 to pay the broadcasting companies for the time to be used by Mr. Roosevelt today.

I call upon the Attorney General of the United States, not to give us an opinion as to whether such contribution is legal or illegal—for, he told us before on similar occasions that he is the adviser only of the President—but to invoke the provisions of the Hatch Act, if such contribution is made.

Let us play no favorites. The administration has enough of an advantage through its Cabinet officers, the use of relief funds, its propaganda machines and in other ways, without permitting it to take advantage of a violation of either the spirit or the letter of the law.

What about it, Mr. Attorney General? Does the fact that such organizations have contributed hundreds of thousands of dollars to the New Deal campaign fund, while they give practically nothing at all to the Republican organization, make them immune?

[Here the gavel fell.]

MAKING UNLAWFUL THE TRANSPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 3550, to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce and foreign commerce, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state why the conferees agreed to eliminate the exemption for binder twine?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will not the gentleman permit the matter to be called up first?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk has read the title of the bill. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not hear the answer of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman did not make any answer. I am asking that the matter be called up first and that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the conference report. Then if the gentleman wants any explanation, the chairman of the committee will explain it or some other gentleman, and if the gentleman from South Dakota desires some time we will see that he gets it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. All I want to do is to preserve the surety that we will have an explanation on that point and an opportunity to discuss it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3550) to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment, insert the following:

"That whoever shall knowingly transport or knowingly cause to be transported in interstate commerce, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist, knowingly, in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or both: Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal or District of Columbia penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for use by any other State, or States, or political subdivisions thereof; to parts for the repair of farm machinery; or to agricultural commodities: Provided further, That this Act shall go into effect one year after its approval by the President."

And the House agree to the same.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
DAVE E. SATTERFIELD, Jr.,
C. E. HANCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.
PAT MCCARRAN,
M. M. NEELY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes on the House amendment to the bill (S. 3550), to make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate and foreign commerce, submit the following statement, explaining matters agreed upon by the conference committee and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The House passed the Senate bill after amending it by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting its own provisions. The Senate disagreed to the House amendment and requested the conference, to which the House agreed.

The conference report recommends that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment and agree to the same with an amendment, the amendment being to insert in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment, the matter agreed to by the conferees; and the House agree to the same.

The House amendment and the conference agreement with the exceptions herein mentioned, are substantially the same and accomplish the general purposes of the Senate bill.

The conference agreement contains clarifying language to make the bill inapplicable to District of Columbia penal and correctional institutions manufacturing commodities for the use of the Federal Government. The conference agreement retains the language of the House amendment which omitted the words "or foreign" before the word "commerce."

The House amendment provided exemption for farm machinery and binder twine, which were not exempted in the Senate bill. The conference agreement eliminates such exemptions.

The conference agreement also amends the title, omitting the words "or foreign," so that it will conform to the language of the bill.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
DAVE E. SATTERFIELD, Jr.,
C. E. HANCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that the time that is being consumed now is coming out of the hour.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Under those circumstances, I cannot yield, Mr. Speaker.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MICHENER. Will not the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker, but I want to ask one question to expedite action on this conference report.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MICHENER. Will not the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. McKEOUGH. I want a quorum here. This is a very important bill, and I want the Members here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 215]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and eighteen Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the conscription bill have until midnight tonight to file a report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two resolutions from the Central Trades and Labor Union of St. Louis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a report from the State W. P. A. Administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEARSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

MAKING UNLAWFUL THE TRANSPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, this conference report deals with Senate bill 3550, which prohibits the interstate shipment of prison-made goods. As the bill passed the Senate it prohibited the shipment in interstate commerce of all prison-made goods excepting parts for the repair of farm machinery and agricultural commodities. The bill as it passed the House—and it passed on the Consent Calendar—exempted farm machinery, farm machinery parts, agricultural commodities, and binder twine. The conferees met and agreed to this conference report which eliminates the House exemptions of farm machinery and binder twine.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Does this strengthen or weaken the so-called Hawes-Cooper Act and the Sumners-Ashurst Act?

Mr. HEALEY. I believe this bill supplements the Hawes-Cooper Act and the Sumners-Ashurst Act. Those acts simply protected the laws of the States. In other words, if a State had a law prohibiting the sale of prison-made goods, the Hawes-Cooper and the Sumners-Ashurst Acts protected that State law by prohibiting the shipment of prison-made goods into that State if the State itself had a statute which prohibited the sale of prison-made goods in open-market competition with free labor.

There are 37 States that prohibit the sale of prison-made goods entirely. There are only 11 that do make it possible to sell prison-made goods. This bill does not prevent the intrastate sale of prison-made goods. It does not prevent the use of prison-made goods by the Federal Government or the States, but it does prevent the interstate shipment of products manufactured in prisons by convicts to compete in the same market with free labor and free enterprise.

You may say, and it will be argued here, that the prisoners must be kept busy, that they must have some employment, but if you must choose between the employment of prisoners and free labor, then I think we ought to decide in favor of free labor. [Applause.]

The binder-twine and farm-machinery industries are important ones. Some of these States are actually making a profit through the use of their convicts in these industries. They are exploiting prison labor to make a profit. Such competition is ruinous to some old industries. In my own State there is the Plymouth Cordage Co. that has been in business for many years. I am informed that the market on binder twine has been taken away from private industry to the extent of about 50 percent.

I submit that you are discriminating if you exempt any products at all. If you are going to permit the manufacture and sale of prison-made twine and prison-made farm machinery and prison-made farm machinery parts or agricultural commodities, then you ought to permit the sale of prison-made shoes and furniture, or any other product. It is discrimination against these industries to have any exemption at all.

I am opposed to any exemptions. However, this conference report does eliminate the exemptions of farm machinery and binder twine that were contained in the House bill and leaves remaining only exemptions of farm machinery repair parts and agricultural commodities. In all other fields it will eliminate the ruinous competition of convict labor with free labor and legitimate enterprise. I trust the House will agree with the conference report. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this report from the fact that in the State of Kansas we have a binder plant and it is of immense importance to the farmers of Kansas that this plant be maintained. It is not only that, but it is important to the men who are in the prison. Idle men are always a threat and especially when they are confined within stone walls.

Years ago a great corporation had an absolute monopoly upon the twine business in Kansas and they bled millions of dollars out of the farmers of Kansas because of that monopoly. In the administration of Governor Capper, sometime between 1915 and 1919, a law was passed establishing this binder-twine plant, and it was of immense importance in savings to the farmers of Kansas. I think the same thing may be said in regard to all of these institutions in the penitentiaries of the different States.

I think we will not at all disagree upon the fact that we are all opposed to competition of prison labor with free labor. I do not believe there is any competition in Kansas as there are no binder-twine manufacturers in our State. I agree with the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. that we do not want any extensive competition of free and prison labor, but the men in these penitentiaries must have something to do. There is nothing that Kansas has for them to do except in the mines part of the time, and if they do not behave they are put in the coal mines, but we cannot use all of them in the coal mines and we have put thousands of dollars into this business of making twine, and it is of vast importance to the farmers of the State of Kansas. We cannot sell all the product in the State of Kansas, so we have been selling it in those States that have not a law against its importation and sale.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I wish I could yield, but I have not the time.

In the old days Kansas used to bind most of the wheat. They do not do that any more. Some of you boys came to Kansas, South Dakota, and Nebraska to harvest wheat during the summer vacation of your colleges. The junior Senator from Louisiana told me that he came up there in my own neighborhood and worked during the harvest time, but they do not do that any more. They are combining and they are heading more than they used to do, and that has curtailed the use within the State of this product of the penitentiary. So we want the privilege of selling in the States where they have no law against the selling of prison-made goods within the State.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. I shall yield first to the gentleman from New Jersey if he has a question.

Mr. EATON. Does the bill, as we are asked to vote on it, permit penal institutions to manufacture farm machinery parts and twine and ship them anywhere they want to in this country?

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. No; it is supposed to prevent that. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] will discuss that amendment.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The transportation of parts of farm machinery is exempt.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is a far more important bill than the Members of the House seem to realize. It is so important that we ought to have a roll call on it and know just where the Members of the House stand on prison-made goods competing with privately made goods and convicts competing with free labor.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] has explained to you, the original bill as it passed the Senate and came to the House was a straight-out prohibition against interstate commerce in prison-made goods. After very little consideration in the House Judiciary Committee an amendment was adopted excepting farm machinery parts and binder twine from the prohibition. In other words, it made interstate commerce in those two articles legal. The bill came to the floor with those two amendments and, as I said, without any hearings on them. If those amendments were considered they were brought up some day when I was not present, but I am sure that no hearings were ever held by the committee. The bill was passed by unanimous consent late one day when there were very few Members on the floor. The only discussion was a little colloquy between the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], who was handling the bill. The gentleman from Michigan wished to be assured that those two exceptions were in the bill, and on that assurance he permitted the bill to pass by unanimous consent.

When we came into conference the question was sharply raised as to the advisability of making those two exceptions, farm machinery parts and binder twine, and permitting the free interchange of those articles in the open market in competition with similar goods made by private industry.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. If that exemption stood, is there not danger that every State in the Union would start manufacturing binder twine and farm machinery?

Mr. HANCOCK. It was an invitation to every State to go into those two businesses, entirely destroy the manufacturers making those products, and throw hundreds of employees out of work.

Mr. GWYNNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. There are several exceptions in this bill. Do those exceptions repeal the Hawes-Cooper law and the Ashurst-Sumners law as to those excepted goods? That is the question that troubles me.

Mr. HANCOCK. As I understand the Hawes-Cooper bill, it merely gives the different States the right to protect themselves against the importation of prison-made goods. That still stands. The only exception is farm machinery parts, and the reason for that is this. Many prison-made farm machines have been sold to the farmers in the Middle West where this unholy traffic is permitted. We thought it was only reasonable to permit those farmers to be able to buy parts to keep the old machines in working order. That is the only exception.

The only hearing held was in the conference itself, which is a rather unusual proceeding. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] appeared and presented the case of Minnesota as forcefully as many man could do it. I regard the gentleman from Minnesota as an extremely well-informed, able, and useful Member of this House. His arguments were impressive. We also had two gentlemen representing private industry and labor, in opposition to the bill. We learned that the prison industry in these two articles is a very substantial part of the entire business of producing farm machinery and binder twine. It is so serious that it has a real effect on the employment of this country. The question is clearly presented as to whether you favor permitting prison-made goods to compete with goods made by free labor, or whether you do not.

Mr. EATON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. EATON. As I read this, it seems as if you have exempted farm machinery and agricultural commodities.

Mr. HANCOCK. Farm machinery parts, and that is only for the purpose of permitting the farmers who now own prison-made farm machines to keep them in repair.

Mr. EATON. What agricultural products will be manufactured in the prisons and shipped in interstate commerce?

Mr. HANCOCK. I cannot answer the gentleman. I raised that question in conference as to why we made that exemption. I got no satisfactory answer except that nobody seems to object to it.

Among the conferees were two or three men from agricultural States. I understood from them that the interstate traffic in agricultural commodities is trifling and unimportant, but interstate commerce in binder twine and farm machinery is substantial. It ought to be stopped. It is inherently and intrinsically bad. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, in the stream of our thinking on this subject, inevitably will be encountered the rapids that run between the scylla of competition between convicts and free labor and the charybdis of keeping incarcerated men in utter idleness, which is the height of inhumanity. Therefore, between this scylla and this charybdis we must draw the line somewhere, for none of us is in favor of espousing the cause of either of those rocks.

Personally I refused to sign this conference report because I did not consider that, as a conferee representing the House, I had any right to do so honorably. I am not sitting in judgment upon any other man's conscience, but I know that the contacts I had with fellow Members estopped me from signing. This bill could never have come from our committee except for the Minnesota amendment. I know that it never could have passed this House but for the Minnesota amendment, coming up, as it did, by unanimous consent. I know, or at least I believe I know, there never could have been a rule obtained for its consideration but for the Minnesota amendment. Otherwise I have not the least interest in the Minnesota amendment; but I think that when a bill is reported out of a committee by virtue of that kind of an understanding, when a bill passes the House because of that kind of an understanding, I should stand by the understanding, which I, in handling the bill, permitted. I feel that good faith requires me to go the second mile, if necessary, in trying to protect and retain every amendment we accepted, offered as a committee amendment, and which was adopted by the House.

That is the whole matter as I see it. All of us are as one in desiring to protect free labor and its markets against the competition of prison-made goods.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. MOTT. Would this bill prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of manufactured articles the raw material for which was produced at State prisons; such, for example, as linen made from flax that was processed at a prison?

Mr. HOBBS. My judgment is that when the raw material was processed in a prison, unless the prison itself produced the raw material and traded it in kind with a similar institution in another State it would be within the condemnation of this act and would be denied movement in interstate commerce.

Mr. MOTT. This is a case where the prison processes the flax and sells it to a linen manufacturing company within the State.

Mr. HOBBS. Within the State? That would be intrastate commerce and would not be within the condemnation of this act.

Mr. MOTT. Would not be prohibited?

Mr. HOBBS. That is right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I shall be pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The conference report adopts the substitute bill. In the substitute bill agricultural commodities are eliminated; it does not apply to agricultural commodities.

Mr. HOBBS. That is true.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Would the bill prohibit the growing and the ginning of cotton?

Mr. HOBBS. I think clearly not. This bill does not apply to any agricultural products.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Then it would not apply to the growing or ginning of cotton.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the statement of facts which I make without passion or prejudice ought to be thought through by the Members of the House. We have a responsibility to maintain our own amendments. There could have been no favorable action by this body without them. Do we not owe our colleagues who gave unanimous consent that the bill be considered solely because of the Minnesota amendment, the retention of that amendment?

Let's vote down this conference report and reconsider this whole matter in January. No time would be lost for the bill provides that it shall become effective 1 year after approval. In January we could eliminate that provision.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, about 12 years ago the Hawes-Cooper Act was passed, containing an exception which permitted this binder twine to be produced in prisons and distributed throughout the country. Since that time this is the story: About that time the domestic production in free factories was 240,000,000 pounds. Today it is 88,000,000 pounds. About that time the importations of binder twine were 13,000,000 pounds; today they are 50,000,000 pounds. Prison production at that time was about 250,000,000 pounds. Today it is 55,000,000 pounds. The International Harvester Co., to which some of our friends will refer, produces less than 50 percent of the total of the binder twine, and most of it is made in independent factories. It is a declining industry. The domestic consumption has fallen from 234,000,000 pounds to 190,000,000 pounds in the period to which I have referred.

This bill is designed to finish the job as far as it can be finished. The conference has resulted in a compromise by which the institutions that produce parts for farm machinery are allowed to continue doing so and to distribute them in interstate commerce. Binder twine is cut out. It does not seem as if we ought to go on any longer producing goods in prison factories to compete with goods produced by free labor.

At the time the Hawes-Cooper Act was passed there was a general conference in which the State institutions rather agreed that in 5 years a change would be made and that all of the interstate commerce of prison-made goods would be wiped out. I was very familiar with that situation at the time and was very much interested in it and was one of the promoters of that bill. When the 5 years passed there was a distressed situation in the country and the transportation of prison-made goods has been allowed to go on 7 or 8 years beyond what it was supposed to.

At this time with this compromise it seems to me that farm institutions are being well and very favorably dealt with. The manufacture of binder twine is a declining industry in which the price cannot be especially high anyway, nor can there be any margin because of the increasing imports and the declining demand due to the use of combines in harvesting.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. As I see it, the compromise in this conference report consists merely of cutting out the exemption on binder twine. It exempts farm commodities.

Mr. TABER. It exempts parts for farm machines. It does not seem right that prison industry should go on increasing their production at the expense of free labor as they have been.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. EATON. What is included in the words "agricultural commodities"?

Mr. TABER. I think the gentleman from Alabama described that as well probably as it could be: Things that were produced in the prisons themselves. I do not believe it would cover things that were manufactured, that were produced elsewhere than in the prisons.

Mr. EATON. Suppose the prison had a farm, what would be the situation?

Mr. TABER. It would be able to process its own stuff and send it out anywhere.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. In the case of linen, what the prison produces would not be prohibited by this act?

Mr. TABER. Provided they produced the flax.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes; the flax itself, or the cotton itself, would not be prohibited.

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this conference report will be adopted.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, in the beginning, be it thoroughly understood that I am absolutely opposed to the general principle of permitting the sale of convict-made goods in competition with goods manufactured and produced by free labor. I have always entertained these views and during my service in Congress I have acted accordingly.

This bill, referred to in the conference report, is no stranger to Congress. For many years it was introduced session after session. In those days it had the support of organized labor. After a time the States manufacturing certain commodities in their penitentiaries and representatives of organized labor and the manufacturers got together in an effort to solve this vexing problem. The result was an investigation by a special committee of Congress. After that committee reported there was enacted what is commonly known as the Cooper-Hawes law. This law was a compromise, or an agreement, between all of the parties interested. All recognized the problem which confronted the State penal institutions. All wanted to help solve this problem with as little inequity as possible to any of the groups affected. The Cooper-Hawes law has worked well. No new prison industries have been developed under the Cooper-Hawes Act which in any way interfere with free labor, yet at the same time the States have been able to find some kind of employment for the prisoners. We all realize that finding employment for large numbers of institutional inmates is a very difficult thing to do. They cannot be left idle. That is inhuman.

Some months ago this bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. A subcommittee gave consideration to the bill and reported it back to the full committee adversely. By unanimous action of the full committee the bill was then placed on the table, which means that the full committee accepted the recommendation of the subcommittee and disposed of the bill adversely for the session.

Later the bill was taken from the table and found its way to the calendar of the House. No hearings were held on the bill. When it was discovered that the bill had been favorably reported and was on the calendar those vitally affected began to make inquiry. As a result, the Judiciary Committee took the bill up for further committee consideration and unanimously authorized what has been referred to as the "Minnesota amendment," exempting from the operation of the proposed law binder twine and farm machinery.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], a member of the committee, called the bill up before the House on unanimous-consent day. I made inquiry on the floor of the House and felt I had the assurance that if the bill were permitted to pass the House the House conferees would not agree in conference to eliminate the farm-machinery and binder-twine amendment. With this understanding, the bill was permitted to pass the House.

Now the majority of the conferees have eliminated this amendment and have recommended to the House that the House abandon the position taken by the Judiciary Committee and by the House when it unanimously passed the bill and accept the bill passed by the Senate. That is what is before us today. This is just another reminder that no legislation should be permitted to pass the House by unanimous consent where the legislation will go to conference, because the unanimous-consent understanding in the House cannot technically bind the conferees.

The principal proponents of this bill are the cord and machinery manufacturers and those engaged in manufacturing commodities of that type. Organized labor did not appear before the committee and did not urge the passage of the bill. My judgment is that organized labor was content to abide by the agreement reached when the Cooper-Hawes law was enacted. I do know that up to date the prison industries have not done any material damage to free labor. Of course, everything manufactured in a prison must be used by someone. It matters not whether the State uses the manufactured product or whether the goods enter the general market. They certainly replace something that free labor would have manufactured. That is conceded. Yet we have this prison problem, and it has been well cared for in the Cooper-Hawes law. Under that law any State can prevent the sale of prison-made goods in the State if it so desires, and the Federal Government will protect it against outside importation.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I am sorry; I cannot yield. I only have 5 minutes and can get no more time.

The Members who are most enthusiastic in supporting this conference report today are not those Members who are usually leading the fight for organized labor in the House. Of course, I do not make reference to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], who is a recognized leader of organized labor in this body. I admit that I have a State prison in my district where more than 5,000 prisoners are employed. There are other prisons in Michigan where prisoners must also be employed. There are a number of States in similar condition. The Members coming from these States naturally have a special interest in this legislation. On the other hand, the Members who are advocating this report, and who have cord factories, farm-machinery factories, and twine factories in their respective districts possibly also have a special interest in this legislation. I am sure that there are some such institutions in New York, and that possibly some of the Members from the New York districts are advocating this conference report.

Mr. HANCOCK. Which gentleman from New York is the gentleman referring to?

Mr. MICHENER. Possibly I might refer to the gentleman who is making the inquiry.

Mr. HANCOCK. I have not any binder-twine factories in my district and I would not change my opinion on a bill like this.

Mr. MICHENER. Possibly the gentleman from New York does not have a binder-twine factory in his district. I feel sure, however, that he would not change his opinion even though he had an international harvester concern, a cordage factory, or other manufacturing institutions affected by this legislation in his district. The gentleman is one of the most courageous men in Congress, and I would not want to indicate that he was ever influenced by any selfish motives. If he has none of these institutions in his district, then I do not want this remark to apply to him.

If this bill and conference report simply made it impossible to ship in interstate commerce any prison-made goods, that would be one thing. However, this bill does contain exceptions. All farm products and farm commodities are excepted. That, of course, includes the products in processing plants, like canning factories, cheese factories, and the like. This bill also does except farm machinery parts. It also permits the shipment of all manufactured commodities from Federal prisons to any part of the United States, or its possessions, to be used by the Federal Government anywhere in this territory. Just why should a Federal prison in Georgia be permitted to send convict-made goods from Georgia in interstate commerce to New York, there to be used by the Government, and thus replace goods manufactured by free labor? On the other hand, this bill would make it impossible for the State prison in Michigan to sell to the State of Ohio, or to the farmers in Ohio—an adjoining State—binder twine to be used either by the State or by the farmer. Under the Cooper-Hawes Act that decision is left to Ohio. This bill brings more control from Washington.

Time will not permit further discussion. I fully realize that this conference report is going to be adopted. However, I shall offer a motion to recommit this bill to the conference committee. If this is done, the conference committee will be instructed to proceed further in the consideration of this whole matter. Free labor can then insist that all exemptions be taken out of the bill and that all industry be given an equal break. On the other hand, these States, where prison industries have been established for many years, and which are operating satisfactorily under the Cooper-Hawes law and without particular injustice to any manufacturer or to free labor, can be given an opportunity to present their case more fully. Remember, no hearings were held on this bill. This is not an emergency matter. There is no excuse for any hasty action, because the bill by its very terms does not take effect for 1 year from the time it is enacted. Why, therefore, should we not recommit the bill and give this important matter the consideration to which it is entitled? Any other course works a grave injustice.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, for years industry, labor organizations, and State officials could not agree on a general policy which would provide for the employment of convict labor. Competition between free labor and convict labor continued on the increase. Then came the contract system in several States, resulting in scandal after scandal. Finally the Congress decided to step in, so far as interstate transportation of convict-made goods was concerned. A resolution was passed by this House creating a special committee to investigate the subject, especially in reference to the employment of convicts in Federal penitentiaries. This committee was headed by a former Member of the House, Mr. Cooper, of Ohio; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who took his seat a moment ago, was one of the members. As the result of that investigation, Federal Prison Industries, Inc., was provided for. Since that time Federal prisoners have been engaged in diversified industries. The objective was to spread the work into various occupations, so that as far as it was possible competition with free labor would be held at the minimum. Everyone agreed some provisions must be made for the employment of convicts, especially the long-term convicts. That has been a remarkable success.

Attention was then turned to the States, and finally the Hawes-Cooper Act was passed. It was, we all admit, impossible to put that act into immediate effect, and 5 years was provided to enable the States to meet its provisions. The right to ship prison-made goods to States that did not prohibit the sale of convict-made goods was one of its provisions.

I do not feel that my own State has passed proper laws; but regardless of that situation, I am in favor of this legislation. I say to my State do as you should do and reduce to the minimum competition with free labor.

If we can provide for diversified industries, manufacturing, say, what is needed for State institutions, the problem will be met.

Aside from that, we should always bear in mind the future of the convict. What good will it do to teach a convict a trade if he cannot secure employment when he leaves the institution? In connection with binder twine, penitentiaries have so crippled the industry that there is a surplus of trained men and women and no place for the convict to go to look for work when he is released. If men are not trained in some occupation where they can get work, then there is danger that they will soon be back in the penitentiary.

As I said, there was a general agreement that within 5 years the States would by law or rules and regulations meet the requirements of the Hawes-Cooper Act. It now becomes our duty to see that this agreement is kept. Why, if you exempt binder twine and farm machinery, then every State that wants to disregard the law will soon be found to be engaged in making twine and machinery. No one will deny that. What will become of this industry and the employees?

Mr. Speaker, I hope the conference report will be approved and that the agreement made between the States, industry, and labor will be lived up to.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has taken such an active interest in this legislation.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman know that the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. are solemnly back of this?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do know, and I also know the great majority of the States and industry favor this bill. Further, I took an active interest in passing the original bill, and I want to do what I can to see that the agreement is carried out. Therefore, I support the conference report. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those who favors competition for private labor with convict labor, and when I speak against this conference report I speak as a friend of free labor in this country. Those who are advocating the adoption of this report, when it comes down to the final analysis, may find they are not the real friends of labor for reasons which I will point out.

There are eight States engaged in the manufacture of binder twine, and one State in manufacturing farm machinery and binder twine. If this report is enacted into law the first thing that will happen will be that other States not now engaged in the manufacture of binder twine in their prisons—and should they need binder twine in the respective States—will become so engaged because the machinery is not expensive to set up.

In the second place, if the cordage companies engaged in the manufacture of binder twine secure a real monopoly on it in this country they are going to boost the price. When they boost the price they are going to increase the imports into the United States which have run approximately 75,000,000 pounds a year. The main complaint, coming from the lips of the representatives of the cordage interests, was that their trouble was not from competition with the prisons but from competition with cheap foreign labor that is manufacturing binder twine and sending it into this country. Foreign-made binder twine is sold in the State of Minnesota, yet the prison in the State of Minnesota produces binder twine. The foreign binder twine is sold cheaper than the binder twine manufactured in the State prison.

Let me call attention to another thing. This bill exempts farm commodities.

What are they? Farm commodities take in everything that is produced from the soil, whether it is sold in its natural state or as a processed product. This bill encourages the sale and manufacture, by prison labor, of cotton and cotton goods, after the cotton has been processed, or tobacco or processed tobacco, or vegetables or canned goods, cattle or packing-house products, hogs or hog products, wheat and flour, and I could go down the line and take in dairy products or any other farm commodity, whether in its natural or processed state. So you are encouraging all prisons in the United States to go into the production of farm products for interstate transportation without any restriction whatever. That is what is going to happen, and you will then find hundreds of thousands of laboring men who are now engaged in free enterprise suffering from the competition you are now seeking to prevent by action on this conference report.

I call this to your attention because I feel that after all the bill came out of the committee without due consideration. It would be far better for us in the interest of free labor in this country to recommit the conference report, send the bill back to the committee, and give it further study so that we may really protect labor in this country rather than create something here that may work a jeopardy upon the whole future of labor in the United States.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. Since the phrase "farm commodities" is not defined in the bill, is it not possible that it might be defined in the courts to include anything manufactured for use on the farm as well as produced on the farm?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They could not do otherwise, because "agricultural commodities" takes in every farm commodity. If it is processed in a prison it would still be an agricultural commodity and exempt from the operation of this bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. Is it not a fact that under its provisions this bill will not take effect for 1 year after it is signed by the President, so that if this conference report is voted down we can in January consider this subject anew and act intelligently and without any question as to whether or not we are doing violence to our agreement?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. That is what should be done in the interest of American labor. I hope, therefore, that this conference report will be returned to the committee. Let the committee hold hearings on the subject, and then get a real piece of legislation for the benefit of American labor. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time the House has really looked squarely at this Minnesota amendment. My dear friends from Minnesota prate about their love for free labor in general, but they jump over and argue in favor of conscript prison labor for their State. That is an example of the famous "Minnesota shift." [Laughter.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I refuse to yield.

Our only chance to make a real step toward eliminating convict labor at this session is to vote for this conference report. If we vote it down, you know it will never come out again this year.

I know of an instance of a small farm-implement factory, not in my own district but in Ohio, that employs 400 men, that has lost half of its business in 2 Western States because of Minnesota prison-labor competition. The prison, with no taxes to pay and with power to pirate patents, may eventually run this plant out of business. We have gone far in the past few days toward creating a situation where we may have conscript labor in this country. Let us not take a step here that, in order to permit prison labor to be employed, will throw free labor into unemployment. That is the proposal that is made when you try in any way to prevent this conference report from going through today.

I wish the bill were more sweeping than it is, but this is the best the conferees can secure, and it at least is a step in the right direction, the direction of protecting free American labor against the men who work in prisons. I urge that this House support its conferees, who have gone into this matter thoroughly, and support free American labor and private industry. This is the first and last chance the House will have to look squarely into the implications of this so-called Minnesota amendment, which would permit the manufacturing of machinery by prisoners in competition with free American workmen. This bill gives a fair outlet for prison labor; all States and their subdivisions may buy such products. Let us save the private free market for private free labor and not condemn free Americans to the "idle house." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, one of the biggest problems we have in America is how to take care of the prison labor and what to do with the men. The ordinary State has about one in a thousand in the penitentiary or in some kind of incarceration. If a State has a population of 5,000,000 you will have 5,000 in prison, and these men are constantly going in and going out in large numbers. The ordinary prison sentence of 2 years means 10 months' incarceration. Under the ordinary parole now practiced in practically all States those prisoners walk out into society. That crowd is large going in and going out. Free labor, as you say, or organized labor, I think is making a great mistake in not helping form some kind of a plan to take care of these poor devils who go to the penitentiary, stay there a few months, and then have to try to make their way back into society.

I am going to vote against this conference report. I am for free labor and I am for organized labor, but there is certainly a real problem that must be solved by the States. I understand the importance of noncompetitive prison labor. As Governor of the State of Oregon I went a long, long way to establish the Oregon long-fiber-flax industry with prison labor. I tried to get hold of an industry which had no competition in the United States. We import most of our fiber flax from Belgium, Russia, and the European countries. This bill would destroy that unique industry and ruin the flax farmers for the benefit, not of labor, but of monopolies.

In the penitentiaries they should raise everything they can raise for their own use, and then they should be allowed to manufacture products and send them to other public institutions in the State, like insane asylums. The number of insane is about three times the number of those in penitentiaries. It will run about that figure throughout the United States. All the clothing and shoes and any other things that are consumed by the insane and those confined for feeble-mindedness should be made in the prisons. The number of feeble-minded, that is, those who cannot take care of themselves, runs in the States a little more than those in the penitentiaries and about half of those in the insane asylums. If all the feeble-minded were in there we would not have institutions enough to hold them [laughter] but, really, there is a great problem here, and this conference report ought not to be adopted. Organized labor ought to get together with a Governor's conference and work out a plan by which, if one State is making shoes, they can sell or trade them with other States for their prison-made goods.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. Is it not the binder twine and machinery trust that is against this Minnesota amendment?

Mr. PIERCE. I have heard so, and I think it is true. I do think the conference report ought to be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, as the Member from Minnesota who offered the amendment to exempt farm machinery and binder twine, which was adopted by the House, naturally I am opposed to this conference report which strikes out my amendment.

You have heard the question of the ethics of this thing discussed very ably by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. I am not going to touch on that although I consider it important, but I do want to mention two aspects of this thing which have not been mentioned so far in the course of this debate. One of them is this: If you are going to say to the States that they cannot sell or manufacture and sell their products in interstate commerce, then are you not destroying another part of States' rights which we have so jealously guarded during the 150 years of this Nation's existence? If you do this, how far is it to the next step where, as suggested by my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] when the States set up their own plants to manufacture machinery and binder twine, you are going to say to them, "You cannot ship that outside the State, notwithstanding the fact it is manufactured by free labor, as you say." As long as we have the excellent Hawes-Cooper Act which is working so well and which gives each State the right to decide for itself whether it wants its people to patronize prison industry, I can see no need for a change.

The second point I want to make is that this is a double crack at the farmers. Of course, they are unorganized in this fight, and they have no "well oiled" lobby here in Washington to protect their interests, and I say it is a double crack at them because you are going to specifically exempt, under this conference report, agricultural products or commodities, therefore making competition by the prisons for the free farmers who have not yet gotten themselves into jail; and in addition to that, you are going to force off the market and take away the protection for our farmers, especially in the Northwestern States, the protection which they now have against the Machinery Trust and the Cordage and Twine Trust. I understand at one time farmers in the Northwest were forced to pay 20 to 25 cents a pound for their binder twine whereas, today, because we set up these plants to protect our farmers, they are getting it for between 7 and 8 cents a pound, and I understand that the difference between our excellent binders and reapers, mowers, cultivators and rakes made in our prison factory at Stillwater, in my district, runs approximately $40 on the more expensive machines as compared to the ones sold by the Implement Trust. You are taking a double crack at the farmers when you remove that check or that governor on prices, and you will find not only will they not get the benefit of this saving as now which has amounted to millions of dollars throughout the Northwest States during the past few years, but you are going to see that the prices skyrocket upward on all these things because there is no check; and in the name of the farmers of the Northwest I beg of you to think twice before you vote to adopt this conference report. It should be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN].

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, certainly no one would accuse me of ever being opposed to labor. I know that my first election to the State legislature was at the insistence of labor and my election here to the Congress was due to the insistence and with the support of labor. They were the ones, organized labor, that got me here and I have never deserted them. Organized labor that understands the farmers' problems does not want the binder-twine manufacture eliminated, because they know that 20 years ago when we first started the fight against the monopoly of the Cordage Trust and the monopoly of farm machinery, the farmer was the goat, and the farmer will be the goat if this is eliminated, because 20 years ago when prices were lower than they are today, materials as well as labor prices, the farmer paid from 20 cents to 25 cents a pound for binder twine, and I bought lots of it because I have been on the farm all my life. In those same years, and during the World War, you will recall that we bought our binders for $115 to $125. Today those same binders cost $225 and $240. Is there anyone that will hold that labor is getting more today than they did during the war? Is there anyone today who will contend that materials that go into these farm machines cost more today than they did during the World War? It is simply because of the most vicious and best-organized trust, the Farm Machinery and the Cordage Trust, that we have been denied exemption for binder twine, and they are back of this thing. We do not want any exemption other than that. I am not in favor of manufacturing and shipping in interstate commerce all kinds of products, but the farmer is unorganized and the farmer is the one that is the goat, and nobody else is going to benefit by it except the Cordage and Farm Machinery Trust. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to ask the chairman a question. Under the language of some of the bills that we have which deal with sales in interstate commerce and the application of legislation to interstate commerce, there have been rulings that where sales were made in intrastate commerce that were in competition with sales in interstate commerce, the activity came under the ban of the restriction. I want to ask the gentleman if, under the language adopted by the conference report, this legislation will have any bearing whatever upon the selling of prison-made binder twine within a State.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does the gentleman mean in the State of production?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In the State of production.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think so; no.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back one-half minute.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I wish first to answer the argument of the gentleman from Kansas, Judge GUYER, in regard to the production of binder twine in the prisons of Kansas. This bill will not affect in the least bit the ability of prisons to make products and sell them in their own State. Minnesota can make farm implements and sell them in their own State if this conference report is adopted. Any State can make their own products for consumption in their own State. If this conference report is adopted it will stop the sale in interstate commerce of farm implements.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Ohio. No, I am sorry. I do not have time. The farm-implement industry is an old industry. Many of the patents that were granted to farm-implement companies have expired. Therefore, there is reason for the steady expansion of the production of farm implements in prisons. Prisons are not curtailed in many instances by patent rights of private manufacturers. As a matter of fact, the Minnesota prisons go into territory operated by competitive private manufacturers with a product so much like the products of one private manufacturer. The only difference in them is the paint and the color of the product.

Prison labor cannot be fair competition for private labor. One cannot say "I am a friend of free labor," and then say "I am against this conference report so that a prison can make these particular things." We must either protect free labor or we are not being true to that ideal of competition.

The farmers in my State will not gain any advantage if prison-made farm implements are allowed to be shipped in interstate commerce. The State statutes prohibit such sale in Ohio. If Minnesota prisons put four or five hundred people out of work in my State and cause private factories to close down, four or five hundred more men will go on relief, and the farmers in my State will have to help pay the burden of keeping them on relief. In Ohio, rejection of this conference report is a blow to free labor as against prison labor and a blow to the farmer who will have to pay for relief of the unemployed, who have been displaced by prison labor. In addition they pay a higher price for the farm implements caused by the slowing down of production of private plants whose markets are displaced by prison-made goods.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I am for free labor. This bill does not protect free labor, provided it is farm labor. Under this bill prisons can make and produce all of the agricultural commodities they wish to produce. They can produce canned goods—tomatoes, corn, cotton, flax, hogs, beeves, bacon, lard, meat, potatoes, and every other farm commodity that they want to, and they can then sell in interstate commerce everyone and all of these things. The free labor of the farmer is not protected. Why do you allow agricultural commodities to be produced on the prison farm, and sold from them, and then provide in the same bill that everything that the farmer buys shall not be protected?

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. No. I only have 1 minute.

It was not long ago that a binder would cost a farmer about $120. Now it costs him $350. Why do you not protect farm free labor as well as other free labor? You boys who say "I am so interested in protecting farm free people," all right, let us protect them.

Here as elsewhere in our legislation we forget the interests and rights of farm people. I am not speaking against free labor. All of my public life I have been voting in favor of labor. Many years ago in the State Senate of Iowa I voted for bills which would protect free labor against prison labor. I want to do the same thing here now today, but I want to include free farm labor as well as other free labor. Do not discriminate against the farmer as this report now does. Let us recommit it to the committee and cut out the restrictions against farmers and provide for freedom to their labor as well as freedom to all other labor. And when this is done let us all vote in favor of farm labor and factory labor and of every other kind of labor. I will do so if given the opportunity. I am not opposing the bill but am opposing unjust discrimination against country people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, there is no State in the Union that has gone further to protect free labor from prison-labor competition than the State of Wisconsin. When we established our twine plant in that State in 1913 we had the cooperation of many labor members in that farmer-controlled legislature, because we wanted to get away from the old contract-labor system which was then in vogue in the State penal institutions.

This bill not only attacks the interests of the farmers, particularly of my district, but it also is not a labor bill, because it provides that it shall not apply to commodities manufactured in the District of Columbia penal or correctional institutions for use of the Federal Government, or to commodities manufactured in any State penal or correctional institution for the use of any other State or subdivision thereof. Under this particular bill the Federal and District institutions could set up shoe factories, blanket factories, and similar industries and sell the products to all State and county institutions in the United States. Call that a bill in the interest of free labor? [Applause.]

On the contrary, it opens the field for many new products which now are not made in any penal institution. Furthermore it will permit prison farms to produce and process their own commodities and sell on the open market in competition with the free labor of both farms and industries.

The measure has been carefully drawn to permit interstate and foreign commerce in prison-grown cotton, for instance. Such prison farms in Southern States are now producing cotton, selling it in the open market, and are receiving the full benefit of the A. A. A., soil conservation, and parity payments. The southern prisons under this measure may install canneries and sell canned goods in competition with northern farmers and the free labor of our canneries in the Northwest. Proclaiming the measure as a protection to free labor, the lobbyists of the special interests which are backing this bill have been particularly careful of the interests of the cotton-growing States which do not have twine plants in their prisons.

The twine plants in the Wisconsin and Minnesota prisons were established years ago, when the makers of binder twine combined to maintain prices at levels nearly double those of the present. They were intended to relieve farmers from extortionate charges for a farm necessity. In that way they have saved the farmers of the two States millions of dollars. The plant in the Minnesota prison manufacturing farm machinery was established for a similar purpose, and it has been successful also.

This is a bill to add to the profits of the cordage trust at the expense of the farmers and the laboring men as well. As I have explained, it will open new competition to labor in private industry far in excess of any alleged competition now coming from the prison labor of only eight States which have twine industries.

It is a bad bill and the conference report should be overwhelmingly voted down.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSEN].

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, in the short 1 minute I have allotted to me, as a Member of Congress who has had much practical farming experience, I want to say to you Members of the House that if you desire to place the equivalent of a $10 tax on every quarter section of farm land in the United States, then vote for this conference report. If you vote for this conference report which is in the interests of the farm machinery monopoly and Binder Twine Trust, then stop talking about being helpful to those who are trying to make their living on the farms of this Nation.

Furthermore, my record here in the House shows that I have always been friendly to labor and this bill is manifestly unfair, not only to the farmer, but to farm labor. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, for a long time, of course, there has been conflict between those interested in the rehabilitation of persons incarcerated in penitentiaries and similar institutions, and those interested in protecting free labor against the competition of the people incarcerated in these institutions. A compromise has been worked out and generally agreed to that persons incarcerated in these penal institutions, that is, the institutions, may produce by prison labor and sell to these agencies of government of which they are a part or to which they are related those things which are used by these governments or such agencies. Anything that is produced in a State by the prison labor of that State may be sold in the State. Of course, this bill is in harmony with that general agreement. This bill does not attempt to touch that.

Under the bill, not the conference report, you remember that a State that produced more of the things in its prisons than the State used or than the State could consume within the State could swap its surplus with another State similarly situated. What we have done is to prohibit, with a few exceptions, the transportation in interstate commerce of prison-made goods.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not for the moment.

If you do permit prison-made goods to enter the general field of commerce, you create a condition under which private manufacturers of those commodities have to compete with prison-made goods, and free labor in general commerce must compete with convict labor.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not for the moment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The question will take only half a second.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not until I complete my statement.
